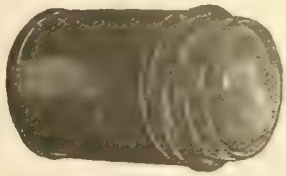
A clear picture

is as essential as a good scenario. Because the basic product is right the clearest pictures are on Eastman Film. Identifiable by the stencil mark in the margin.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,
ROCHESTER, N. Y.



Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so why [illegible] use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is [illegible] certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

UNITED STATES WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIFIES
GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stereo Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,
THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC

PERFECT PROJECTION

is the Keynote of Success. Many beautiful Theatres in the most advantageous locations, do not make the maximum profit, or fail entirely, because of poor projection.

DON'T DECEIVE YOURSELF. It is poor economy to try to get along with an old machine, when you should have a new one, and can get it on easy terms.

LET US SHOW YOU how you can get a new machine and make it pay for itself by increased receipts.

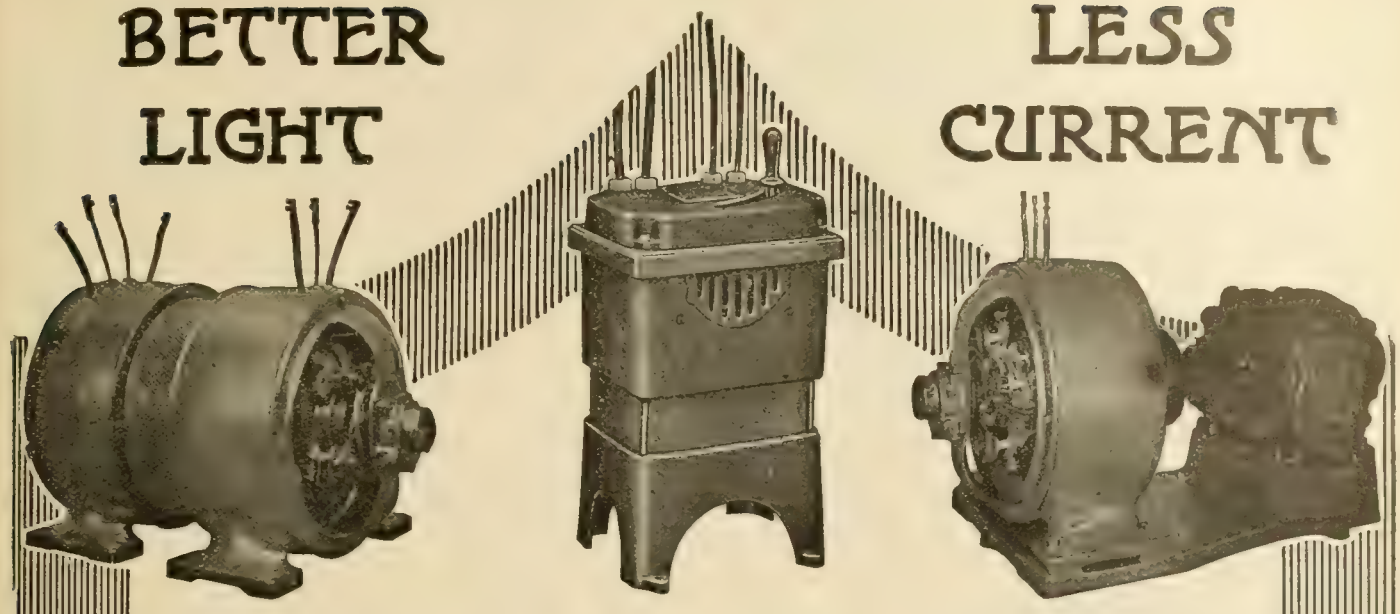
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.

The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

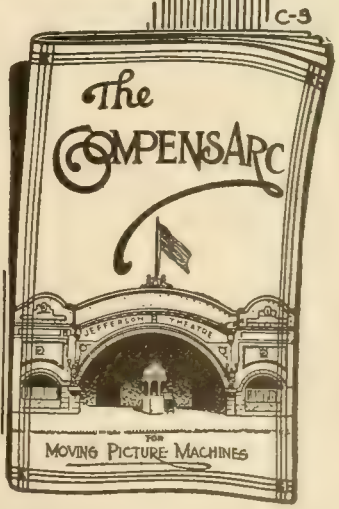
The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.



Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

SOMETHING
EVERY EXHIBITOR SHOULD KNOW ABOUT

MINA FILMS

THE fact that the producers of MinA Films have found it feasible to establish a second company after the new MinA Films were shown is a powerful recommendation for the merit of these one reel comedies.

This means simply that MinA Films made good with a vengeance. Don't you want such pictures?

(Patent Applied For)

Designed to meet a long felt want in furnishing theatres an attractive time-piece that could be seen at all times by the entire audience. The clock, although part of a machine which occupies less than two cubic feet of space, reflects the time on an aluminum screen with a dial from three to six feet in diameter. In addition, there are eight ads, each ad appearing for a period of three minutes and changing automatically.

The most dignified and high class clock that has ever been offered.

The scenic effect of the invisible clock, reflecting the time on the screen is a decided and distinct attraction and greatly adds to the theatre's interior equipment. WRITE OR WIRE AT ONCE FOR FULL PARTICULARS.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES

The Importance of Press Notices to the Exhibitor

"THE MATING" IS WONDER PLAY OF THE SCREEN

Bessie Barriscale Eclipses Former Triumphs In New Mutual Masterpicture.

LOVE AND STRENGTH DRAMA.

Thomas H. Ince's Latest Production Vital In Theme and Action.

Bessie Barriscale, whose triumphs in Mutual Masterpictures produced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation are proving her one of the greatest emotional actresses of the screen, is the star of "The Mating," a five-part Mutual Masterpicture produced under the personal supervision of Director Thomas H. Ince. Miss Barriscale eclipses her former successes.

C. Gardiner Sullivan, author of "The Reward" and several other of these feature photo dramas de luxe, in "The Mating" deviates somewhat from the themes of his other great plays, but in true Sullivan style furnishes a story which is unique in plot and dramatic effect.

As Doris Willard, Miss Barriscale has been furnished with a vehicle different in many ways from all her previous efforts, the role, however, affording her a splendid opportunity of demonstrating her many emotional talents. In casting Miss Barriscale for the title role of "The Mating" Director Ince surrounded her with an exceptionally strong cast, headed by Lewis J. Cody, erstwhile Broadway star, in the role of "Bullet Dick" Ames, college hero and gridiron star. Enid Markey, who has appeared in several Mutual Masterpictures, portrays Daisy Arnold, whose petty jealousies bring almost endless woe to the poor village girl, while Margaret Thompson as Eleanor Ames, Walter Whitman as the Rev. Willard and Ida Lewis as Miss Fitch complete the cast.

"The Mating" is founded on the ambitions of Doris, simple country girl and daughter of the village parson, who craves a college education. Doris, unfamiliar with the life of the great world as represented beyond the boundaries of the village in which she was born and has spent all the eighteen years of her life, after many sacrifices on the part of her father, finally departs for Hamlin, where the great institution of learning is located. On her arrival at the college her antiquated raiment and typical village manners make her the object of the students' ridicule.

Doris quickly realizes that she "doesn't belong," but determines to make another try before returning home. The day of the great game between Yale and Harvard, the culmination of the football season, finds the students in a hilarious state of mind over the events of the afternoon, which they are to attend in a body. Ignoring Doris, they depart, leaving the poor girl alone with her tears in her room. Before her lies the morning paper. On the front page, like a gladiator of old, is a picture of "Bullet Dick" Ames, whom the experts concede the greatest halfback the game has ever known. On him rests the honor of winning the great game of the afternoon.

Bessie Barriscale In "The Mating."
Five-Act Mutual Masterpiece Made by New York Motion Picture Corporation

As expected, "Bullet Dick" is the big factor in the victory, which brings the season's championship to his teammates. At the great reception tendered the victors that evening "Bullet Dick" is the cynosure of all eyes except those of unhappy Doris, who has not been invited. Piqued by the snubs of the students and particularly those of Daisy Arnold, the prettiest girl in the college and reputed fiancee of "Bullet Dick," the country girl seeks revenge and writes a letter to herself, purporting to come from the gridiron star, in which he pledges his love.

Later she purposely drops the letter at the feet of a group of girls, and word that "Bullet Dick" is in love with Doris spreads throughout the institution. All but Daisy believe the letter true, and to show that "Bullet Dick" is unknown to Doris Daisy invites the hero and his sister to the college hop.

Home for the holidays, Ames by chance comes across the letter forwarded his sister by Daisy. Certain that there is some ulterior motive behind the writing of the epistle, Ames determines to see the thing through and agrees to accompany his sister to the hop. Meanwhile at the college great preparations are under way for the coming of Ames. The trap for the purpose of exposing Doris had been set.

On his arrival Ames sees Doris for the first time. He is certain that she is the one picked for humiliation. Struck by her beauty and innocence, he is attracted to her instantly and when brought before her puts forth his hand and exclaims, "Why, my dear little friend!" Then, turning to the surprised students and facing Daisy, he announces, much to the discomfiture of Doris, that he had known her for many months. Love is mutual, and, following a brief courtship, they are married.

Profitable newspaper publicity for the theatre is largely a question of doing the right thing at the right time, in the right way.

Your local newspapers will undoubtedly be glad to get—and print—the right kind of motion picture reading matter—provided it is NEWS, and they will be glad to use scenes from plays, or portraits of star players, if they measure up to the NEWS standard.

NEWS is not a matter of individual opinion, but of judgment based upon experience. The press bulletins issued by the Mutual are prepared by a force of seasoned newspaper men who know instinctively what is NEWS and what is not NEWS. Hence it follows that the newspapers advertising Mutual Masterpictures express their appreciation of the value of our bulletins by using them freely in their columns. Moreover, the newspapers know that their readers insist upon plenty of motion picture NEWS, and therefore realize the importance of catering to this demand.

Let us tell you how we get the NEWS to our exhibitors' newspapers—while it is NEWS. Write today.

Edwin Thanhouser Presents

"Outcasts of Society"

With MIGNON ANDERSON

It's a picture of the lives of those who stray. Mind you, not a gushy, wishy-washy "social-reform" picture, but a virile, heart-filled and brain-bound work with an impelling story that goes over; yes, over and right clean into your soul. "Acting"—you wouldn't call it that; it's a chapter of life itself.

Released in two reels. Tuesday, July 27th with Morris Foster in a thunder-bolt surprise character, and Helen Badgley (The Kidlet) as her ever-lovable self, and Ethyle Cooke in a role of great dramatic tensity. It begins with mystery and when it's solved it's done so suddenly that you find yourself forgetting that it's only a picture.

Released in one reel, Sunday, August 1st

FALSTAFF COMEDY

Edwin Thanhouser Presents

RILEY CHAMBERLAIN & LORRAINE HULING

—in—

"Getting the Gardener's Goat"

The first impression you will get of this comedy is its novelty, because for once it's an old fellow who plays the pranks on a young victim; and you know that's a reversal of form. The most alluring bits of summer setting show off this little gem in all its brilliance; a consistently good offering.

Released in one reel. Friday, July 30th

The UNIVERSAL Presents

Its Sixth Broadway Universal Feature in 4 great acts, featuring the brilliant Broadway star

Harry D. Carey, college graduate, cowboy, street railway superintendent, lawyer, actor, manager, director, athlete, prizefighter, miner, expert swimmer and mining engineer, playwright and movie film star. Only thirty-three and a huge success in every line of activity that has occupied his crowded years.

It is from such an all-around man that the movie fans get their greatest pleasure. An actor with such a virile personality plays with the remarkable reserve force that always "gets over" no matter how restrained may be his methods.

Harry Carey's methods are quiet, but in this great play, "JUST JIM," as in his tremendous success in the spoken drama, "MONTANA," which he played on Broadway for a year and a half, he gets his greatest effects in the quietest manner imaginable. With his suppressed manner and his fire of genius, Harry D. Carey GOES BIG.

Harry D. Carey

IN THAT THRILLING DRAMATIC TRIUMPH

"Just Jim"

"JUST JIM" is Just Ideal. That's all. We might describe the great scene in the Opium Den where Jim renounces his former criminal life. We might tell you of the death-bed scene where Just Jim is entrusted with a strange woman's life secret. We might use words and words and words to tell you of the swift and terrible plunge down a five hundred foot precipice, passengers, horses, coach and all. We might write for you of the sea fight between a smuggler's schooner and a U. S. Revenue cutter. We might draw a word picture of the punch that Harry D. Carey puts into every scene in that marvelously quiet, forceful way of his. But—

It would leave you cold. BUT SEE THE PICTURE. If you don't want to play it for a return it's because you are shy on the red corpuscles. If you have been in the picture business since the Film Year I—if you think you have seen all there is to be seen on the screen; if you long for the days when pictures were fresh and new to you and furnished you with real gripping, thrilling sensations in every reel—SEE "JUST JIM" and get all the old, pleasurable sensations back again. You'll enjoy it as much as the newest movie fan that comes into your house, and more, because you—y o u—YOU will recognize it as a truly great picture.

Isn't it about time to stop standing first on one foot and then on the other, hesitating about signing up for the big Universal Program and a Great Broadway Star of a Great Broadway Play—a Broadway Universal Feature released on that Regular Universal Program EVERY WEEK? Wire or write your Exchange this instant for full particulars. You can't go wrong. You can beat your competitor to it. NOW WITHIN THE HOUR.

Did you ever stand in the hills and shout and hear the sound reverberate from crag to crag and come booming back in a thousand voices? If you have you know every echo repeats exactly what you say.

There is an echo to every photoplay. The echo will help or hurt you, according to what you show.

A good photoplay will strike the heart of every spectator and reverberate from lip to lip and come back to you in the form of increased crowds and larger box office receipts.

Be sure to have only the best plays and the echo never will fail you. Essanay plays are all standardized. They are all good.

WHAT THE CRITICS SAY OF "The Blindness of Virtue"

"In 'The Blindness of Virtue' produced by Essanay the moral lesson taught is powerful and one that should be productive of great good to parents and to boys and girls. . . . .

"The manner in which the story is told in these pictures carefully avoids all coarseness and there is nothing to offend good taste, or anyone of the most delicate susceptibilities. . . . .

"The photodramatic merit will be acknowledged by all of fair minds."

Moving Picture World.

"'The Blindness of Virtue' is treated delicately from every standpoint. No scene at all injurious to one's finer sensibilities is pictured, although the story is just as comprehensive and just as vital under these existing conditions. . . . .

"As regards photography and scenery nothing remains to be perfected. . . . .

"'The Blindness of Virtue' is truly one of the best stories that has seen the celluloid."

TO THE PUBLIC.

In order to set at rest rumors that the STRAND THEATRE had cancelled its contract for PARAMOUNT SERVICE, and had made arrangements to play other features in the STRAND THEATRE, we wish to announce that we have not cancelled our contract for PARAMOUNT PICTURES, nor have we any intention so to do.

The PARAMOUNT PICTURES have been in our house for nearly one year and have proven entirely satisfactory, and we feel that PARAMOUNT FEATURES have met with the approval of our patrons.

The following PARAMOUNT FEATURES will be shown at THE STRAND for the next six weeks:

Paramount Program

Paramount Foundation

The officers and directors of Paramount are all men of wide experience in the film industry. Each of them was a prosperous exchange man with extensive operations and substantial capital at the time of coming into Paramount. This means that the Paramount is directed by men who have for some years been successfully meeting the problems that every exhibitor must meet. They know the business.

The producers include the two companies in the industry who first made multiple reel features of quality—they are still in the lead. Refer to adjoining page and note list of unexcelled plays with famous stars already arranged for.

These producers are making films not only clean and of high quality, but with a story to tell—a story that makes strong appeal to the public.

Last, but fully as important, is the Paramount policy and system which afford the producer and exhibitor valuable support.

The most convincing proof of the superiority and earning efficiency of Paramount pictures and service is the fact that the finest and largest theatres throughout the United States are using them. The Strand Theatre of New York recently issued a public statement, part of which said:

"The Strand Theatre with Paramount pictures has been an artistic and financial success. We shall therefore continue to give the Strand patrons these features."

Mr. Stanley V. Mastbaum, controlling a large chain of the finest theatres in Pennsylvania, headed by the Stanley in Philadelphia, says:

"Paramount Service has given perfect satisfaction in all of the theatres using it during the past year. I have read over the releases for the coming Fall quarter, and these splendid plays, together with the Paramount franchise plan, makes the Paramount Service invaluable to any theatre in the United States."

"JUNE FRIDAY"

To the great feature photodramas which Lee Arthur, the noted dramatist, has been writing for Edison exclusively comes "June Friday," easily the best he has done. Masterfully has he contrived, with the genius of the writer of "David Warfield," to range over every shade of emotion, and Gertrude McCoy fulfills with sympathetic, convincing power the dramatic demands of this play, powerful because hewn so close to drab life itself. As wife of the drug fiend, who drowns herself, girl of the country pitifully enmeshed, with the painful past bedraggling her happy wifehood, on to the murder, Miss McCoy picturizes all the screen is capable of. Duncan McRae as the drug fiend, Robert Conness as the husband, Augustus Phillips as the "Villain." Direction Duncan McRae. Friday, August 6th.

Raymond McKee and Julian Reed in the one-act farce comedy, "Not Much Force." Direction Will Louis. Wednesday, August 4th.

Facts and Comments

"LADY-POLICEMEN" are censoring magazines in Pittsburgh. This comes of the growth of censorship in the keystone state. Of course the "lady-policemen" do not really "censor," because they do not examine the contents of the magazines before publication, while censorship is essentially a previous restraint. Just the same, it is the spirit of Breitingerism, which means mischievous meddling by over-zealous, ignorant and narrow-minded "reformers."

TWO theatrical magnates have broken into print registering vociferous protests against any of their present or prospective stars metamorphosing themselves into films. The gentlemen are late; late enough in fact to remind one of fossils. They must have missed the crucial moment which marked the equality of the screen and the stage. Better look back a chapter or two and keep abreast of the times.

SOME producers, we are sorry to say, refuse to believe that the plain people of the land who patronze the motion picture theaters are capable of distinguishing between wit and vulgarity. In view of the correspondence before us we hasten to assure them that the moving picture patrons are well able to make that distinction and know how to express themselves on the subject. The garbage can variety of "comic" is a disgrace to the screen and a distinct handicap to the exhibitor. Let the exhibitor submit his protest to the unbelieving producer.

AT THIS writing it looks as if but half a dozen of the seven hundred amendments offered to the state constitutional convention will be adopted for submission to the people at the next general election. The author of our amendment demanding the freedom of the screen says he will force the convention to act on it by moving to have it reported out of the committee which now holds it in hostile embrace. The consensus of opinion regarding the work of the convention is far from flattering. The moving picture men we trust will help in rejecting the work of the convention at the polls.

IN ONE of the leading motion picture theaters of this city slides are being shown "between the acts." Slides of current events look somewhat out of place where kinematographic records of the news are exhibited, but this is not our objection to the slides. The deplorable fact is that these slides displayed the pictures of two convicted murderers, one just out of jail and the other recently committed to jail. Perhaps the yellow press is primarily responsible for this disgraceful adulation of murderers. The newspapers have created the interest in these loathsome subjects and now they "must keep it up." We hope that no reputable producers will follow in the footsteps of the yellow sheets and help to make heroes of these men.

FROM every part of the country THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD receives requests for its censorship pamphlet and its symposium on the Sunday question. Many a request is accompanied by words of praise and appreciation for the service we are trying to render to the industry. The campaign for a liberal Sunday and for freedom of the screen can only be won by constant agitation and eternal vigilance. Every state branch of the league ought to supply itself with the materials which THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is offering without charge.

OUR mail brings increasing complaints from exhibitors who have done business with irresponsible film concerns with the usual result of disappointment in bookings, bad condition of reels, overcharges, etc., etc. With so many big and well-established companies anxious to serve the exhibitor he has really no one but himself to blame if he listens to the solicitations of unreliable and irresponsible concerns.

A VERY complete account of the National Convention of the Exhibitors League will be found in the news columns of this issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD. The convention appears to have been successful, meeting the expectation of the leading spirits of the league. The most important note struck at the proceedings of the convention was the general recognition of the need of a stronger organization. Now is the time to strengthen all the state branches.

A Comedy to Those Who Think

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

HORACE WALPOLE came near dividing the human race into two classes when he said that the whole world is a comedy to those who think, a tragedy to those who feel. Writers and philosophers who favor a supremacy of the spirit over the flesh have appeared at all periods of recorded history; among the earliest settlers of New England who carried their doctrine of restraint into the gloomy pretenses of Puritanism, among certain intellectual ascetics of to-day. Out of the necessity of restraint has often arisen an idea that feeling should be totally repressed whereas, far from being moderation, repression of feeling may easily be immoderation. It is true that the struggle for existence is often a bitter one, but it is through feeling that bitterness is made known, and through feeling it may be assuaged by those who unite to intellection broad sympathies and tender compassion.

Poor people, whether their condition be due to native inability or to the force of circumstances, become so absorbed in their struggle that their line of thought is cramped by their individual and immediate requirements, but their minds may be reached and powerfully affected through feeling as stirred by the screen story, especially when it appeals to that sense of injustice which ever rankles in the proud hearts of the unfortunate. Thinking men of big hearts realize that injustice to the poor is less due to modern intention than to the artificiality of forms and conventions we have inherited from the ages which we are slow to replace with improvement because such changes must be inaugurated for the greatest happiness of the greatest number irrespective of section and class.

One effective way to deal with those inherited artificialities of custom which are responsible for injustice to men who deserve better treatment is to hold up to ridicule the heartless stupidity of privilege, affected standards of living among those who have never had the wolf at the door, hypocrisy of those who attempt to create an impression of superiority, amusing pomposity of servitors appointed to public office, unblushing promises and hollow performances of professional politicians, business management that is fawning to capital and oppressive to honest labor, predatory instinct that thrives on exploiting stolen invention and the idea that a moment of serious attention should be given in religion, politics or society to the utterances of a blatant demagogue.

The screen may never relegate the printed page to secondary consideration, though its appeal is more direct and almost universal, but it bids fair to send the shouter of misinformation to the rear. He bored us when we were little children at Sunday School, this incessant mouther of words, and he is still to be seen on the platform of every general assemblage, waiting for a chance to work his jaws and hear his own voice, not that he has anything of particular interest or value to communicate, but to the contrary. He is howling himself hoarse on the street corners of an evening, the barker of some political side-show; he rises after dinner to make a few remarks and distress our stomachs at a time they are striving to be all things to all edibles. He is bellowing across the ocean for peace, but, if there was enough money in it, he would box the compass and yell enthusiastically for war.

If a highly intelligent being could look us over at this moment from some lofty and comprehensive viewpoint, he might well be amused by our attempts to settle our differences and vindicate our rights in courts of law presided over by politicians and lawyers trained to trickery and noted for their lack of scruple. Only in the temples of justice can a freeborn man be openly insulted and humiliated without possibility of redress; only there is it assumed that he is a liar; only there is his good repute open to attack because he fails to remember where he was and what he did at half-past four in the afternoon several months previous to his appearance in the witness stand. To call a place where the wealthy litigant may wear out the man of limited means, where the opulant criminal may escape punishment for years on one pretext or another, while the penniless one meets with short shrift, a "Temple of Justice"! What a farce!

More offensive than crime itself, often the result of abnormal impulse, occasionally the result of a decadence for which inequities of our judicial system is directly responsible, is that clogging of the machine which results only in obstructing principles of right and in destroying the idea of fair dealing. It is tragic to those who feel and suffer. It is comic that we should even tolerate, to say nothing of support, a system given over to the encouragement of trickery and to the injury of our highest ideals and denominate the institution a Court of Justice. One way to wipe this obnoxious spot from civilization is to expose its hypocrisy, its pompous pretense, its arrogant assumption of privilege. It offers so many ripe themes for ridicule that it may be laughed out of existence.

Civilization in Europe is drooping like a beautiful plant in sore need of nourishment, all because a comparatively small clique of men arrogate to themselves the privilege of adjusting or disorganizing international relations. Inasmuch as the power of forming the fittest and truest judgment in any matter concerning a nation of intelligent people requires a knowledge acquired through experience, there is opportunity for brilliant satire on the question of hereditary wisdom, or on the idea of placing a murderous marauder on a pinnacle of glory, while a mere pickpocket, who incurs some personal risk in taking what does not belong to him, may pass several unhonored years in jail. To kill one man is a crime—to murder a million is to be immortalized in the historical Hall of Fame. It is said of one of the best of modern dramatists that he can not get through a day's work without "ironic laughter and wonderment at the collossal stupidity of the world in which we live." A contribution from him would be appreciated which should laugh despotism to scorn.

While our long-suffering world may be a great comedy to those who think, it might not be a bad idea for them to let us have the benefit of their thoughts, especially for use in motion pictures. Screen stories go to the hearts of the people. Through their pictured sequence of incidents many common illusions may be unmasked. We would greatly enjoy some keen satires on mistaken conceptions of life and of society. Many of us can only get at truth through the process known as disillusionment. We must laugh away the cobwebs in our brains before we can reach a state of being able to recognize the truth when it is placed before our eyes. We are all willing to learn, and whatever is a comedy to those who think, a profound truth enwrapped in satire might prove a most delectable method of disseminating information.

Midsummer Madness

By W. Stephen Bush.

A STRANGE bit of news comes from one of the big cities in the Northwest. The municipality in question in its eagerness to "regulate" motion picture theaters wants to restrict their number, allowing but one theater for a certain percentage of the population. Looks like midsummer madness.

There was a time in the somewhat hoary past when the quantity and the quality of all amusements were regulated by royal edict. The government dictated what people should eat and drink and wear and prescribed the manner and method of their amusements. Of course our Northwestern Solons do not want to go quite that far. No doubt they are sincere enough in their belief that in restricting the number of licenses for motion picture theaters they are furthering the best interests of the community. The press of other cities in the same state has shown great interest in the experiment of this sort of municipal regulation, as well it might.

Motion picture theaters cannot be licensed and regulated like saloons. The best that has ever been said for the saloon was its defence as a necessary evil. The motion picture theater is a civilizing influence. It is quite possible that there may be more moving picture theaters than a given locality can support. The remedy for such a state of affairs is to let the natural laws of supply and demand have free play. The municipality surely has no right to interfere. There may be too many bakeries or even too many churches, but it is not for the state to concern itself about these things. Under a paternal system of government such conditions may exist; in some of the European countries entire industries have been taken over by the state and have been turned into monopolies. Our country and indeed the genius of our institutions and our history are opposed to such measures, which should be fought with all possible zeal.

Aside from sound and solid economic reasons for leaving every lawful business to pursue success as best as it may there is another ground for objecting to licensing motion picture theaters according to the percentage of population. If any political body controls a limited number of licenses two things will result: In the first place, such licenses will command a big premium and in the second place it is altogether likely that they will be bestowed as political rewards. In other words, there could be no surer way of mixing the picture with politics, to the detriment of both, than a plan of restricting the number of licenses.

Every man who pays a reasonable license and who complies with the building laws ought to have the right to enter the exhibiting profession. If he is incompetent he will pay the penalty of his mistake. It seems strange to us that the press in the city alluded to supports the new policy of regulation on the ground that it will result in better pictures and in a higher morale of the exhibitors. If there is, for example, but one license obtainable for a section of say ten thousand population, the license-holder need fear no competition. What inducement has he to give his patrons the best service? He can feed them on aged "commercials" and still rake in the nickels and dimes, thanks to his good political connections. If the promoters of a lot of "junk" stood back of this scheme it would occasion little surprise to intelligent film men. The vitality of the motion picture does not depend upon political favor. Any step in that direction leads to confusion and most likely to corruption.

An Old Superstition Exploded

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE Medical Times in its issue of July publishes a most interesting symposium on the "Effects of the Moving Picture on the Eyes." This publication is the oldest medical journal in the United States and enjoys the greatest confidence and prestige.

We are very glad to say that the specialists who wrote on this most vital subject all concur in the conclusion that moving pictures are not harmful to normal eyes.

One physician declares that he has "yet to see any organic change in the eye that could be definitely traced to the moving pictures." A distinguished oculist of Chicago discourses most intelligently upon the effect of the motion picture upon the eye and makes suggestions which are well worth studying. He says: "that severe test is put upon the eyes by the unnatural swiftness with which films are sometimes reeled off, making every action abnormally rapid and jerky, converting the actor's walk into a Chinese trot and giving all the participators a sort of St. Vitus dance. * * * The practise of flashing written letters and printed matter on and off the screen with almost lightning celerity puts the greatest strain upon the eyes. The audience in its eagerness to get an intelligent understanding of the action makes a strong effort to read the lines, but in many instances they are given no opportunity to read all of them and are kept on a strain in the strenuous effort to grasp them at a fleeting glance." Here is a paragraph that will excite the interest and let us hope the indignation of my breezy colleague Richardson:

"It is difficult to understand why the operator indulges in this mismanagement of his machine, for the same operator who gives an audience a chance to read only two or three lines out of many often throws a single line on and leaves it on view long enough to be read many times over."

The good doctor does of course not realize that the operator is hardly ever to blame for this state of affairs. No part of a film loses more as it continues in use than the titles. The doctor adds that "such imperfections and exasperations are within the possibility of elimination" and of course every exhibitor will agree with him. If producers or exchanges would agree to furnish additional titles for a nominal cost a long step toward remedying the evil will have been taken.

Here is one doctor from Georgia who has a happy way of commingling common sense and humor and whom we quote with particular satisfaction: "As to the effect of moving pictures upon the eyes," he says, "I have no clinical data and must, therefore, express myself purely from the standpoint of personal observation. The question as to what effect does the frequent observation of moving pictures have upon the eyes is very much like the question as to what effect does the eating of cabbage have upon the digestion. The answer, of course, is that it affects different individuals in different ways. The same is true of the effect of moving pictures upon the eyes. To say that moving pictures are universally harmful to all eyes is certainly not correct, but that they are harmful to certain individuals must be admittedly true. Many people naturally have weak eyes, i.e., they are easily affected by the glare of lights."

The general conclusion of these learned experts is worthy of notice as it puts a stop to the idea so prevalent in the early days of the picture that the screen was injurious to the eyes. One by one the unwarranted prejudices against the screen are being exposed.

San Francisco Convention

Fifth Annual Meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League a Successful Event---Good Attendance by Western Exhibitors---Business Sessions Marked by Harmony and Much Good Work Accomplished---Fred. J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, Pa., Elected President---Important Matters Referred to the Executive Board

Opening Session—Tuesday Morning.

THE Tuesday morning session convened at 10:45 o'clock, the meeting being called to order by M. E. Cory, of San Francisco, second vice-president of the national organization and chairman of the Convention Committee. He introduced Mayor James Rolph, Jr., who stated that it was a privilege to be invited to extend a welcome to San Francisco to the moving picture men of the nation. He commented upon the great number of pictures that had been taken of exposition activities and said he was delighted at the fact that both exhibitors and producers would now have the that both exhibitors and producers would now have the opportunity to witness these rare sights with their own eyes. He expressed a belief that the convention would be of great value to those engaged in the moving picture business and described it as being the most popular in the United States today and one that no one could stop. Without referring directly to the censorship question, in which he takes a keen personal interest, he declared that this was a country where the people ruled and that nothing would be permitted which would interfere with such an elevating business.

Chairman Cory paid the Mayor a glowing tribute and thanked him on behalf of the organization for his presence. He then introduced President Marion S. Pearce, who spoke briefly but feelingly of the spirit of enthusiasm he had found here and declared that if exhibitors elsewhere could be imbued with this spirit it would be greatly to their benefit. He outlined some of the things he hoped would be accomplished at the Convention and expressed the belief that the organization would be placed upon the basis it belonged.

National Treasurer Peter J. Jeup was introduced and spoke briefly. He stated that when people would come three thousand miles to attend a meeting of this kind it showed an interest in the organization and in the business it represents. Fred J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, Pa., made a short talk and was followed by Judge A. P. Tugwell, of Los Angeles. He was followed by H. L. Beach, president of the California State League, who made an interesting address. He said the moving picture theater had taken the place of the saloon as the poor man's clubroom, and in addition had become a family gathering place. The constant change in the ownership of theaters was one of the greatest drawbacks with which the league had to contend, he declared, but he expressed the belief that in spite of this much good was being done to keep the business clean and to secure more adequate profits.

Jacob W. Binder, of the National Board of Censorship, was present and was called upon by Mr. Cory to address the gathering. He prefaced his remarks by the plain statement that he was not a believer in censorship and could not reconcile himself to the idea that a group of a few men should be permitted to dictate to producers or exhibitors. He said that a national board of censorship was not necessary and that the need of censorship of any kind was rapidly disappearing. "The slogan of this organization," he said, "should be 'No Legalized Censorship.'"

Chairman Cory then read a notice from the San Francisco Press Club extending a welcome to all to make use of its downtown quarters and rooms at the Exposition. Among the telegrams read was one from First Vice-President T. P. Finnigan of Dallas, Texas, who expressed his regrets at not being able to be present, and another from A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, wishing a successful gathering. The morning session then adjourned on a motion and the delegates commenced the inspection of the exhibits on an upper floor.

Fred J. Herrington.
Newly-Elected President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Wednesday Morning Session.

There was a good attendance of motion picture men when President Pearce at 10.30 called the convention to order. Mr. Pearce's first action was the appointment as sergeant-at-arms of H. C. Schmidt ("Dynamite") of Palo Alto. The selection seemed to be a popular one. Then followed the naming of committees. L. W. Brophy of Muskogee, Okla.; I. Oppenheimer of San Francisco and S. H. Jones of Altus, Okla., were appointed on the committee of resolutions and grievances. On the committee on constitution and by-laws M. J. Slimm of Cleveland, W. F. Krohn of Berkeley and L. R. Greenfield of San Francisco were named.

Owing to the absence of Secretary Wilson it was decided, following a motion of Judge Tugwell, that the matter of auditing be referred to the incoming executive board. While awaiting the arrival of W. W. Hodkinson, who was scheduled for a long talk, President Pearce announced that the meeting was open for the discussion of any subject that might be on the minds of the delegates.

"Away back in 1893 in the City of Chicago there was a world's fair," said A. P. Tugwell. "In a little obscure corner of the grounds there was a sign 'Moving Pictures.' I believe it indicated perhaps the first public showing in the United States of the motion picture. The projection was on a crude machine. The length of the subject was 120 feet. That was the beginning of this industry. Look at it today, the fifth of all the industries of our country! Is it not something wonderful to contemplate?"

Mr. Tugwell took up the question of censorship. From an article in a morning newspaper under a Pittsburgh date the speaker brought out the fact that already the mania for censoring anything and everything was extending even to the press—that in the Pennsylvania city an attempt was being made to establish an overlordship on the magazines that might be exposed for sale on the news stands. Mr. Tugwell said the danger of censorship lay in the fact that as soon as the politicians might succeed in making it a public institution they immediately would seek to control the positions thereby created.

"Why censor the picture?" asked Mr. Tugwell. "The audiences to which we appeal are the real censors of our pictures. If we put on our screens anything that is objectionable to them we lose their patronage, and we cannot afford to do that. Right there is the censorship that will count, and the only one that will count. No exhibitor can put anything on his screen that is objectionable and be successful in the long run."

Fred J. Herrington of Pennsylvania also spoke on censorship. He referred to the triumphal journey across the country of the Liberty Bell. He spoke of his own state as the cradle of liberty and alluded to its experience in censorship matters. "People realize that without a free press there can be no liberty," he said. "The ones who are howling for censorship are the politicians. They see the opportunities for graft on the one hand and the opportunities afforded by the screen for the exposure of graft on the other."

Mark E. Cory,
Vice-President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

W. A. Cory of the Universal spoke briefly. "The exhibitor does not dare to throw upon his screen anything that is objectionable to his patrons," he said. "We need no official censorship." Mr. Cory praised the national board.

Jacob W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship went upon the platform to greet Mr. Hodkinson and was corralled by President Pearce for a talk. "The matter of censorship is a very real danger," said Mr. Binder. "There are two kinds of censorship. There is the legalized kind, the censorship which is obnoxious to every American citizen. Then, too, there is the co-operative kind. I agree with many that all forms of censorship ought to be done away with—and they will be eventually.

"The manufacturers who are making the clean, high-grade pictures are the ones who are making the enduring pictures. It is because of this fact that we are encouraged to hope that in the next decade, in the next five years possibly, censorship will be unheard of in this country. At this moment, however, you are confronted with a very real peril. In the legislative season just closed censorship bills were introduced in thirteen states. Outside of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

"There is one thing exhibitors should always bear in mind. The manufacturers are not their enemies. It was through the money provided by the manufacturers that I as a representative of the national board was sent into these thirteen states to combat these bills providing for legalized censorship. With the aid of the different exhibitors and of the exhibitors' league we were enabled to stop all of these bills with a single exception. And the governor of Illinois has just vetoed the censorship bill that was passed by the legislature of his state. Censorship indeed is a grave danger. Fortunately, the legislatures of only twelve states will meet next year, but you can bet that in these states in at least 50 per cent., censorship bills will be introduced. I trust that this convention will take concerted action and place this body on record as opposed to legalized censorship in all forms so that next year those who are fighting this evil will have the advantage of this co-operation, so that there may be no question in the minds of legislators as to where the exhibitors themselves stand. I hope you will be successful in building up an organization that will be effective as a factor in fighting censorship.

"Reference has been made to the menace of the politicians on the censorship question. The politicians really are not dangerous. We know how to handle them. We can stand them up in a corner. But there is a second class that really is dangerous, and that class is to be found in every community. It is more dangerous because it is composed of men and women who are sincere—ignorant, it is true—but sincere. It is composed of men and women who cannot be reached through the arguments that are all-powerful with the politicians, but must be reached through appeal to reason. The national board is organizing a propaganda to reach this second class."

Mr. Binder told of the success that had attended the efforts of the board in Iowa, where the State Federation of Women's Clubs had changed its attitude from one of antagonism to pictures to the adoption of resolutions opposing all forms of legalized censorship. The federation went further and attested the value of the picture as an educational influence, an uplifting influence. "It pledged itself to do all in its power to further the motion picture business in the state of Iowa instead of trying to throttle it," said Mr. Binder. The speaker also told of the work that is being done by the manufacturers to further the fight against legalized censorship. "Mr. Hodkinson here contributes $150 a month to the treasury of the national board of censorship," he said. "The General Film Company furnishes a thousand a month. George Eastman, who is not directly interested in picture making, gives us $6,000 a year. I just mention this for your information, and to let you know your friends, the men who are making possible the conduct of the battles in the different centers. Now don't worry about the politicians, the first class. The ones to take care of and the ones to worry about are those of the second class. The national board, through its educational campaign, is trying to take care of the second class and to do the work well."

Peter J. Jeup,
Treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

President Pearce next introduced W. W. Hodkinson, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, describing him as one who had contributed largely to the success of the motion picture business and to putting the exhibition of pictures on the highest plane.

Mr. Hodkinson was given a hearty greeting. "If I had been called on a few years ago to say something about the future of the picture probably I would have advocated quality and a higher admission, getting away from the five-cent price. Don't misunderstand me. That is a necessary part of the business, but so many of the manufacturers were busy with the smaller picture that they were neglecting the bigger and better subject.

"The motion picture business in the past has been a business very much without a future. Five years ago people looked upon motion pictures as a fad, something to die out, like skating or things of that sort, amusements that came in periodically. Many of the exhibitors even felt it was a temporary proposition. We are facing the fact today that the business is one of the biggest and most enduring if it is conducted rightly. I don't think it can be killed today.

"While we are on the subject of the future of the picture I want to say I have been very much pleased to hear the discussion on censorship and the talk about the co-operation of the manufacturers, which is evidence that your minds are running in that direction—and the permanence of the business depends on our ability to plan for the future. The field has been a virgin one. It might be compared to the early days in gold mining in California, when plenty of free gold was found. After the free gold was exhausted it was necessary that a property be developed. That is what we have to do today—develop our property. And that development can only be done by co-operation and planning.

"Exhibitors should do what they can to bring their community to their theater. It can't be done much longer as it has been done in the past, with any kind of film, with no attempt at advertising, or regardless of the way business is done. The motion picture exhibitor of today can occupy a very valuable place in his community, he may be a respected business man, not be looked upon as a transient, if he will concentrate on his task and plan for the future.

"The question of censorship has concerned me not a little. Personally I would like to see no censorship at all. I have felt the only safe course to pursue is to release only pictures that are worthy of being seen by the American people and then to stand on our rights that those pictures should be seen. I realize there are temporary advantages in making the other class of pictures, but I feel that that advantage is only temporary, is very short lived. We shall try to distribute only such product as we can stand by, and we believe we will have the support of the exhibitors in doing that."

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

There was no meeting of the national organization in the afternoon, but the convention hall was occupied by the California exhibitors, who held the fourth annual convention of the California State Branch, No. 12. The gathering was called to order by President H. L. Beach at 2:45 o'clock, and upon motion of Vice-President A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles the reading of the minutes of the last meeting and the roll call of members were dispensed with. Owing to the fact that there had been so many changes in the office of secretary during the past year the report of that official was limited to a financial statement.

As the sessions of the National League were being given over largely to discussions on the leading questions affecting the moving picture industry in general it was decided to make the meeting a short one and President Beach announced that nominations were in order. Judge Tugwell moved that the same officers continue for another year, but was ruled out of order. President Beach then told of the work that had been done to build up the League and suggested that a change in officers might be of benefit.

Mr. Tugwell was nominated, and on being given the privileges of the floor made a spirited address on the need of organization and told of the harmful bills that had been killed during the past year. He outlined the censorship question in Los Angeles and gave many facts in regard to the working of the board there that are not generally known. W. F. Krahn, of Berkeley, was also nominated for the office of president, but he withdrew, the election of Mr. Tugwell being unanimous. J. S. Lustig, of the Standard theater, Los Angeles, was nominated for the office of secretary and was elected. H. C. Schmidt, of Palo Alto, the oldest exhibitor in the State, was chosen vice-president, and C. L. Mehrten, of Berkeley, was re-elected treasurer. A. Goldberg, of the Peerless theater, San Francisco, was elected sergeant-at-arms. H. L. Beach, the retiring president, was elected National vice-president from California by a rising vote amid great enthusiasm.

In accordance with the arrangements made at the last state convention the next meeting of the league will be held in Los Angeles at a date to be selected by the Executive Committee. The idea of holding a moving picture exhibition in connection with the next convention was discussed and the proposition was heartily approved. This matter will also receive the attention of the Executive Committee.

An open discussion then followed on the combined saloon and theater question which is now agitating the San Francisco exhibitors. For the benefit of delegates from other cities the attempts of local saloon interests to secure moving picture licenses for the purpose of showing pictures free of charge in their places of business were outlined. It was agreed by all that the showing of pictures in saloons would be degrading and harmful to the business and that strenuous efforts should be taken to prevent the idea from securing a foothold in San Francisco, or elsewhere.

Thursday Morning Session.

There was a good attendance at the session of Thursday morning. It had been announced that the convention would be addressed by David W. Griffith. President Pearce in opening stated that Mr. Griffith was in the city and would soon be at the Auditorium. After the reading of the minutes Mr. Pearce presented his report. It was listened to with marked attention and heartily applauded at its conclusion. Mr. Pearce said:

Upon my election about a year ago, at Dayton, Ohio, the information was vouchsafed the convention that my business interests would not permit constant traveling, and upon taking up the work a letter of encouragement was immediately sent to all state officers and information requested. The number of replies was very encouraging and showed the need of strong State and National organizations.

In order to strengthen the State and National organizations the question of amalgamation was taken up with the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, California, New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and it is more than a pleasure to be able to state that the first state in which amalgamation was effected was California. The remarkable co-operation of both sides not only made it possible, but materially aided in amalgamation in all these states, with the exception of Wisconsin and Illinois. This was emphasized by the splendid work done by the League in securing a graduated scale as a substitute for the flat rate war tax. This concession was the more remarkable because it was obtained by the League after the Finance Committee of the Senate had decided to grant no hearings on any portion of the bill.

Too much praise cannot be given to the various trade papers for the loyal support given our organization. The success of the program, "Exhibitors Must Organize," was secured largely through the many columns of space so unselfishly given by them.

If not at first it must now be apparent to all that the work of this administration is largely to lay the foundation upon which the future organization is to be built. Amalgamation with harmony was most necessary, and I trust the large success obtained along this line will enable this Convention to so plan a boom for our organization which we have so much desired and that it will be a permanent one. The success of any organization, more especially this one of ours, depends largely on its personnel, and it is indeed gratifying in visiting the various state officers to find them not only men of ability and integrity, but leaders in their respective communities.

In closing, let me make a suggestion which is based on my experience as your president, and while it may not seem as necessary to some as it does to me, I am sure it would be suggested by any one of you if you had the opportunity to make the observation that I have had: As soon as our Convention will permit, I would recommend the election of a secretary who shall be paid sufficient salary to enable him to devote his entire time to the work of the League, not only as secretary, but also as an organizer; also that his headquarters be in New York City. To make it impossible for him to use this position as a means of personal gain, I also recommend such amendment to our by-laws as will provide for his election by the Executive Board and his work to be under the supervision of the League president. I do not feel that I could ask the favorable consideration of this suggestion without stating to the Convention that I am under no circumstances a candidate for re-election, and I take this opportunity to thank you all for your loyal support and hearty co-operation.

Talk by Sam Spedon.

Hearty applause greeted Sam Spedon, the veteran publicity manager of the Vitagraph Company of America. Mr.

Group of Exhibitors and Guests Attending The Fifth Annual Convention of the Motion

Spedon is one of those who can think on his feet, and he was followed with close attention. "This is an age of advertising," said Mr. Spedon, "and my presence here today seems one phase of it. I am not one of those who feel that we know all about advertising. We are trying to learn. It was for the reason that we are always trying to learn something new about advertising that the Vitagraph Company was moved to send me here among you, that I might at first hand observe what is being done in this section of the country. We are in a measure bound by the limitation of our own viewpoint, which might be called the studio viewpoint or that of the city of New York and its surrounding boroughs. We become more or less bound down to a viewpoint that is not comprehensive enough.

"Each community has its own problems to meet, each exhibitor has his own clientele, and he knows what that clientele wants. We don't. We experiment. We use our best judgment, and it is up to you to tell us if these experiments meet your approval. Within the last six months a new impetus has been given to the advertising end of our business. Four or five years ago advertising was not looked upon favorably. In fact, the producers were not advertising men. They had discovered the art of making moving pictures, had made many improvements and created mechanical devices which made this business possible. They were men of vast experience in their line of occupation, and as their interests grew they were obliged to do much that now they have to intrust to others. Naturally in the early days they came to the conclusion that what they did not know was not worth knowing and advertising was taboo.

"At the suggestion of your humble servant it was made possible for the Vitagraph to establish the first motion picture advertising department. At first it was not known as an advertising department, but more as a popularizing department. Manufacturers said we can sell pictures—what is the use of advertising? The consequences you all know; that attitude has been changed. Competition came in and the manufacturers were obliged to sit up and take notice. Within the past six months this new era has dawned, and at an expense of many thousands of dollars we employed one of the largest concerns in our city to aid us in reaching the exhibitor and the public. The manufacturers have discovered that advertising was the very thing necessary to give their business the impetus it lacked.

"Today the advertising of the motion picture industry has increased at least 100 per cent. There is nothing too good, nothing too novel, nothing too attractive for them to employ that it may be possible for you and for them to get your pictures and their pictures before the public. But here comes the vital point. You must not advertise a misrepresentation. You must make good. Of course, you must first get the people into your theaters, but when you get them there if the production is equal to the representation then you are bound to get the biggest kind of advertising possible. Every man who feels he has got his money's worth, or more, goes out and tells his friends and you reap the result.

"We find that the man at the door is the man we should worry about, the one who should give us the most concern. Then there is a unity, a trinity of unity, which we must consider. This is composed of the producer, the exhibitor, and the public. It makes the complete triangle of unity, and those three vital factors, or those most vitally concerned, must work together. There must be co-operation, for united we stand, divided we fall."

Address by D. W. Griffith.

"There falls to my lot today one of the most pleasant experiences of my life," said President Pearce, "and that is to present to you the premier director of the world, who will speak to you on 'The Rise and Fall of Free Speech and Personal Liberty in America.' Mr. Griffith, ladies and gentlemen."

Prolonged handclapping greeted the director as he stepped to the front of the platform. "I want to thank you for this applause," said the director when he was able to be heard. "I know you have been bored by so much of my work that I appreciate the reception all the more keenly. I do not know much about speaking—it is not in my line; I am a producer, but I shall not try to produce oratory. We are to consider a serious subject, and I shall endeavor to give you as much as I can of the real arguments we have against censorship."

Mr. Griffith departed once or twice from his manuscript, which he read with dramatic force. His manner betrayed the depth of his feeling. He read slowly, and not a word was lost. He was frequently interrupted by applause, showing that his auditors were with him. "It is because of the director's fear of censorship that the good manuscript is driven out," said Mr. Griffith at one point; "because we are spending thousands of dollars and we are obliged to put on something that will pass, and because of that fear there is sometimes put before the motion picture public a subject that is merely a bunch of milk and water insipidity and mediocrity."

"You would never have had the plays of Shakespeare," said Mr. Griffith at another point, "if Shakespeare had been obliged to write as the director of motion pictures today has to produce his subjects."

"Let us fight," said the director at the conclusion of his prepared address, "remembering that the white plume that is in our caps is as clean and unsullied as the one boasted of above the helmet of Navarre. It is a beautiful fight, for it is God's own truth we fight for; the star we are fighting under cannot but help bring us victory. We are fighting for free speech, and free speech is nothing more or less than the cornerstone and the very foundation of our moving picture liberties and every blessed man, woman and child in the United States has a right to that American privilege—and there's no bull con to that. [Great applause.]

"I don't want to stand here and talk to you as if preaching, but these things have been so hard upon us all. You can't have motion pictures when you are in constant fear of the constable of every small community—or of every large city."

Picture Exhibitors' League of America at San Francisco, Cal., July 13 to 17, 1915.

When Mr. Griffith stopped there were cries of "Keep on!"

"No," replied the director, "I am sorry I have kept you so long. But we have done much to bring this business up to a plane equal to that of the stage—the stage is a wonderful institution—equal to the pulpit; equal to the press, equal to any form of expression the world has ever seen, and I think it is coming into its own. I am glad to have seen you all. I know you have loved some of the things I have done. I am just saying a pagan scoundrel prayer that for the rest of your lives you will continue to love me just a little, for I love you much. I thank you."

The address follows:

Freedom of speech and publication is guaranteed in the constitution of the United States and in the constitution of practically all the states. Unjustifiable speech or publication may be punished, but cannot be forbidden in advance. The Supreme Court of California held that a regular theatrical production could be protected from injunction on the ground that it was a publication. Mayor Gaynor—that great jurist who stood out from the ordinary, gallery-playing, hypocritical type of politician, who plays for that hydra-headed monster called "public clamor" in America, as a white rose stands out from a field of sewer-fed weeds, said, in vetoing a censorship ordinance in the City of New York:

"Ours is a government of free speech and a free press. That is the cornerstone of free government. The phrase 'the press' includes all methods of expression by writing or pictures. If this (moving picture) ordinance be legal, then a similar ordinance in respect of the newspapers and the theaters generally would be legal."

We do not fear censorship, for we have no wish to offend with indecencies or obscenities, but we do demand, as a right, the liberty to show the dark side of wrong, that we may illuminate the bright side of virtue—the same liberty that is conceded to the art of the written word—that art to which we owe the Bible and the works of Shakespeare.

A great divine is quoted as saying that from childhood his one besetting sin was brutality, but that the witnessing of the play of Oliver Twist, with its scenes of savage ferocity between Bill and Nancy Sykes, did more to arouse within himself an abhorrence of brutality than all the lessons and sermons otherwise of his entire life.

I count myself one among those who spoke in warning of censorship, when it first made itself manifest to the public. Had intelligence gone to work against censorship at that period, the child should have been easily put away. But the child of that day has grown to be not merely a man but a giant, and I tell you who sit here today, whether you will or no, he is a giant whose forces of evil are so strong that he threatens your very existence.

The rise and fall of free speech in America—add to this the rise and fall of liberty in America—and when you go home tonight and have your glass of beer, which the long-haired angels of reform, walking through their misguided and God-forsaken alleys of gloom, will doubtless take away from you before many moons, think this matter over.

The rise of free speech has cost centuries upon centuries of untold sufferings and agonies; it has cost rivers of blood; it has taken as its toll unaccounted fields, littered with the carcasses of human beings—all this that there might come to live and be that wonderful thing, the power of free speech. In our own country it has taken some of the best blood of our forefathers. The Revolution itself was a fight in this direction, the God-given, beautiful thing of free speech.

Afterward the first assault on the right of free speech guaranteed by the Constitution occurred in 1798, when Congress passed the sedition law, which made it a crime for any newspaper or other printed publication to criticise the Government.

Hotly contested prosecution of editors and publishers took place at the instance of the party in power. The popular indignation was aroused against this abridgement of liberty to such an extent that Thomas Jefferson, the candidate of the opposition party for President, was triumphantly elected. And after that nothing more was heard of the sedition law, which expired by limitation in 1801.

The integrity of free speech and publication was not again attacked in this country until the arrival of the motion picture, when this new art was seized upon as an excuse for meddlesome interference.

It has taken but a very few short years to take away this wonderful blessing, and I tell you that not only has its accomplishment been attempted—it has been completed. You may think this is an exaggeration, but I tell you that when a majority of citizens in any community allow the censorship of one single motion picture, particularly showing to an audience of adults, the right of free speech in that community has once and for all and forevermore ceased to be.

They tell you you must not show crime in a motion picture. Do not listen to such nonsense. These people would not have you show the glories and beauties of the most wonderful moral lesson the world has ever known—the life of Christ—because in that story you must show the vice of the traitor Judas Iscariot. Let these people follow out their belief to its logical conclusion, there would have been written no Iliads of Homer; there would not have been written, for the glory of the human race, that grand cadence of uplift called the Bible; there would have been no Goethe. There would be no thrilling, beautiful dramas given as the grandest heritage of the English-speaking race, the plays of Shakespeare. None of these things would these worthy persons have left in your possession, had they had their way.

All new things in the world, including the Christian religion and the printing press, have been at their beginnings considered as instruments of evil. The motion picture has had to undergo the same ordeal that seems to be directed at all new things. On the matter of censorship we think there has been very little common sense displayed by the public in general. We will agree with you in the argument that for the sake of the children censorship for a class of pictures may be allowed. But for the motion picture presented to adults at the same place, in the same theater, and under exactly the same conditions as the regular drama of the stage, we demand the same fair treatment accorded the drama, and we are unable to see why this is not the case, but, as you know, it is very far from being the case.

In some communities they do not allow the showing of crime in any form in any motion picture. This, followed to its logical conclusion, would absolutely make impossible the motion picture as an entertainment or as an art. For instance, I know it will seem beyond belief that the motion picture version of Shakespeare's drama of Shylock was forbidden in Chicago on account of race prejudice. How is it possible to portray virtue without portraying its opposite—the thing of vice?

How are we to show the sweetness of the character of Abraham Lincoln save by the contrast with the mistaken idea burning in the mind of a Thaddeus Stevens? Search your minds for any story that is worth telling, or any play that is worth seeing, that does not in some way show vice in some form. We believe the motion picture can be made the greatest educator the world has ever known. Its highest form will be depiction of motion picture fiction founded on historical facts, giving an interesting evening of entertainments and imparting in part truths of history, and in the large, a desire to investigate for one's self the period supposed to be depicted in the play.

What better instruction in the living of life today and tomorrow than a true knowledge of life in the past?

The motion picture is a form of speech as clean and decent and respectable as that of any art mankind has ever discovered. A people that would allow the suppression of this form of speech would unquestionably submit to the suppression of that which we all consider so highly—the printing press. And yet we find all through the country, among all classes of people, the idea that the motion picture should be censored.

When the first little board of censorship was established six years ago, we took it seriously, and then expected exactly what has come to pass—when a man of the calibre of the captain of police of Chicago can tell two million American people what they shall and shall not go to see in the way of a moving picture. The policy of the censorship is to approve of pictures which offend no one. That is one way of saying, "we will have nothing in the pictures but milk and water," ridiculous, insipid mediocrity that could not possibly interest anyone.

A motion picture of this class would be as interesting and efficient as a newspaper that never steps on anyone's toes, and you can imagine how people would be interested in that kind of a newspaper. We believe that we have as much right to present the facts of history as we see them, on the motion picture screen, as Woodrow Wilson has to write these facts in his history. We believe it is a right under the Constitution of the United States, and we are supported in this belief by wise judicial decisions in cases where the matter has been presented to the courts in the right way.

Judge Cooper, in his decision allowing "The Birth of the Nation" to be shown in Chicago, said in part:

"Every night in every fair-sized community in this broad land, where the stage instructs or entertains, each and every play has its good characters and its bad characters portrayed, both of which are essential to a play in the rounding out of the moral of the play, and without which moral a play is of no educational value * * *. If * * * all the plays in which a villain had played were stopped * * * the theater as an educator and entertainer of the people would become a memory of the past, and there would be nothing to fill its place for the education and enjoyment of our people."

I have already quoted one passage from the veto message of the late Mayor Gaynor of New York, but Mr. Gaynor went even further than this in his expression of legal opinion. He declared in so many words that the censoring of moving pictures is a direct violation of the United States Constitution, because it is an abridgement of the freedom of publication.

So long as this thing of censorship is allowed, so long as in a city the size of Chicago one man may tell two million what they shall or shall not see in a motion picture in the theaters of Chicago so long as this is allowed—so long as even one man is given the privilege over another of telling him this thing that he shall or shall not see in the way of even the simplest of motion pictures—then just so long and just so certain, there is no such thing as free America, and freedom of speech is a thing of the dead and much-regretted past.

The press of the country can awaken the people to the truth of these conditions. What have you done to help awaken them? The gentlemen of the press are human beings, subject and liable to be persuaded one way or another, the same as you or I. Talk to them, put up your side of the case. You will find that you can open their eyes to things they have never dreamed of. Already some of the greatest journalists of the country have been brought to see the light. I quote here from Lewis Sherwin, the eminent dramatic critic of the New York Globe, who, upon hearing of the efforts to suppress "The Birth of the Nation," wrote:

"This is absolutely against public policy, against the spirit of the Constitution, against the very life of and essence of what should be true American and democratic ideas. The mere fact of the races constituting the population of the United States in an unpleasant light, is no argument whatever. If this factor is to be seriously considered, there is hardly any limit to which censorship may not go."

The Chicago Tribune, in speaking of the attitude taken by the Mayor of that city, says: "Intelligence does not need censorship. The greater the insistence upon censorship the greater the denial that the community has intelligence * * *. Censorship, being in itself a denial of intelligence, frequently proves that it itself is unintelligent."

The Boston Transcript in an editorial says: "The framers of the organic law of the Commonwealth concluded their contribution to human happiness with the purposeful phrase: 'To the end it may be a government of laws and not of men.' Upon Massachusetts therefore rests a peculiar obligation to oppose the tendency of the times to change by class legislation and executive censorship a government of laws to a government of men. The passion to limit by legislation or executive order the freedom of the individual is today the curse of the nation."

The Boston Herald says: "The people are impatient of any censorship which limits that freedom (free speech) which they hold as a priceless heritage. They want exact fairness and justice for all races and creeds."

The Chicago Examiner says: "If an official can impose his views on us in the moving picture house, the next attempt will be to tell the theater what it is allowed to show, and from that it is only a step to telling the press what it may print. That would spell an end to criticism of public acts and public men. It would substitute personal interest or personal prejudice for the truth as the standard in determining the right of publication."

The Chicago Tribune, in another editorial in regard to censorship, says: "The rights of the public are not to be abridged by bureaucracy, but are under the protection of the judiciary. The growth of censorship, undoubtedly stimulated by the moving picture, is a development which no American devoted to ideals of freedom can observe without alarm. * * * The use of censorship easily may tend to the misuse of it, and the position of the courts as a corrective to check abuse of power by what is virtually an extra legal authority and might easily become an autocratic and stupid authority, must constantly be kept in mind."

The Boston Globe says, editorially: "To stop the free expression of opinion by any means is to close the safety valve."

The press, the theaters, and the great majority of the people, these are only too ready to line themselves on your side of the battle, if you only have the nerve and the brains to let them know what your side is. In heaven's name, get to it! You have forgotten that you are American citizens. You seem to forget that this is America the boasted land of the free, and by God's splendor, I think we have all forgotten the land of the brave. You are not fighting for anything to be ashamed of. You are fighting the most beautiful battle—and the only battle—that should be allowed to be fought in the world—a battle for freedom. The thing you have—the motion picture—is a form of speech as beautiful and clean as that ever discovered by the mind of man, in many ways, and in

Vitagraph's Patriotic Picture

Commodore Blackton's Campaign for National Defense Endorsed by Statesmen and Officers of the Army and Navy.

SOLELY with the desire of calling to the attention of the American public the present state of unpreparedness of the country, the Vitagraph Company of America has produced "The Battle Cry of Peace" in five parts and is now arranging to have it shown in every city, town and hamlet throughout the country.

Although Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company of America wrote the play, and secured many of the facts on which it is based from Hudson Maxim's book, "Defenseless America," he has weaved a dramatic story of unusual strength with the facts.

Noted public men throughout the United States including Secretary of State Lansing, Secretary of War Garrison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Franklin D. Roosevelt, General Leonard Wood, Commander of the Department of the East; General Montgomery M. Macomb, President of the War College, Admirals Sigsbee and Marix, and other naval authorities and men in all walks in life have joined in producing this film—every one of them appearing in it personally and in other ways lending their hearty co-operation.

"In writing this story we have tried not to be sensational, nor to arouse hard feeling against any other power," said Commodore J. Stuart Blackton in discussing the project. "We have simply used this method as a better means of reaching the public, believing that the pictured action would carry a greater weight than a written word. With the facilities which we have on hand we have been able to show what would happen to New York City if an invading force should be landed, as well as how the interior of the country would be affected by such an invasion. Brooklyn, too, has been touched in the picturing and just exactly what the invasion of this city would mean has been shown on the screen, and what Long Island might expect is vividly portrayed, and yet it has not been with sensational means that we have accomplished our end.

"We are not in favor of war and in this statement I speak for my associates as well as for myself. Our ambition is to avoid any conflict for the United States, but, and here is our point, treaties mean nothing, words of honor are useless and the Declaration of Independence is worthless unless backed up by force.

"Recently during a talk with Secretary of War Garrison he said that he believed that too stringent means cannot be used to awaken the public to the state of our defenses. 'The present state of preparedness has attracted the attention of all good citizens,' he added. 'I am heartily in favor of your campaign and I most surely do endorse it. I am always ready to aid the Vitagraph Company in a movement such as this.'

"Later I talked with Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt, and he expressed himself as strongly in favor of any movement that would bring this matter home.

"'Nothing can be too realistic to arouse the public,' he said. 'Let us all get together and drive this matter home in such a way that not one citizen can help feeling that it is his problem as well as the problem of the Government officials.

"'In time of war prepare for peace by getting ready for war' was the way Mr. Roosevelt summed up the question of preparedness.

"The question which 'The Battle Cry of Peace' places before the American public I hope will not be misunderstood as mere politics," continued Commodore Blackton. "I have talked with men who are holding public offices, men who have been elected to those offices by popular opinion and with one or two exceptions they are all in favor of protecting American freedom and American homes.

"I call it protecting American homes because it is just that. The freedom that we have built up and the homes that we have fought for, are for us to protect and we must do that by being prepared to repel any devastator who invades America.

"There are some cases where the question of preparedness is being made a question of politics. I can see no reason why this should be so. Either a man believes that the country is sufficiently prepared or that it is not, and his opinion should not be founded on whether he believes the Republican party should think the country is prepared, whether the Democratic party will endorse such a movement in the coming elections. In one case I talked with a Governor of one of our most powerful states and he refused to allow himself to be quoted or even to express an opinion in this direction. 'I am of a different political party than the one that is in charge of the Federal Government at the present time and I do not care to be quoted,' was his comment.

"'Then,' I said, 'Your idea of protection is more a question of politics than of American spirit, which incidentally is responsible for your election.' Needless to say this gentleman has not been included among those who are in favor of better preparedness."

In the picture, every possible means to prevent arousing enmity against any other country has been used and even the uniforms worn by the soldiers have been designed with the idea that no country can take offense. Similar care has been taken with names and the only foreign sounding name is "Emanon," a spy. "Emanon" is simply "No name" spelled backwards.

Many veterans of the Grant Post of the G. A. R. are also included in the picture and headed by Captain Jack Crawford ("poet scout"), are seen in military array. The veterans present a pathetic sight, their ranks thinned by the ravages of time, but their patriotism undaunted. Their willingness to defend the United States against invasion and to help preserve its integrity, as they did during the civil war, is plain to be seen.

Such Vitagraph stars as Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Ralph Ince, Paul Scardon, Tefft Johnson, James Morrison, Evart Overton, Louise Beaudet, and dainty Norma Talmadge have been included in the cast. Hudson Maxim appears personally in the first part. The picture was presented under the direction of Wilfred North, and the entire production has been personally supervised in every detail by Commodore Blackton.

Admirals Sigsbee and Marx and Group of Veterans Appearing in "The Battle Cry of Peace."

The picture, which will be in five parts, and one of the features that will particularly interest the exhibitor, has been the decision on the part of the Vitagraph Company to release through the V-L-S-E during the month of September.

In handling the picture so that the general exhibitor, even those of the smallest towns, will have an opportunity to show this patriotic feature, the Vitagraph Company, according to its official announcement, desires to show that it believes that only through this channel can the greatest good be done.

"In producing this picture we have tried to arouse the country so that it will by the tremendous public opinion that will be stirred, force Congress at the coming session to pass an appropriation of half a billion dollars for better defences," declared Commodore Blackton in talking of the feature. "This picture is bigger than any one man, it is the biggest patriotic move that ever has been made. It is intended to point out the deficiency in our present armament, and to get the citizens of the country to seek the same insurance on their liberties as they have on their lives. We want every exhibitor to join with us in this move and we want them to feel that they are performing the greatest patriotic service that they have ever been called upon to render."

Daniel Carson Goodman

THE Lubin Manufacturing Company announces the engagement of Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman to write twelve feature photoplays a year at the largest salary ever paid for such services, $60,000. These twelve feature photoplays will be of the domestic drama order patterned after the famous Griffith film, "The Battle of Sexes," of which Dr. Goodman was the author. Lubin will engage a special cast of stars for these features and will spare no expense to make them a sensation of the film world during the next twelve months.

Danl. Carson Goodman.

Although only 33 years old, Dr. Goodman has won an enviable name for himself in the world of literature, his novel, "Hagar Revelly," having been the best seller of the year it was published. He was born in Chicago, and after the usual preliminary schooling studied medicine at Washington University, from which he was graduated. Then he went to the Universities of Heidelberg and Vienna, where he continued his studies for another four years.

But medicine held no attraction for Dr. Goodman, and he turned his endeavors to literature, his first novel being "Unclothed," the second "Travail," and the third "Hagar Revelly." Now Dr. Goodman has decided to give his best efforts to the production of what he hopes will prove to be masterpieces.

"I have an infinite faith in the mission of the photoplay," said Dr. Goodman in discussing his relations with the Lubin Manufacturing Company. "Incidentally, I know that Mr. Lubin will spare no expense in the production of my twelve features. I have in mind the stars I want, and as the question of money is not involved, I believe that we will be able to gather a cast unequalled in the history of film productions. Of course, I cannot go into details as to the themes on which I will write, but they will deal with domestic problems, pregnant with human emotions and telling the story of things most vital to the race. Whether I will succeed in this new field I cannot say—like the famous archer in 'Ivanhoe,' 'no man can do more than his best.'"

QUIVE, V-L-S-E MANAGER AT SAN FRANCISCO.

A change in the management of the San Francisco branch is also reported by the V-L-S-E. R. B. Quive, well and favorably known in western film circles, will become branch manager in place of C. B. Price. Under Mr. Quive's management great things are looked for from this far western V-L-S-E branch office.

Scenario Department for Standard Studios

New Service Plans to Learn Story Wants of Exhibitors Through Exchanges.

By learning the demands of theater patrons from the theater owners and transmitting them to a special scenario department conducted by the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., the exchanges handling the Standard program hope to be able, in a short time, to give the exhibitors a variety of stories in photodrama form that will supply directly the kind of productions most popular with their audiences.

The Standard producers claim that although magazines and novels are constantly changing the style of stories offered to the reading public in accordance with the popular demand, motion pictures are not up to date in this respect because of the conditions of the business forcing the exchanges to take whatever style of story the manufacturers see fit to hand them without due regard to the demands of the exhibitors on behalf of their patrons. While a publisher will not accept a story, the style of which he learns from the bookseller is not in demand, an exchange is forced to accept a released motion picture in spite of the fact that the exhibitors have warned him of the unpopularity of the subject. The correction of this state of affairs was in the minds of the active spirits of the Standard program during its organization and steps have been taken whereby the studios producing Standard pictures will receive their stories from carefully selected scenarios prepared by a special script department which is kept informed by the exchanges of the style of stories most popular in their several territories.

This department will consist of a staff of story writers who will work in conjunction with experienced scenario writers, and while each studio will be allowed to furnish its own scripts when desired they will not be O. K.'d by the central scenario department unless the subject is known to be in popular demand.

Mike Donlin Signed by Arrow Film

THE Arrow Film Corporation, of 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City, has completed arrangements with Mike Donlin, probably the best-known ball player in the world, whereby the famous son of Swat will be featured in a five-part photoplay entitled "Right Off the Bat." The scenario, which is by Albert S. Le Vino, follows closely the big moments in Donlin's life, from the days when he was a small-town lad, crazy about baseball, to the time when he achieved his ambition and became a Giant.

Mike Donlin.

The producers have provided an all-star cast to support Donlin in "Right Off the Bat." Among his associate players are the Misses Claire Mersereau, Fan Bourke, Rita Ross Donlin, Beatrice Dauncourt, Doris Grey and Mabel Wright, and Messrs. Charles Mather, George Henry, J. Arthur O'Brien and Frank Frane, Jr.

"Right Off the Bat," which has been in course of production about ten days, is being directed by Hugh Reticker, one of the younger school of photoplay directors, who, experienced by years on the speaking stage, is employing his keen imagination in the newer art of screen production.

Most of the scenes are exteriors, taken in a beautiful city in the Berkshires. More than forty well-known ball players have been engaged to take part in the play, which is a comedy-drama that deals with baseball but is not devoted solely to the national game. Exclusive of Donlin's salary, the production will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. "Right Off the Bat" will be released late in August and will be seen for its premiere in a leading Broadway theater.

Important Moves by Mutual

President Freuler Appoints John C. Graham as His Assistant and Makes Contract with Horsley for Productions.

THE prophecies made by the knowing ones in the film industry when John R. Freuler was elected president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to the effect that his intimate knowledge of the exhibitor's needs and requirements would quickly be evidenced in the Mutual's affairs, are already beginning to bear fruit. Early last week came the announcement that John Cecil Graham, one of the best equipped and thoroughly posted men in the motion picture industry, and a man whose reputation among exhibitors is nation-wide for his ability to organize film service efficiently, had been appointed general assistant to President Freuler. Then last Saturday it was announced that papers had been signed by President Freuler for the Mutual and David Horsley for the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, N. J., and the Bostock Jungle and Film Company of Los Angeles, Cal., whereby these companies are to release their entire output through the Mutual.

David Horsley.

Both events are significant of the comprehensive plans which President Freuler has in mind for making Mutual service the model for other programs to follow.

"The Mutual," said President Freuler recently, "will be increased and expanded along new lines and in such a way as to be of the greatest benefit to the exhibitor. Plans now under way for the extending of Mutual service will be announced as rapidly as they are completed and exhibitors will be the ones most vitally interested. Mutual service will soon be recognized as the best service and exhibitors will be the ones to benefit. Watch the Mutual is my advice to exhibitors everywhere."

John C. Graham.

The foregoing announcements are sufficient evidence that President Freuler is allowing no unnecessary delays to interfere with the carrying out of his plans, and will be the occasion for many congratulations from Mutual well-wishers.

President Freuler's selection of Mr. Graham as his general assistant will generally be regarded as of the utmost wisdom. Mr. Graham's ability to organize and handle the detail of a big organization like the Mutual is too well known to readers of the Moving Picture World to require comment here.

Entering the moving picture field with H. E. Aitken, former president of the Mutual, while the Western General Film Company was in process of organization, Mr. Graham speedily won a reputation as a man of unusual talents. Later, in association with Mr. Aitken he successfully operated the Western Film Exchange and when Mr. Aitken purchased the Reliance company he came East to be placed in charge of its output. Following the organization of the Mutual, Mr. Graham continued in charge of the Eastern exchange, which included New York City. Later he became general manager of the Universal and then of the United, recently dissolved. His connection with the film business dates back to Milwaukee, St. Louis and Joplin, Mo., with Mr. Freuler and Mr. Aitken.

The announcement that David Horsley is to release the output of both his plants through the Mutual is of greatest interest and necessitates the cancellation of Mr. Horsley's contract to make pictures for a licensed company. The cancellation of this contract becomes effective within thirty days, which means that the last picture he will make for the licensed company will be the release for August 12. The brand name "MinA" remains the property of the licensed company, but Mr. Horsley completely severs his connections with it. In the Mutual, it is said that Mr. Horsley hopes to find a wider market for his productions.

Each week, Mr. Horsley will release through the Mutual a two reel picture, featuring the collection of animals for which the Bostock name has been famous abroad and in this country for more than a century. Mr. Horsley has bought the entire collection of Bostock animals and has installed them at the expensive new plant, covering a space of five acres, which he has lately completed in Los Angeles. Here a huge arena has been constructed and a stage erected large enough to accommodate six working companies at one time. The arena has been so arranged that it will be possible to take animal pictures with absolute safety for the production staff and by a unique arrangement of stage settings, six different scenes can be taken in but little more than the time which it ordinarily takes for one. Besides the animal features, a series of distinctive comedies will also be released by the Horsley companies. Mr. Horsley is also planning to produce a number of important multiple reel features, which will be released as Mutual Masterpictures.

The alliance with Mr. Horsley is indicative of President Freuler's endeavor to strengthen and expand the Mutual program and is in line with the announcements which he has made to motion picture exhibitors everywhere that Mutual service means the best service alike to the public and exhibitors. The release of the Horsley productions through the Mutual Film Corporation will begin the latter part of August.

Reine Davies in the World Film

MISS REINE DAVIES, popularly known as the American beauty of the stage, has capitulated to the lure of the camera and is making her motion picture debut in the George W. Lederer Filmotion Corporation's picturization of the famous drama "Sunday," in which Miss Ethel Barrymore scored such a triumph in this country and England, and which will be released through the World Film. Miss Davies, in addition to her beauty, has a wonderful personality, which aids her in her work before the camera as it did before the footlights. She also is celebrated as having one of the most wonderful wardrobes of any actress.

Reine Davies.

Miss Davies won much favor as leading woman for Willie Collier in "Love Among the Lions," also "Mme. Sherry," "The Girl Rangers" and "The Southerners," and has been one of the most popular headliners in vaudeville playing the "Big Time."

She is supported by Montagu Love, the celebrated English romantic actor, who came to this country to play in "Grumpy" with Sir Cyril Maude; Adolph Link, for years the leading comedian at the Berlin Comedy theaters; Charles Dickson, the author and actor, who has just returned from England.

Moss to Make Pictures

Big Theatrical Man Organizing Large Company and Erecting Studios and Laboratories.

B. S. MOSS, the biggest small-time vaudeville man in the East, and one of the most extensive theatrical operators in this country, with a control of about fifty of the largest combination houses showing vaudeville and high-grade pictures, has organized a picture producing company with a working capital of more than half a million. Mr. Moss has engaged some of the best picture experts available as executives of departments. With these men of calibre and distinction he expects to be able to put out on the market a line of material that will at once rank with the very best. The studios and laboratories which are being erected for him will embody all the latest and best studio and factory devices.

B. S. Moss.

"I am not going into the picture business to revolutionize it," said Mr. Moss when interviewed on his new venture. "With the projection of my new company, I am not going to project new theories about production. As an exhibitor, who has met with a fair measure of success, I know what kind of pictures are in demand. In this respect, while I have my ideals, at the same time, the practical results of the box office are the only standards to go by.

"In selecting productions for the screen, I shall be influenced by the desire to please the thousands that regularly attend and patronize my big New York theaters. I believe my fellow exhibitors will agree with me that in so doing, I will succeed in pleasing the thousands that patronize their shows. The number of pictures I will release each year will be governed by my facilities and available material, and not by calendar schedules. In other words, we are desirous of producing quality and not quantity."

Mr. Moss' best known theaters in New York are the Regent, the pride of Harlem; the Hamilton, regarded as an institution on Washington Heights; the Prospect and the McKinley Square, amusement centers in the Bronx; the Eighty-sixth Street, which sets the standards of Yorkville and Jefferson, a rendezvous for the entertainment seekers of the East Side and Fourteenth street. The same methods that have brought forward Mr. Moss to the front rank as a theatrical magnate will unquestionably put him on top in the film world.

SALARIES OF PATHE BRANCH MANAGERS RAISED.

General Manager Louis Gasnier of Pathe made an announcement of remarkable interest to his hearers, and one that is very rarely made, when at a meeting of the Pathe exchange managers in convention in New York he voluntarily raised the salaries of his branch managers twenty-five per cent. This was Mr. Gasnier's tribute to the enterprise of the Pathe salesforce that has brought the receipts on the serial, "Elaine," over the billion dollar mark. Pathe has surely accomplished great things in the picture business, and the well authenticated figures given out on the business done with "Elaine" will give the other film manufacturers much to think about.

FIRE CHIEFS ENTERTAINED.

On July 4 a benefit was given to the San Francisco Fire Department in the interest of its fund for entertaining the fire chiefs of United States and Canada at which many noted stage stars performed, among them being David Warfield and Al. Jolson. A Power's Six A motion picture projecting machine was loaned and operated by R. W. Horn, the Power's representative at the Fair, and the Vitagraph picture, "The Locked Door," was shown.

The machine was placed in the central box of the theatre, and it is a fact of some note that no booth was used by permission of the chief of the San Francisco Fire Department, thus demonstrating the machine was absolutely fireproof.

New Licensed Subjects

George Kleine to Release Two-Reel Productions Through General Film Company.

SOMETHING brand new in the form of a two-reel subject, to be released every Thursday through the General Film Company, is the announcement made by George Kleine upon his return to New York the present week.

"We have been working steadily for a considerable time preparing a series of two-reel subjects for release through the General Film Company," said Mr. Kleine. "I have been slow in announcing this increase in our output, recognizing as I do the present tendency to create mere footage in subjects of less than four or five reels' length.

Ethel Grandin.

"Miss Ethel Grandin, one of the most popular of film stars, will be seen in these releases. Nature has gifted Miss Grandin with the requisites necessary to screen sucess and I am certain, after reviewing a number of these pictures, she will prove more popular than ever in the series we are about to release."

That the well-known quality standards so long identified with features made by this house would be rigidly maintained in the contemplated two-reel subjects, was one of the points emphatically made by Mr. Kleine. In matters of personnel, settings, stories, etc., the shorter subjects will be counterparts of their more lengthy brethren.

Although only in the early twenties Miss Grandin can lay claim to a wider experience in public entertainment than many artists of twice her years. The first public appearance dates back to her early girlhood when she joined a musical comedy. Tiring of music and tinsel, she later secured an engagement with Joseph Jefferson and remained with him for two years, following this with another two-year period under the watchful eye of Chauncey Olcott. A year prior to her first motion picture experience she was featured in a vaudeville sketch which played the Orpheum and United time.

Then came the lure of the silent drama. Miss Grandin during the following four years was successively starred by the Imp Company, New York Motion Picture Company and the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. She left the latter organization to affiliate herself with the Smallwood Film Corporation, releasing what was known as the "Grandin Films" through the United Program.

Probably Miss Grandin's most noteworthy sucess was the feminine lead in "Traffic in Souls." This subject, which met with wide popularity throughout the nation, has inscribed her name in the upper realm of stardom.

FAVERSHAM TO APPEAR FOR METRO.

Metro makes the announcement that the services of William Faversham, the distinguished star, has been secured for another picture to be made by the B. A. Rolfe Company. The subject has not yet been selected, the directors of the Metro Company awaiting the return of Mr. Faversham from his vacation at Mattituck, Long Island, for consultation with him before deciding. They have several excellent propositions to submit to him that would still further advance his drawing powers for the screen. Mr. Faversham has been engaged by Metro for active work on the new production beginning early in September.

WILKERSON GOES TO SOUTHWESTERN AMUSEMENT CO.

W. R. Wilkerson, who for the past eight months has been connected with the Piedmont Amusement Company, as general booking manager for their chain of picture and vaudeville houses, has resigned his position with the above-named concern, to take up a similar connection with the Western Amusement Company. Mr. Wilkerson will make his headquarters in Hot Springs, the home office of the company.

New Universal Eastern Studio

Outline of the Elaborate Project Now in Course of Construction at Leonia Heights, Fort Lee, N. J.

WITHIN a few months' time a new motion picture studio and laboratory will be finished at Leonia Heights, Fort Lee, N. J. It will house the Eastern producing companies of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co. and will be an architectural, scientific expression of what brains and more brains, and much money can do when properly applied.

New Universal Studio at Leonia Heights, N. J., in Its Present State.

The Universal had appropriated a large sum for the building of Universal City, near Los Angeles, Cal. An Eastern studio, fireproof, foolproof, capable of providing facilities for the many busy Atlantic companies, was needed. Carl Laemmle and Robert H. Cochrane began to work over the project. What they started will be an evidence of Carl Laemmle's doctrine that the best acting, directing and management is worth the best home and advantages regardless of cost.

Approximately four acres of ground were purchased. Then John M. Nickolaus, one of the first motion picture camera men and a technical expert, was called into consultation. Nickolaus had installed the laboratories at Universal City and now runs things at the Universal's factory at Bayonne, where all the negative produced by the Eastern companies is developed and the positives printed. He went out and talked laboratories and studios with everybody whom he thought might have a good idea. These ideas he brought back carefully wrapped up, forget-proof, in his memory. Some were valuable.

The preliminary plans were prepared by William Sistrom, who has had considerable experience with engineering problems with big companies. These were turned over to Ernest Flagg, an architect of considerable renown. That was in November of last year; since then the work has been progressing rapidly and the buildings are beginning to take form. Descriptions of the various buildings follow:

The laboratory building, 150 feet by 104 feet, will be a model of what a laboratory should be. The lower floor is below grade with plenty of head-room even in the developing and wash rooms. On this floor will be the perforating, printing, developing, washing and drying rooms. The arrangement of these rooms has been so cleverly worked out that entrances to the "dark" rooms are absolutely "light tight" and yet free from all the twists and turns of the "maze entrances" usually considered necessary. On the upper floor is the assembling, inspection and polishing rooms, a chemical room in which all of the solutions used in the developing room are prepared and delivered to the developing tanks on the floor below through a complete system of pipes, title department, machine shop and superintendent's office. On both floors splendid arrangements for the comfort, convenience and safety of the 300 employees have been made.

Opening into, but detached from, every room in which film is handled, vaults are provided. To determine the proper design for these vaults an extensive series of tests were conducted in conjunction with the New York Board of Fire Underwriters and the National Fire Protection Association. The plant is designed to turn out half a million feet of film a day, but will handle without trouble 800 miles a week.

The Studio Administration Building, irregular in shape, 130 x 160 feet in size, will have two floors. On the ground floor will be a general office, manager's private office, scenario department including a general office and a number of small individual offices, nine directors' rooms, two projecting rooms, still picture department, Animated Weekly department, cutting and joining rooms, restaurant complete with kitchen, boiler room in which will be located the boilers for heating the entire plant including the laboratory, machinery rooms in whch the motor generators for the stage lighting will be located.

On the ground floor of the studio section will be 24 individual men's dressing rooms and the same number for women. Two large waiting and dressing rooms for "extra people" will accommodate one hundred men and women respectively. There will be a wardrobe room large enough to store costumes for the present plant and for contemplated additions.

On the second floor of the Administration Building will be a carpenter shop, scene painting room, scene dock and the property department. The property department will occupy the east section and consists of a main floor with three galleries, with elevators from the main floor to the top gallery. There will be also an elevator from the ground floor to the carpenter shop, which also connects with the stage floor. These departments open directly into the stage, 150 x 80 feet in size.

All buildings are constructed in accordance with the very latest fireproof standard, consisting of complete structural steel frame work with 12 inch masonry curtain walls. All interior partitions are of terra cotta block, with hard portland cement plaster finish. Because of the extremely large area it was necessary to make several of the interior partitions "fire walls." All openings in such walls being protected with double automatically closing "fire" doors. All other doors are fireproof, all window sash and door frames are of metal. In fact, as Sistrom says, unless someone gets past the gateman with a box of matches or a pencil in his pocket, there won't be any wood on the premises.

On the grounds will be a garage with sufficient accommodations for ten 7-passenger automobiles and one auto truck. There will also be a number of detached vaults for film storage, warehouses, etc.

The air conditioning plant will be of intense interest to technical experts. It is guaranteed to remove 99 per cent. of all foreign matter from 20,000 cubic feet of air per minute delivered into the drying room at a temperature of 70° and a relative humidity of 45 per cent. The temperature and humidity are under automatic control and are guaranteed not to vary more than 3 per cent with a variation in outside temperature from zero to 90°. On this proposition Semsch, of Flagg's organization, got in some of his best work and had the assistance of the expert engineers from the six biggest concerns in the country specializing in this class of work.

The plans call for much adornment of the surrounding grounds. There will be one Italian and one Spanish garden, two lakes and a fountain. The lakes will have a surface area of 5,000 square feet, an average depth of eight feet, and a capacity of 300,000 gallons of water. One lake will be higher than the other, but the lower can be raised. They may be either connected by a water fall or by a narrow stream spanned by a bridge. The water in the lake also serves as a reserve reservoir for the sprinkler system installed in the three buildings.

John M. Nickolaus, at present in charge of the Universal factory at Bayonne, will be in charge of the laboratory and will probably take many of his present staff of 250 persons with him to Fort Lee.

Julius Stern, long at the head of the Imp and Victor studios at No. 573 Eleventh avenue, New York City, and of the Champion studio at Coytesville, will be general manager of the plant.

"The improved facilities of the new studio will provide a new order of things in the conduct of scenario department," says Raymond I. Schrock, Scenario-in-Chief of the Eastern Studios. "A system of co-operation between author, director and actor will establish perfect understanding and remove friction.

"An elaborate and comprehensive card system will be installed with which may be kept a perpetual inventory of all stories received, eliminating loss of time and material.

"The scenario staff will include William Ellery Bergh and J. E. Warren, who are admirably equipped as readers. Mr. Bergh for many years was a contributor to the Dramatic Mirror, and Mr. Warren sat at Sanger & Jordan's play-reading desk for five years. Foreign language scholars in the department will have the keys to the rich literature of the Old World."

CLARA HORTON JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Little golden-haired Clara Horton, whose work with the Eclair Company has occasioned so much favorable comment from the general public, has joined the Universal's general stock company and plays an important role in "Just Jim," the first of Oscar A. C. Lund's Universal features.

Pathe Celebrates at Dinner

Heads of New York Offices and Exchange Men Wind Up Three-Day Convention with Banquet at Rector's.

AS A FITTING termination for the three-day convention of Pathe branch managers, the visitors and the heads of the departments at the home office, in New York, were entertained at a banquet in Rector's on the evening of July 14, Vice-President Charles Dupuis and General Manager Louis Gasnier acting as hosts. Some sixty Pathe boosters joined in celebrating the passing of the million dollar mark in "The Exploits of Elaine" business. Addresses were made by the men responsible for the production and marketing of this most successful of serials and still greater things were promised for "Neal of the Navy" and "Wallingford," which soon will be in the hands of the exchange men.

R. F. Furman, director of the Pathe exchanges, in the capacity of toastmaster, called on directors, actors, department heads and salesmen. All of the speakers expressed a legitimate pride in the fame of "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Exploits of Elaine" and confidence in the advance of Pathe as a producer of important feature pictures, as well as serials. Jules Burnstein, manager of the New York exchange, acting as spokesman for the department heads and the visiting branch managers, presented Messrs. Dupuis and Gasnier with handsome gold watches. In acknowledging the gifts, both Mr. Dupuis and Mr. Gasnier said in effect that in working for the house of Pathe they were working directly for the interests of every man connected with it.

During the evening two "Neal of the Navy" songs, written by members of the Pathe staff, were introduced and sung with spirit by the diners. Arnold Daly made one of the cleverest speeches of the evening. Among others who responded to Toastmaster Furman were Paul Fuller, Jr., L. D. Wharton, Edward Jose, Donald Mackenzie, and H. T. Kingsbury.

Several of the branch managers brought cheering reports from the locations they covered. They agreed that "The Perils of Pauline" was still very much alive and that it was no trouble at all to dispose of prints of "The Exploits." A twenty-five per cent increase in salaries no doubt added to the optimism of the exchange men.

Present at the banquet were Charles Dupuis, Louis Gasnier, R. F. Furman, Paul Fuller, Jr., H. T. Kingsbury, J. Wessel, W. F. Hurst, P. A. Parsons, George B. Seitz, M. Ramirez, F. H. Knocke, P. Brunet, W. Van Doren, A. R. Caughey, C. Julien, L. S. Williams, J. W. Buck, L. D. Wharton, Edward Jose, Arnold Daly, Donald Mackenzie, Edwin Arden, Fred Beecroft, Kendall Gillett, John W. Kyle, C. J. Fitch, William C. Viebrock, W. E. Keating, G. Bardet, F. C. Davidson, William Marsh, F. Duffy, John McLean, L. E. Franconi, C. Alfred Karpen, M. R. Regalado, Bertram Millhauser, Douglas Bronston, C. S. Edwards, Lynde Denig, Harry J. Walsh, Ralph Navarro, A Rousseau, G. Van Wervecks, I. W. Goodfield, S. Bernfield, Jules Burnstein, F. Flarity, G. H. Atwood, H. M. Osborn, G. R. Allison, C. E. Holah, H. C. Holah, S. B. Sampson, F. C. Quimby, J. S. Phillips, J. E. Kirk, C. S. Edwards, Jr., S. E. Abeles, J. R. Johnson, V. H. Hodupp and W. P. Allen.

Itala Company's Plans

Harry Raver, Head of the American Company, Announces Its Policy—First Production Nearly Complete.

THE final scenes of the first New York-Torino production of the Itala Film Company were completed last Saturday and the company of Itala players, headed by Ernest Pagano, the herculean "Maciste" of Cabiria fame, started westward the following Monday to visit the Panama exposition. They will remain in and around San Francisco until completion of arrangements for taking over one of the large California studios soon to be available.

Harry R. Raver, head of the Itala Film Company of America, has been reticent about the new policy of his company, details of his operations being withheld until definite statements could be made. It is said on good authority, however, that the new production just finished offers a genuine surprise in picture staging aside from the "unmasking" of "Maciste" who, in Cabiria, appeared in the make-up of an Ethiopian. In the new production the massive Ernest Pagano is seen in his natural character and is altogether a handsome and engaging person. His feats of strength during the action of the photodrama are said to be wonderfully interesting, much value being attached to the close connection of the plot of the story to Cabiria, the present offering being a natural sequel, even though the story is said to be laid in modern times.

Mr. Raver hopes to have the new "Maciste" film assembled and in readiness for a private showing to representatives of the press about the first of August. At that time suggestions for a suitable title will be accepted from accredited reviewers. A cash prize in gold will be awarded by Mr. Raver for the best title offered.

The word "Maciste" must be included in the title accepted, however, this being a stipulation of Gabrielle D'Annunzio, who created the character and suggested the plot. Agnes L. Bain wrote the working scenario after these suggestions and Pastrone, the director of Cabiria, staged the European portion of the production, those scenes being the most important.

The total length of the "Maciste" production is said to be about eight thousand feet. Mr. Raver would make no statement as to the possible method of exploiting the new film other than to say that the heavy expense involved in producing the negative might prohibit its use in a feature program and a tour of legitimate theaters seemed more advisable.

NEW AMUSEMENT PUBLICATION.

Walter K. Hill, formerly New York representative of the Billboard, has undertaken the publication of a semi-monthly periodical devoted to the interests of Fairs and Carnivals. The name of the new journalistic venture is Fair and Carnival News. From the contents of the first number it would appear that there is a strong and growing demand for the new paper, which is bright, breezy and newsy. Good luck to it.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

Changing Conditions in the Trade.

NO STRONGER indications of the growth and progress of the moving picture industry can be cited than the present trend towards the creation of better facilities to meet the rapidly changing conditions in the trade itself. These changing conditions are compelling attention in all three of the great departments of the trade—the manufacturing, the distributing and the exhibiting—and they spring from the same source—public opinion.

Men and women the world over have espoused the cause of the moving picture, and they have grown to look upon it as their special and pet amusement. This is particularly true among the great masses of the people, and largely true among the so-called better classes.

Irrespective of class, they have all become educated, more or less, on the points of difference between a picture that is good—morally, artistically and technically—and one that is not. The exhibitor is on the firing line, and he is the first to feel the irresistible, onward sweep of this increasingly intelligent public opinion, as expressed by his patrons. He must pay heed to it, and so he lets the exchange from which he gets his service know of it; and the manager of the exchange—if he be abreast of the times and does not seek false repose in the belief that he can pooh pooh the exhibitor out of his opinion—will pass it on to the manufacturer. And the manufacturers must rise to the occasion, or, most assuredly, others, who can and will, must take their places.

It is a matter of great congratulation that our leading manufacturers in the moving picture field have always engaged in that wholesome rivalry for quality which has brought the moving picture to the grade of excellence that it can boast of today. Time as yet has been too short to show the disappearance of all the laggards and incompetents; but it is merciless in the application of the rule.

In connection with the foregoing I shall chronicle the recent meeting of a number of prominent exhibitors of the United States in the Hotel Sherman, this city, Thursday, July 15.

The object of the meeting—which was a closed meeting—as given in the minutes kindly furnished me by Wm. Sievers, of St. Louis, by whom the meeting was called, was to effect economies for exhibitors.

The official business transacted at the meeting, as announced in the minutes, is given in the four paragraphs following:

1. By forming a corporation made up of the principal theater owners of the United States.

2. To maintain an office in New York City for the purpose of selecting pictures for use on this circuit, with proper restrictions as to their further exploitation.

3. To buy pictures when it is deemed advisable, making selections from every avenue, giving our theaters the very best productions available.

4. To arrange for the manufacture of high class photoplays. Membership to be limited to individuals, firms and corporations, owning or leasing and operating theaters, and using exclusively high grade programs.

An explanatory circular letter will be sent out to leading exhibitors throughout the United States concerning membership in this corporation.

While not officially stated, I understand that no more than one member shall be admitted to the corporation from the smaller towns. Just what number shall be permitted to become members from the large cities has not been learned, nor do I believe an agreement was arrived at during this meeting. However, a meeting for permanent organization will be held in the Hotel Sherman, on the morning of August 25, to perfect plans to carry out the objects agreed on.

In all justice to the purpose and aims of this corporation of leading exhibitors throughout the country, judgment must be withheld until all the facts are known; but it is timely to remind the organizers that anything in these aims that will restrict in any manner the rights of exhibitors who are not members will be doomed to disappointment.

If the working out of these aims shall be for the good of all exhibitors and for the trade in general, then let that working out have god-speed; if not, let it spell "failure."

The following exhibitors constituted a temporary committee on membership and organization:

J. E. Bryant, Waterloo, Ia., representing northern and western Iowa; William Sievers, St. Louis, Mo., representing Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas, Tex., representing Texas; Tom H. Boland, Oklahoma City, representing Oklahoma; N. H. Gordon, Boston, Mass., representing the New England States; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee, Wis., representing Wisconsin; Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn., representing Minnesota; J. H. Kunsky, Detroit, Mich., representing Michigan; E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland, O., representing Ohio and western Pennsylvania; A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Ia., representing central and eastern Iowa; Aaron Jones, Chicago, Ill., representing Illinois; F. J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind., representing Indiana; J. Ditmars, Louisville, Ky., representing Kentucky and Tennessee; Tom Moore, Washington, D. C., representing Washington City and Virginia; J. Eugene Pearce, New Orleans, La., representing Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Arkansas and Louisiana; Max Spiegel, New York City, representing New York City; M. H. Mark, New York City, representing New York State; Turner & Dahnken, San Francisco, representing the Pacific Coast, and H. A. Sims, representing Salt Lake City, Utah, Idaho and Wyoming.

It was voted that the members of the organization committee should each contribute $50 for preliminary expenses, payable to William Sievers, New Grand Central Theater, St. Louis, Mo.

It was further agreed that each member of the organization committee shall pass on the membership in his own territory, but shall have no power to take in members not within the membership qualifications.

It was also agreed that membership for the present is entirely tentative.

E. H. Hulsey, Tom Moore, J. Eugene Pearce, Turner & Dahnken and H. A. Sims, who were not present, were represented by Wm. Sievers as proxy; Max Spiegel and M. H. Mark were represented by E. Mandelbaum as proxy.

An Appreciation of the "World."

Under the heading "'Spose Shakespeare Heard of This," Kitty Kelly, the photoplay critic of the Chicago Tribune, wrote the following article on the six-page compilation of "Books and Plays in Pictures" that appeared in the Moving Picture World in the issue of July 17:

This week, July 17, the Moving Picture World carries six about as interesting pages as are to be found in any current publication, without as well as within the pale of the movies. Their appeal is not only to the picture fan, but to the would-be fan, the literary light, the educator, the clubwoman, anybody interested in culture from any angle.

"Book and Plays in Pictures" is the heading of the compilation arranged by Margaret I. MacDonald. It analyzes into an alphabetical list of the authors, from George Ade to Emile Zola, with every letter in use except Q and X, with the titles of their productions which have been made into pictures since 1910. All kinds of authors, from Upton Sinclair to William Shakespeare, to the number of 337, have enlisted the interest of picture makers, with all kinds of productions to the number of 596.

Of these, however, a number of the subjects unrestrained by copyright have been pictured by several different firms, so the list represents perhaps a hundred more available productions. "Uncle Tom's Cabin," for instance, was done in 1910 by Thanhouser, in one part, by Vitagraph in three parts; in 1913 by Kalem in two parts, by Imp in three parts, and in 1914 by the World in five parts. There's a great opportunity to suit one's taste in measurement and maybe in management.

Again, some authors have been more favored than others by producers. Dickens, for instance, is represented by fourteen of his productions, of which there are twenty-one variations. Whereas, from Grimm there has been gleaned only one solitary sample, "Beauty and the Beast," done into three parts by the Rex company in 1910.

The list represents a most catholic taste, for producers have strayed from Homer to Louis Joseph Vance, from Maurice Maeterlinck to Mrs. Augusta Evans. John Bunyan and Florence Barclay march along together in Filmland, in company with Anatole France, Anna Katherine Green, Victor Hugo, Mary J. Holmes, Maupassant, Carolyn Wells and others of association as singular.

As an assisting guide to organizations desiring a good picture for some special occasion this list seems to me to have a special mission. Some one said that it wouldn't help much because of the red tape bound about the booking of pictures, but if clubs and schools are earnest enough in their desire to secure certain pictures their needs will probably be accommodated by the wary exchange man. At least, this list gives an idea of what is in existence and from whom to make inquiries.

The list's significance is in its showing of how slightly touched the great field of literature has been by the cinema. Many of the things already done can be repeated with different handling and different players, and there is a wealth of material to be had for the thinking, back behind the day of the copyright in force. It doesn't look as though we needed very soon to depend solely on modern clap-trap.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co., accompanied by Mrs. Hutchinson and his two sons, Hobart and Winston, left for Santa Barbara last week. The Misses Freuler, daughters of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, were also in the party. They made the trip through Montana, Washington and down the Pacific Coast to their destination, taking in the 'Frisco Exposition on their way.

M. Loewenstein, owner of the Lawrence theater, 1962 Lawrence avenue, this city, called Tuesday, July 13. Mr. Loewenstein purchased this house six weeks ago from W. A. Williams. The Lawrence seats 229 and is situated in a fine residential neighborhood. Admissions of five and ten cents are charged at the Lawrence, the first price being the rule on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. Ten cents is charged on the remaining days of the week, when five or six reels of the regular service of the General Film Co. and features are used. In the former case four reels of the regular service of the General Film Co. form the program.

J. L. Kempner, of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., was seen at the Hotel Sherman one day last week. Mr. Kempner visited the city specially to establish an exclusive agency for his company. Maurice Wolf, of Chicago, was appointed Chicago representative. Mr. Kempner reported very good business for his screen, and stated that it had been installed in the Harper, 20th Century, the Panorama and other theaters in this city, recently. Mr. Kempner, who is also interested in "Prohibition," stated that the Central Film Co. owns the state rights for Illinois only, and not for Wisconsin, Indiana and Iowa, the rights for which are owned by the Wm. H. Bell Film Corporation of this city.

H. M. Warner, secretary and treasurer of the Standard Photo-Play Distributors, Inc., was in the city Thursday, July 15, to meet Wm. L. Merrill, of Minneapolis, owner of the United Film Exchange in that city. Mr. Warner was arranging with Mr. Merrill to close the Minneapolis territory for the Standard program. The previous week Mr. Warner and Al. Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of the company, were in the city and closed for Canada, Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, for the Standard program. Since then they have also closed for Cincinnati, Detroit and Cleveland. Mr. Lichtman left for the Pacific Coast by way of Dallas, Saturday, July 10, to close southwestern and Pacific Coast territory.

C. R. Plough, manager of the Anti-Trust Film Exchange for Universal, this city, was seen one day last week. Mr. Plough informed me that a chain of houses has been established by Plough, Connors and Koffman, Inc., and that all the houses on the circuit are doing fine business with Universal service. The following houses are owned or controlled by the corporation: The Casino, Clark and Kinzie streets; the Alhambra, 19th and State streets; the Liberty, 3705 W. Fullerton street; the Garden, Marshfield and Lincoln avenue and the Starland, Michigan City, Ind.

The Terminal Theater Co., of which Nathan Ascher is president, leased the Cairo theater, at the southwest corner of Clark and Balmoral, from the Cairo Theater Co., one day last week. The lease is for 10 years at $7,200 a year.

Anna Pavlowa, the famous Russian dancer, is as busy as a bee these days and evenings at Sans Souci Park and the Midway Gardens. Daily she is appearing before the camera at Sans Souci in "The Dumb Girl of Portici," and up till late at nights before vast audiences in the open air Midway Gardens. Notwithstanding her strenuous life just now she professes a marked liking for working before the camera.

"The Birth of a Nation" will soon close its second record-breaking month at the Illinois theater. Present indications point that it will be the great, big financial success of the present theatrical year in Chicago. The final papers of the appeal granted the city by Judge Wm. Fenimore Cooper, were signed Saturday, July 17. Assistant Corporation Counsel Louis B. Anderson and George L. Reker secured the papers. The Appellate Court adjourned on that date, however, and will not be convened until October, so that the exhibition of the picture will go on unrestricted, in the interim, so long as no ordinances are violated. At the dedication of St. Mark's Methodist Episcopal Church, which is the largest colored church of that denomination in Chicago, last week, "The Birth of a Nation" was denounced in the sermon as being unjust in its delineation of negro character. Bishop W. F. McDowell, of Evanston, and Bishop Isaiah B. Scott, bishop of Africa, were present.

Out in the James C. King Home for Old Men, this city, "Kid" Williams, as he is affectionately called, or the Marquis De Lafayette, as he is properly known, is living. He is now 99 years old, and at the time of the Civil War was considered too old to engage in that strife; but he paid bounties to several men to fight in his place. He saw "The Birth of a Nation" the other day at the Illinois theater, and declared it one of the greatest treats of his life. The old gentleman is a real fan of moving pictures, and takes a special delight in seeing Charlie Chaplin on the screen. Referring to Chaplin's antics, he says, "It beats all how he can do 'em. It keeps me young watchin' him."

Whil 800 peploe were viewing "The High Road" in the Criterion theater, 1220 Sedgwick street, this city, one night last week, the film in the projecting machine caught fire. Fred Gallszon, the operator, preserved his presence of mind and ran out of the steel cage, slamming the door shut behind him. The audience became exceedingly noisy in protesting the interruption, but they soon noticed smoke issuing from the operating room. They were about to rush pell-mell for the doors, when Paul Sittner, the manager, instructed them to be calm and to go out orderly, as there was no danger. No one was injured.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, managers of the Studebaker, have completed arrangements with the Metro Pictures Corporation to show the first exclusive releases of that firm, in this city, beginning Monday, July 19. The first screen attraction of this make at the Studebaker will be "The Right of Way," adapted from Sir Gilbert Parker's story of that name, with Wm. Faversham in the leading role. On Monday, June 26, the first of the weekly releases in which Francis X. Bushman is starred, will be shown.

The La Salle, another Loop playhouse, will show moving pictures throughout the summer, beginning Monday, July 19. The opening screen attraction will be Essanay's fine six-reel feature, "The Blindness of Virtue."

"The Melting Pot" opened an indefinite run at the Fine Arts theater, Saturday, July 17. This fine feature of the Cort Film Corporation, with Walker Whiteside in the leading role, promises great success. It has been extensively advertised by Alfred Hamburger.

Arthur Herbert Sawyer, general representative of the Cort Film Corporation, has been busy as a nailer ever since he landed in Chicago, about two weeks ago. After selling the Celebrated Players Film Co. the rights for "The Melting Pot" for Illinois and Wisconsin, he began a strenuous publicity campaign. Last week he pulled on a private exhibition at the United States Naval Training Station, Great Lakes, before 800 recruits. Chaplain Thompson, of the station, gave Mr. Sawyer a flattering recommendation of the picture, saying, among other things, "A more inspiring, soul-refreshing picture story I have never seen." Friday night, July 16, the picture was shown at the Hamilton Club, one of Chicago's most select social organizations. This exhibition was engineered by Mr. Sawyer, and given under the auspices of the Chicago Evening Post. Much interest is already being taken here, Mr. Sawyer says, as to the next production by Mr. Cort. It will be a six-reel society drama, in which Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle are featured. Mr. Sawyer tells me he has already received some big offers on options for state rights. This picture will be ready to be shown here about August 20. On Wednesday, July 14, Mr. Sawyer went to Milwaukee and gave a private exhibition of "The Melting Pot" at the Wisconsin Hotel. On the strength of it he booked the picture at the Davidson theater for a run, to follow "The Birth of a Nation."

M. H. Hoffman, who has been manager of exchanges for Universal in New York for some time past has been appointed general manager of exchanges throughout this country and Canada. He was in Chicago all last week.

Carle Laemmle stopped over in the city Tuesday, July 20, on his way from California to New York City.

The Great Lincoln Highway from coast to coast is being scrutinized by the searching eye of the moving picture camera. Three officials from the Lincoln highway board, camera men and representatives of the Studebaker Automobile Company have been engaged in the work since the middle of May. Some magnificent scenic views have already been obtained, and the films will be educational in many respects.

FLANNERY WITH BIG FOUR.

P. J. Flannery, until recently with the New York Review, is now connected with the publicity department of the Big Four. Mr. Flannery was with the Review for the past five years, and previous to that was connected with the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. While with the Review, he conducted its motion picture section.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA SETS THE PACE!

Moving Picture and Lantern Projection included in the Summer Course of Instruction.

ONE of the most important and interesting events in the history of the educational moving picture is taking place this summer at the University of Minnesota, University Farm, where the principals of consolidated schools and graded schools throughout the state are being given an opportunity to learn how to manipulate and care for the projection machines with which most of the new consolidated schools are provided, as well as the apparatus and means for generating the current for lighting.

According to information received first hand the instruction is given in a practical way. Students dismantle machines, learn to care for the parts and study the effects of condensers, lenses and adjustments. Lectures on the conducting of the laboratory are being delivered by Prof. B. L. Newkirk to some hundred principals who are in attendance.

In view of the fact that the principals of these schools are leaders in rural social center work, and in many instances are providing regular weekly moving picture entertainments for their respective centers, and in view of the fact that the example of Minnesota and its University may be followed by other states, universities and academic institutions, the event throws an optimistic light on the future of the educational film, while the ultimate effect on the market is bound to be stimulating.

EDUCATING THE EDUCATED.

HE knows most who seeks to know more; he knows least "who knows it all," and needs to know no more. True educators are ever searching after knowledge, especially the means of acquiring and imparting knowledge; whatever facilitates either of these ends is readily sought for or welcomed by them. The acceptance or rejection of those aids which increase learning marks the progressive or non-progressive educator; the ultra-conservative is often a hinderer of many advances. Already the adoption of the Kinematographic methods of education have stamped those adopting them as among the most advanced educators of the day, both in America and Europe; the progress they have already secured adds the fruit of experience to the wise foresight of their intelligence. Strengthened by these results they are now advising all educators to avail themselves of the advantages of the universal illustrator and expositor. It may be asked, is it necessary to so advise educators, are not all sufficiently alive to the importance of the occasion? Strange to say the answer must be in the negative.

There are those educators in whose power the use of kinematography is vested and who deliberately hinder its benefits to those who could be most helped. With wisdom seemingly profound one of these gentlemen refuses to use the pictures "until they can talk," meaning, of course, the synchronized talking machine. Another equally profound "is going to wait until they are classified." Lacking adaptability himself he is a stumbling block to others. Each of these representative gentlemen believe in the benefits of swimming, no doubt, but would advise the precautionary measure of becoming adepts in the art of swimming before going into the water.

It is a pity that where educators are mere knowledge gathering machines there is not some one nearby with sufficient jolting power to cause them to see that the means of disseminating knowledge is perhaps of more importance than the mere gathering of it.

A jealous regard of the fine art of teaching in class room or lecture room should not preclude the idea of doing things a little different to what "teachers and professors always have done."

If kinematography is going to revolutionize the whole course of pedagogy educators will do wisely if they handle and not strangle the situation, and, while it is difficult to presume to teach teachers, yet "the wise seeketh knowledge" and wisdom directs and demands that that which is best, most perfect and most powerful shall have preference to the exclusion of opinions, prejudices or established ideas. The little doors of knowledge have now become wide open gates, the trickling streams have become floods; time and distance have been annihilated so that "he who runs may read."

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION OF AMERICA.

Being an Evolution of What Was Formerly Known as the Katherine F. Carter, Inc., Educational and Motion Picture Entertainment Bureau.

By Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN CASE the reader be misled by the wording of the subtitle, it might be well to state that Mrs. Katherine F. Carter is still the predominating spirit of this enterprising concern which has greatly enlarged and newly named itself. In other words Mrs. Carter is President of the Educational Films Corporation of America, the ambition of which is to meet the hungry demands of educators and would-be educators throughout the United States and Canada as far as is possible, with available material in the line of educational films.

It might be truthfully stated further that the aim of this corporation is directed also at uplift in the quality of moving picture entertainment, for, as in the past, they stand ready to furnish moving picture entertainments for clubs, hotels and private residences, and also to equip schools, churches and educational institutions with the necessities of moving picture projection.

The vital change in the manipulation of affairs at the Carter institution lies in a greater freedom to work and an enlargement of their distribution area through the acquisition of capital adequate to the needs of such a concern, as well as an extensive addition to their library of educational films. Mrs. Carter will also keep an eye open for refined comedies and worthy feature productions in order to be able to supply such institutions as stated above with entertaining films suitable for exhibition before children, as well as adults. In fact the child side of the question is to be given special attention by Mrs. Carter.

From a limited number of exchanges located at central points throughout the country it is the intention of the Educational Films Corporation of America to distribute the contents of their library in an intelligent and efficient manner, bringing themselves in touch with exhibitors, churches, educational institutions, etc., within the radius of each exchange through the distribution of their literature on the subject, and by otherwise appropriate and timely advertising. These exchanges are expected to be established and in working order in the course of a month or so.

It may not be generally known that a cameraman is now, and has been for some time past, employed by this company in photographing portions of our own land that have not been photographed before. The result of his efforts will be known as "American Vacation Pictures." One of these entitled "When the Mountains Call," was given an extensive review in the columns of this magazine a short time ago.

It may not be an altogether irrational belief that the education of the exhibiting public with regard to the extent of production of the educational film, the where and how of obtaining it, as well as its proper use and presentation, has been sadly neglected in favor of the merely entertaining film which has been, and will doubtless continue to be of vastly more importance to the manufacturer from a financial point of view for some time to come. Nevertheless, inquiries which reach the Moving Picture World from time to time bear evidence that there is more truth than fiction in the statement that propaganda on this end of the business has been neglected to a very large extent.

Entering the large field at this time with plenty of enthusiasm and new ideas on the matter of attacking the market, the success of Mrs. Carter and her business associates in the valuable work which they have begun is a foregone conclusion. And we are sure that we are voicing the sentiments of educators throughout the country when we wish them a patronage worthy of the undertaking.

PROF. R. L. GARNER INTERESTED IN EDUCATIONAL MOVING PICTURES.

PROF. R. L. GARNER, who enjoys a world-wide reputation as an authority of the wild animals of tropical Africa, is one of the latest and most valuable additions to the ranks of educators now taking an especial interest in the possibilities of the moving picture in relation to the special lines of those studies in which they have excelled.

No doubt Prof. Garner is best known as the greatest authority on anthropoid apes, as in the study of these animals he spent eleven years at one time in Africa living for weeks in the jungle protected from dangers by a cage he specially constructed, the report of which has become historic. During the last twenty-three years Prof. Garner has spent upward of twenty years in Africa, having made seven journeys there in that time. It is not very widely known that the famous gorilla in the New York Bronx Zoo, which has lived longer in captivity than any other specimen, was brought especially from Africa by Prof. Garner, in the face of much doubt by scientists that such a thing was possible. Perhaps no American is better acquainted with Central Africa, he being familiar with topography, fauna and flora, as well as the native resources, language and institutions of the inhabitants. These studies which have become the subjects of lectures delivered before the leading educational institutions in England and America, have made the name of Prof. Garner familiar as an authority.

We understand there is a probability that Prof. Garner may again visit Africa for the especial purpose of securing films of those scenes and animal habits with which he is so familiar. If, fortunately he does so, we may be assured of a series of educational pictures superior in a class by themselves which will be of exceeding great value. Should he undertake this effort we wish him every success.

British Notes

THROUGH the first consignment of copies of the Johnson-Willard fight film for Great Britain being lost on the Lusitania, the original track show dated for a month ago was not held until last week, when the first unspooling of the film, from which America appears to be deprived, took place at the Shaftesbury Pavilion. A number of celebrities in the sporting world were present, including Johnson himself. The photography was the subject of openly expressed admiration all around and Mr. E. Weil, who is handling the film on this side, predicts heavy bookings. So far no objection has been raised to its exhibition and it starts its career next week as a star attraction on Moss' Empire theaters, a circuit of vaudeville houses.

The intervention of Italy into the war has been productive, among other things, of a crop of rumors concerning the intentions of Italian manufacturers of moving picture films. An indiscreet gossip has been kind enough to flutter into the Gerrard street dovecotes with information of a general migration to America, and although this—with the single exception of the Itala Company—is as pure a fabrication as ever perpetrated it has been sufficient to warrant official contradiction. Furthermore, two Italian companies are even guaranteeing delivery of their releases in Great Britain.

The first topical film of manoeuvres in the Dardanelles is to hand this week from the operators of the Gaumont Company. Naval operations are depicted with an air of genuine reality, and one scene shows the battleship "Goliath" shortly before she was torpedoed.

The renewed invasion of the countryside by comedians of the type of Chaplin, Ritchie and other personified parodies of the American dude has encouraged the Homeland Production Company of Gerrard street to venture into the arena with a series of feature comedies with the vaudeville humorist, Billy Merson, in the lead. Rejoicing under the sobriquet "Kine-Billy," he starts his screen career in a fortnight's time with a "Spanish Love Spasm."

A famous song of bygone days was "My Old Dutch," which Mr. Albert Chevalier scored effectively with in the Metropolis. This song, fashioned to the requirements of the ideographer, has made a pretty specimen of sentiment in celluloid, and under the auspices of the Ideal Film Renting Company is down for early release. Chevalier himself takes the lead with Florence Turner as his "old Dutch," and throughout the length of the film the acting leaves nothing for the lovers of pathos to desire. Larry Trimble is the producer and it should be sufficient to say that this is regarded as his best work in this country.

Although no definite announcement has been made upon the subject and a general desire among those concerned to keep it dark is more or less manifest, it is a well-known fact that the Northcliffe publications, the English countertype to the Hearst series in America, are extensively interested in the recently established Regal Film Company of London. A large modern studio in Hammersmith is already in service for the production mainly of serial films of stories to be run in the respective publications of Lord Northcliffe concurrently with their appearance on the screen. Big things are promised from both sides as soon as the company settles down to a normal schedule of working. The first picture, "His Little Lordship," will be ready in the autumn.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

Nitra Frazer

NITRA FRAZER, who has become identified with Vitagraph Comedies, in which Wally Van (Cutey) directs and plays the male leads, was christened Anitra Frazer MacTavish. When it was suggested she adopt a name just as pleasing and one not quite so long, she simply dropped the letter "A" from her given name and eliminated her surname. As Nitra Frazer, she became known all over the country as one of the best light comedy comediennes.

Miss Frazer was born on De Kalb Avenue, in Brooklyn, New York, on April 21st, 1892, and although of a decided Scotch caste of features, a heritage from her father, is a thorough American. Her father, William Caruth MacTavish, was born in Mt. Saint Vincent, West Indies, and was British Consul of the Islands during the year 1847.

Nitra Frazer.

It was Miss Frazer's good fortune to be selected as a member of De Wolf Hopper's Company in "The Pied Piper of Hamlin," from which she graduated to "The Jolly Bachelors." It was during the latter engagement she was really "discovered" by Werba and Leuscher and given an important part in "The Spring Maid."

Miss Frazer, like numbers of professional people, whose time during the summer hung heavy on their hands, essayed a trial of the moving pictures. Also like a number of other professionals, she became enamoured of pictures and decided to remain. The Vitagraph Company was nearest Miss Frazer's home and quite naturally she applied to the company at Flatbush, the heads of which accepted her without question. Her screen debut was a decided success and she was enrolled as a stock member to play leads with Wally Van. Among the principal pictures in which Miss Frazer has appeared: "The Man Behind the Door," "Love, Snow and Ice," "The Cutey Series," "The Serpent's Tooth," "Welcome to Bohemia" and "Cutey Fortune Hunting," in which Miss Frazer was featured, are the most important.

EDWIN STEVENS JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Edwin Stevens, the latest acquisition of the Universal for their regular program, is perhaps one of the best-known character actors in America. He has appeared with success in every branch of the theatrical profession, including drama, musical comedy and vaudeville, and now makes his debut for the screen as a Universal star. He will be remembered as "The Devil" in the popular Molnar play of that name, produced at the Garden Theatre by Henry W. Savage, where the production had a long, successful run. The play in which Mr. Stevens will star for the Universal has as yet not been decided, but several strong plays are under consideration and an announcement will be made shortly.

The Big U organization are adding well-known names to their long list of celebrities which will appear on their program from time to time and that of Edwin Stevens is one they are very proud of.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Don't Do It.

EVIDENTLY exhibitors believe that the public likes to be humbugged any old way. When Barnum wrote that revered phrase, he had in mind a clever sell; something that would take the stinger out of the sting. He did not mean that the public wanted downright and deliberate falsehoods.

Many exhibitors are using Keystone Chaplins stripped with an "Essanay presents" because the public knows that Chaplin has gone over to the Essanay company. If they know that, they'll know it's a year old Keystone. If they know that, they'll know how to believe the exhibitor in future. It is unfair to Essanay to present old films under their names. It does not matter whether these Keystones be good or bad. It is not a question of quality but of credit.

Jimquins.

James C. Quinn likes the P. T. O. advertisement, apparently, since his newest for the Isis, Los Angeles, is built on those lines. It is a white strip, printed in blue, and folded. The back reads "go around to the front," and the front merely reads

READ THIS QUICK.

Then grab your hat and - you turn to the inside page and find hurry right over to hurry right over to the Isis theater for the following reasons the reasons being the week's program. Mr. Quinn likes Pen Print, both light and bold, and it certainly gives an attractive and odd looking job. The trouble is that you need a twelve point to get an eight point effect since the ascenders and descenders are so long.

Mr. Quinn is doing some capital work for the Isis. He has the faculty of getting up novelties that do not cost much and are worth more than they cost. Too often the cost of the novelty is in excess of its value.

Mostly Good.

W. H. Seitzler, of the Princess, Fargo, N. D., sends in some press work, most of which is good. He ran "The Nigger" for example, and picked up the fact that the picture showed the executive mansion at Atlanta, in the public eye at the moment because of the Frank case. But he ran the fact in eight point instead of 18 point, though there was plenty of room. The entire advertisement is weak in that it tries to tell too much for the room they have. Newspaper stuff should either be one single fact in an eight point paragraph backed up by catchlines, or it should be an harmonious arrangement of large type, easily read. Mr. Seitzler knows how to do it, as two other advertisements show; one for "The Nigger," a quarter page, and another for "The Christian," the latter taking a full page, with a large rule cross for the attractor. Most exhibitors have used the cross for their Christian advertisements, and mostly it has worked out well. This sample is unusually good.

More importantly, he backs up his advertising with smartly written press notice. One of his press stunts was to invite the clergy to see "The Christian" as his guests. This paragraph from a letter from the Rev. W. Newton Ward, of St. John's Episcopal Church, Fargo, can be used with good effect by others, not for the "Christian" alone, but for the comment on pictures in general.

> I wish to thank you for the kind invitation and letter inviting me to see the play called "The Christian" at your theater last week. I with others who went along with me enjoyed the play very much, and congratulate you on obtaining such a good film with such good moral teaching. I wish it were possible for you to obtain many such films with good moral teachings such as the above, and I am sure that you would have just as many attend, if not more, than when you have films without any lesson whatsoever. Yet I do not mean that you should not have comic pictures once in a while, I must say that I do enjoy them also so long as there is nothing vulgar about them.
> In writing you this, I feel sure that I voice the sentiment of the clergy. The church is not against moving pictures, at least the Episcopal church is not, for the people must have amusement, but the church is against plays and pictures which appeal to the baser self, or to sensuality. Of course the church is against Sunday shows, and I am glad that they are not allowed in Fargo on Sunday.

The Church is against Sunday picture shows of a general sort, but if exhibitors would make more of an effort to get the better class of pictures for that day, the clergy probably would not object.

One of the grave errors that the exhibitors are making is their intolerance of the educational, the scenic and the industrial.

Again!

W. E. De Croteau, of the Auditorium, Taunton, Mass., sends in an invitation to attend the inauguration of the Paramount service. It is not only printed in Old English, but in a small size, mostly, and on a paper mottled yellow and cream. If Mr. De Croteau will go down to some regular printer and force him to show samples of "shaded" letters, he'll never again believe that O. E. is the only thing for invitations.

A well worded announcement in regular type accompanies the invitation. Possibly the "You are invited" will lead recipients to decipher the rest of the invitation.

Stock should be white or a solid tint and for invitations only dead white paper or card should be used. Deckled or serrated edges should be taboo and a mottled stock is never effective. Mr. De Croteau can write good advertisements, but his printer betrays his confidence in stock and type.

A New Contest.

J. A. Goldstein, of the Lumberg, Niagara Falls, has a new idea for getting his program advertisements read. Instead of the common missing word or misspelled word, he has words in different advertisements from which a letter has been dropped. These letters form a word and the prizes are awarded to those who find the word. We have always believed that the first misspelled word contest was invented to cover up bad composition or ignorance. This sounds more like a real contest and less like an excuse.

Mr. Goldstein has his work done by the job department of a local paper and gets press work in the sheet on the strength of it. Like many others he uses part of the issue for door knobs and the rest for house use.

And lastly he says he hopes to improve on the grade of paper used. This really is not necessary. No one puts a four cent stamp on a two cent letter and the paper used seems to be good enough.

Wrong Town.

Harry J. Leland, of the Strand, Woodland, Calif., writes:

> In your issue of last week an announcement card of the Strand Theater, Sacramento, Calif., was rightly censored, but the Strand Theater, Sacramento, was made the goat for the sins of the writer caused by the omission of the name of our little town, viz.—Woodland, Calif.
> The Strand in Sacramento, owned and managed by W. S. Webster is one of the finest photoplay houses on the coast and the advertising put out by Mr. Webster can never be criticized for it's cheapness, so if you will kindly correct this matter, I will appreciate it.
> I must confess that I was not very proud of that announcement card, but there was a reason for it's cheapness, that would take too much space to explain, but it was not a matter of economy.
> I take much interest in your column and have gleaned some excellent ideas, as note enclosure, but I have improved a little on it, by adding the word "Handbag" thus considering the ladies.
> I am pleased to state that business is very fine and we really have a classy little house and I will try to make that "hardly good" announcement, my last sin.

This merely backs up what we preached so often, that the name of the town should appear on every piece of paper used. It is not important, perhaps, and yet it is very simple. Here was one card that was sent out. Only a few of them, perhaps, got out of Woodland, but there was nothing to show that the theater was in Woodland and not in Sacramento. Print the name of town and state on all your matter. If you do not, if you are good enough to send in material, please state this clearly on the matter and not on the postmark.

The first thing that struck us in Mr. Leland's new submission was the word to which he called attention in his letter. His as-a "Handbag and Vest Pocket" program. This program is printed on a brick red stock. It is good stock, but a stronger impression should have been used to get a better black. Be careful in printing on red that the black is intense or the text will partly sink into the paper. Here the value of a coarse screen cut is almost wholly lost.

Outside of its color the only thing we do not like about the program is the underline:

Charlie Chaplin and the Diamond From the Sky, every Thursday.

They run a Chaplin every day, but the fact should not be permitted to detract from the prominence of the underline. It should have read

The Diamond from the Sky
Every Thursday.
Also a Chaplin Comedy.

The Chaplin is generally known to be a permanent feature. It is not as important in the underline as the serial. With the arrangement neither gets the proper showing.

'Ray for Ruffner!

Bully for Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty, Spokane. Listen to himself talk:

> It was a very strange coincidence that the article on Spokane's new theater, THE LIBERTY, should appear right opposite to the one in your department concerning increased prices and my experience in that line, but such was the case in your issue of May 8th.
> Since leaving Carpenter's territory we have been trying to line up a few new wrinkles in advertising, with the result that the enclosed folder is representative of one of my attempts.
> This thing of trying to sell people education and instruction along with amusement is not an easy thing to do. I am strong for subjects from which I can learn anything new; I know there are several thousand specimens just like myself, and if I could get them organized it would be an easy matter to count on their attendance whenever we had anything worth while in that line. I was told upon my arrival here that the town was keen for weeklies, for travelogues, scientific subjects and the like, so I looked around for some good ones. Remembered reading of the two Edison releases, "MAKING PAPER MONEY" and "THE MAKING OF GREAT GUNS FOR NAVY AND COAST DEFENSE" and upon placing order, these two were shipped to us from Los Angeles. Got out the little folder, made good distribution and awaited results. All day long our phone was kept busy answering inquiries, and I know there were a lot of people here who were really interested and had paid their money to see just these two subjects. Anytime one can play up a single reel educational over a five reel feature and get away with it, believe they have accomplished something unusual, especially in this day of heavy problem plays and muchly-bescissored sensationals. There is nothing new under the sun; the distribution of these little folders represents nothing new or untried, but for my own satisfaction, I have proven that there are a few people who will come in to see a good educational, when the average feature (that muchly abused word) would not appeal.

Think this letter over and ask yourself if you are not wrong in your belief that people do not care for educational subjects. You may not, but you pay nothing to see the show. Consult the wishes of the man who does.

The other night we sat in a boardwalk theater at Atlantic City with A. D. Hotaling, who produces the Billie Reeves comedies, and there was one of his pictures on the screen. When it was done we rose, thinking he would want to go, but he pulled us into the seat again. "There's a Hearst-Selig Weekly coming," he explained. He was interested in that and wanted to wait. He knew something beside photoplays. It is the same with most persons. More than that, many persons would come were there more of this class of picture. Perhaps you have trouble making your four reel feature a hit. Mr. Ruffner scores with an educational—plus advertising.

The folder is gray paper printed in black. The cover reads merely "What do you know about making money." There is no imprint of the house to detract from the question. Inside it reads so well that we are giving the text for the benefit of others. If the copy is used Walla Walla should be replaced by the name of a nearer Penitentiary.

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT MAKING MONEY?

A terse question with a double meaning. We might ask that same question of Carnegie, Rockefeller and other notables. Their replies would make interesting reading. The same question applied to certain inmates of Walla Walla would bring forth the evidence that even THEY did not know a whole lot about it. You have read of expenditures reaching into the millions so often that the expression "MILLIONS" carries as much weight as the word "and." Where does all the money come from? Who produces it? How is it produced? What makes money?

YOU MAY KNOW HOW TO MAKE MONEY
BUT YOU DO NOT KNOW HOW MONEY IS MADE!
THE LIBERTY WILL SHOW YOU!

for we believe there are many thousands of eager minds willing to absorb dependable information, and for that reason we are backing up our judgment by reaching out and securing a variety of films that would not reach Spokane under ordinary conditions. Our first offering is "THE MAKING OF MONEY," produced under the personal supervision of the United States Treasury Department at Washington.

We will show you SIXTY-SIX MILLION DOLLARS all in one pile; you will see FIVE MILLION DOLLARS destroyed right before your eyes simply because it does not happen to please the fancy of a corpulent servant of Uncle Sam. Just date yourself for THE LIBERTY next Sunday, Monday or Tuesday, June 6-7-8 and we will prove that you knew very little of HOW MONEY IS MADE. Uncle Sam's second edition of reliable information for his children will be presented for four days commencing Wednesday, June 9th. THE MAKING OF GREAT NAVAL GUNS AT THE WATERVLIET (N. Y.) ARSENAL.

VARIETY IS THE SPICE OF LIFE KNOWLEDGE IS POWER
BOTH ARE ALWAYS ON TAP AT THE LIBERTY.

If you apologize when you have an educational or scenic, they will be held in contempt, but if you play them up you'll make them valued. It can be overdone, of course, but a single one day a week may lead you to use more. Read Mr. Ruffner's letter again before you go on to the next paragraph.

Sidelines.

The Victor, Abbeville, La., gets out a Hennegan cover for "Who Pays?" and up and down the sides runs such lines as these:

"How strong are a man's scruples when arrayed against his 'interest?'"

"Has the 'straight and narrow path' a traction monopoly to the Pearly Gates?"

They are odd enough to make readers and if the lines are regularly used people will come to look for them, and then read the full announcement. On the back page the days should have been dated. Multiple should not be announced as "2r." but as "in two parts."

On Postals.

The Opera House, Cohoes, N. Y. used a postcard program. It tells attractively of the coming films, but weakens our confidence by adding that "This theater has the unique distinction of being the coolest in the entire State." It's a good thing that the State referred to is not Missouri. Such a sweeping statement is not helpful. It does not sound true. It hurts the entire announcement.

There are Others.

The Circle Theater is also located in Easton, Pa., home of the active Third Street. They have come out with a weekly program publication that looks very nice until we come to an issue in yellow printed with blue. That is all right for posters but not for papers. If the yellow stock had to be used, it should have been printed in white.

One mistake they make is in keeping the program down by not framing it. The first page is all reading, but the other three pages carry the program framed in advertising. They should frame the program with six point rule, a light twelve point border or a heavy six point border. Then, too, the days should be dated. It costs no more and it saves looking to the heading to find which Wednesday a certain attraction plays.

It is remarkable that most new advertisers should think that one date should carry an entire seven days.

The front page should carry a skeleton program for the week. Then the details should be given in the succeeding pages, even though a couple of advertisements have to be taken out. We presume that the first idea of a program is properly to advertise a house. The tradesman has only second call.

The smaller body type should be used for stories and should always be used. They use eight or ten point according to the amount of copy they have. A publication should be uniform where the general advertising may be as varied as one may wish.

A little attention to the general typographical appearance of the paper will make for a considerable improvement. The weekly program for the first page, the dated days and the framed program spaces should be used at once.

A General Editor.

Arthur Plato, who designs and makes a great many of the advertising novelties for the Universal as well as other companies and who has made theatrical advertising novelties since time immemorial, sends in a dummy for a house program that he purposes printing for those who do not know how to get out a sheet or who find it cheaper to have the work done by another. It is not a ready print program. It is simply a paper printed for you and by your direction, plus unusual facilities for getting the necessary material for subject matter. The only faults we have to find with the idea are that he wants to print at least three thousand a week, and uses a coated paper instead of a more lasting stock. It is the best idea in individual program service we have seen.

Precisely.

J. W. Brighton, of the Morenci Club, Morenci, Ariz., writes:

> Your Moving Picture World is a regular Encyclopedia for all engaged in the motion picture business, and I don't know what we would do without it. I enclose you one of my weekly Bulletins that will show you what class of pictures are being shown in a copper mining camp in sunny Arizona.

That is precisely what an issue of this paper is: an encyclopedia of the business. The trouble is, that some do not realize that with this paper and a film service they need no other outside aid. They do not get from the paper all the help that is there and to which they are entitled.

From the letter head we imagine that the theater is a part of the club scheme; perhaps a club maintained for the miners. In any event, they offer all of the big features at prices ranging from ten to twenty cents, the admission for each night being stated.

The issue is a four pager, 3½ by 8 inches, three days to the page. The film is described briefly but interestingly, and the composition is good, as is the press work. It may be a mining town, but they have a printer there. They use all of the big features and use them before they are worn out.

Tee Hee!

We've caught George Editor Carpenter asleep at last! He gives, in the last Real Reels, a column editorial on the farmer's matinee just discovered by one of the Montana exhibitors. It is one of the best schemes ever devised for the farmers, the merchants and the exhibitor alike. But Mr. Carpenter is entitled to a slip-up now and then.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Tortured Tales.

NOTHING is more irritating than a story in which the very existence of the story is dependent upon the distortion of natural action. Exaggeration and burlesque are permissible in frankly farcical comedies, but dramatic themes should not be made into burlesque. Yesterday we looked in at two photoplay theaters. We came home cross. In a five-reel story the heroine was being pursued by Zulus. She arrived at the seashore and there was a large steamer in the offing, so they sent out a small boat and took her aboard and steamed right away for America without delay. They picked her up with the binoculars, but as soon as she got aboard they put the glasses back into the case and did not search the shore for further refugees. Perhaps, as in the case of a recent serial, the ship was half an hour late on a four thousand mile journey.

Then we saw a three-reel subject. There had been trouble at a plant. The food was bad and better was promised for supper. They didn't telephone into town. The boss ordered a man to ride into town in the car and bring the stuff out. He didn't, so there was a fight that lasted all night. Then a man went for help. Did he run for the nearest telephone? He did not, gentle reader, he ran all the way into town and then, instead of going to the sheriff, he went to the man who had been sent for the food.

Once more, this time in four reels. A jockey is abducted that his mount may be ridden by a crook. His name is taken off the jockey board and the name of another substituted. At the last moment he rushes in, gets into the silks, mounts and rides to win. The owner is not in the paddock and he listens to the trainer talk through the neck of the horse, that he may not be recognized. He does not weigh in or out, no explanation is made to the judges, yet the race seems to stand.

In each of these stories there was at least one fault that spoiled the story for the spectator of average intelligence. In each, persons acted so utterly at variance with all common sense, that there was a feeling of irritation rather than of interest. It is just as easy to change the scheme of things and make the characters act naturally. It must be done if the pictures are to be raised to the proper standard.

These are all multiple reels upon which large sums of money have been spent. Would it not have been better to have spent another hundred or two on technique to get the story straight? These were all written or edited by staff men. It looks as though there will be a demand presently for better staff men.

Ones and Fours.

One inquirer voices the unasked question of many when he writes: "What is the use of learning to write one-reel stories when the demand seems to be for three and four-reel ideas?"

The answer is that presently manufacturers will come to realize that good one-reel stories are what a lot of people prefer. Not one six-reeler in fifty really holds the interest to the end. Few four reels keep the suspense to the finish. Two-reel stories are merely one-reel ideas told in two thousand feet, as a rule. The original success of the motion picture was based on its brief completeness. Many persons keep away from the theater showing long features. In time the theaters will split and some will devote themselves to features and others to single reels with perhaps a two-reel for a headliner.

About that time it is going to be handy to be able to condense a real story into a reel. It is much easier to write two reels of action to one reel of idea. Almost any average writer can do that. It takes the master workman to condense the idea into the shorter length and retain the strength of his story. Look at the Biograph reissues.

The Call.

The serious business of photoplay writing is not the result of impulse. It is the answer to a message from within. The woman who writes that she passed a studio and so she thought she would write a play and send it in has the same chance as the man who writes: "I am told there is good money in writing photoplays. Please send me the formula."

That is not the way the good ones start.

Broken Action.

The most direct action is generally the smoothest story, but the break is so useful and so generally necessary, that it is well to provide for some cutting in. If directors followed the author's script exactly as written, then there would be less necessity for breaking, but it is seldom that a script is produced precisely as written, even when the story is done or reconstructed by the director's own staff writer. As a result the action is sometimes badly mixed and the fact does not become apparent until it is necessary to join the negative. Then it may be found that an interpolation brings two scenes in the same set in succession or that an elimination brings the same result. Then comes a leader to bridge the jump, whereas if there were some side action to cut into a scene might be broken.

Of course a director should not start work until he has a script he can follow absolutely, but what should be and what is are two very different things, and so the wise author will adapt himself to circumstances and try to provide against the results of meddling.

Until we have scripts that are produced as written, we shall have few good stories. This does not mean that the script as written must be that of the original author. It may be necessary to reconstruct, but the reconstruction by a competent writer and the pulling to pieces in the field by the director are two different matters.

Traveling.

One writer asks how to travel. It is a little late in the summer to tell about a traveling kit, but the question may interest others. Our own equipment is about as simple and efficient as we know. It consists of a box for the typewriter and another box for paper. This last is a strong box of pine with metal protection for the corners and a hinged front. It is just large enough to contain one of the cloth covered paper cabinets with six drawers that can be had from almost any stationer. This gives a drawer each for first and second sheets, carbons, letter heads, envelopes and sundries. The cabinet can be taken out of its case and set on top, and the machine is set on top of its own traveling case, making a low desk that can be worked with any average chair with entire comfort.

The typewriter case is merely the shipping case sent with the machine, but more strongly braced, hinged and provided with padlocks. If ordered at the same time two or more locks may be had to work from the same key, which is a great convenience.

With such an outfit packing or unpacking is a matter of ten minutes, and it can be expressed as a lot shipment at the cost of a single piece of equal weight.

Following Up.

Several stories have lately come to a certain company with a letter that reads more or less to the effect that the writer has noticed that the company is specializing in pictures made in Florida and the south and feels certain that the enclosed will be just in their line.

The writer does not know that the company has moved from the south to escape the heat and that it will not return for several months. He sees the screened picture and dashes off a story that probably no one else can possibly use on the off chance that his guess is correct. Guesses made on so slight a foundation seldom are correct.

Synopsis Only.

In spite of the fact that some companies advertise that they will buy a synopsis for practically the same price as the full script, few of them do, and many do not even pay half price. One company, paying about $50 a reel for scripts, offers from ten to twenty dollars per reel for synopsis. Naturally the editor feels that the synopsis alone should not be worth as much as a full script and he guides his price by the work done and not by the idea offered. He does not realize that the average person competent to think an idea is competent to develop the script and that the really conscientious writer actually does write the script of action first and the synopsis from that in order to do the work properly.

Few practiced hands write the synopsis first. Many find that they cannot. All find the synopsis to be better when they have made the action complete and see precisely what they have. Even where the editor is absolutely honest in his intent, the synopsis only is a gold brick game for the real writer and the sooner the writers are required to submit full scripts and sell full scripts, the sooner will there come into existence real writers and not literary tipsters.

Plot Germs.

Franklin Hall offers his ideas on plotting. He writes:

> Having been a newspaper man, a writer of plays and a member of the theatrical profession for thirty years, I am tempted to make a few criticisms on photoplay writing. I have written a few in which my literary experience has impressed me with their lack of merit. And I have written others which I believe to be unusually good. My large experience in dramatic art has aided me to come to this conclusion: No one has been able to read a drama and decide positively that it will be a success if produced. Is it not possible that the same holds good with photoplays?
> In my study of many works on the technique of photoplay construction many terms are erroneously used and quite confusing to the amateur. Plots and plot-germs, incidents and themes are used without any consideration for their meaning. Story building has its mechanical side as well as the imaginative. One cannot write a classic any more and hope to sell it. We cannot stand with our hands in our pockets and wade around with our characters, discussing with them the subject of our story, as the older writers were wont to do. Every touch must be according to the dictates of authority. There is technique of form which any one can learn. And there is technique in constructing your theme into dramatic action, suspense, interest, surprise and beauty of polish which only those who possess inspiration the ardor of a gifted imagination can hope to accomplish. There is technique in building the story. But it is the GRAND IDEA, the new and beautiful THOUGHT we must all strive for. Plot defined is: First—To your story which is mechanical and easily attained. It is a simple diagram, beginning with locality, and settings, introduction of characters, introductory incidents leading up to your main incident entwined around the little germ of the story, the development of plot, the crisis and ultimate climax.

PLOTS, THEMES and GERMS have their important places in the story. But it is the GRAND IDEA, the new and beautiful THOUGHT we must all strive for. Plot defined is: First—To conspire, a secret plan to accomplish some questionable purpose. Second—A series of incidents forming a skeleton of a story. How often we hear of "The plotless play." How absurd! The ever present triangle, two men and a woman planning for or against each other is a plot. Why not express them then as weak plots, good plots and strong plots? The world is full of plots.

The theme of the story is the least consequential. There are only four—LOVE, HUNGER, DEATH and IDENTITY. No one having literary authority, to my knowledge, has disputed this. Perhaps in the far distant future there will arise a greater mind than their's to confute it. Theme is the subject of your story the handling of which, as one writer has expressed it, is to give it a new and different twist. You must be original in your development. How often we read some criticism by one who ought to know better, "The theme is old and worn out." It is this carelessness that does harm. Where many of us make mistakes is the introduction of trite incidents, trite ideas, the overworked saloon gamblers, the exchanged infants, the foreclosed mortgages, and a thousand other incidents that we see so often.

Says She Doesn't.

The GERM of a story is the simplest part of it, yet no story is complete without it; but it is NOT the idea nor the beautiful thought as some writers seem to suggest. It is the primary source of a story, it only suggests the ideas. It can be any object that will cause a change of circumstance in the action of the play. It may give a clue to unravel a mystery or discover a crime. It is the link which joins the chain of circumstance and reveals facts where wealth and position are attained. It may suggest a grand idea, create in the mind, where imagination is rampant, a hundred beautiful thoughts. It might be a scrap of paper with a line of writing, a broken shell bracelet, a bauble, a flower, a broken wheel or a punctured tire. A falling apple was the germ that suggested to Sir Isaac Newton the great law of gravitation. A window in the top of Bunker Hill monument was the germ that suggested the sewing machine needle. A single germ may suggest a thought which may lead you into other greater ones, if you possess true literary genius, and when you have completed your story you will be surprised to find the original one is entirely eliminated. With the inspiration of a literary imagination you begin with a thought and before you have gone far the story will write itself for you, you can't help yourself.

If you will dissect a seed you will find within the germ of the tree. It may be but a small part of the kernel; merely a speck that must be placed under the microscope to discover its identity, but it will always be found. If properly nurtured it will grow into the plant, but the germ is anything but suggestive of the product.

It is the same way with the plot germ. The germ is not the plot but the thought from which the plot starts. It is not, as Mr. Hall points out, the idea of the plot, but the idea behind the idea of the plot, the idea from which the plot idea sprang. The germ is developed into the idea and the idea is developed into plot, precisely as the germ within a seed expands into a seedling, and so, by degrees, it expands into the noble growth. An acorn is an oak tree in embryo, but in embryo only, and it is an error to assume that either the germ or the seedling is the oak any more than that the germ or the idea developed from the germ is the plot.

As to the misuse of technical terms, it would seem that the fewer of these used the better. It would also seem that the less one knows of the terms the greater his use and misuse of them. It is simple to say that the proper action should be played in the proper scene at the proper time than to remark that the dramatic unities must be preserved.

In this regard we are one with Professor Neal who in his Short Stories in the Making prefaces his work with the statement that he is seeking to make smooth the path for the beginner rather than to produce a work that shall be the admiration of the erudite. Too many writers use jargon to cover their mental deficiencies.

To All of Which, Amen!

Mrs. Russell writes that we are in error in saying that she does revision work. This statement appeared on her early circulars, and we are glad that this is so, for we quite agree with Mrs. Russell when she says, referring to her work with a clearing house:

> I have taken this stand because I learned through my long experience with the C. H. that no writer ever succeeds who is willing to put his name to another person's work. I rewrote hundreds of stories while with the C. H., many of them selling only because of the material I had added. I cannot recall one who sold thus, who ever turned out a salable play himself, while, on the other hand, those who profited by criticisms but who did the writing themselves became sure enough writers, in many cases.
> The lazy, the incompetent, the dishonorable we have always with us. These are quite willing to pay a good sum to have some one write a story to which they can attach their names. I don't believe in encouraging that kind of dishonesty and self-delusion. Moreover, I prefer to give my services to the really ambitious who need a hand over a rough place but who can stand on their own feet when they get across. Therefore, Q. E. D. I do not revise.

To all of which, Amen!

No writer was ever developed by letting another author do his work. He cannot develop his ability save through his own personal labor. To offer aids to sales is to offer something that cannot be delivered. Mrs. Russell knows this. She knows, too, that to encourage the novice to a false feeling of success is dishonest. Therefore she offers but criticism which is helpful only in the degree in which the critic is capable. Mrs. Russell is, we believe, unusually competent.

Addresses.

Be careful of the manner in which you address your return envelopes. If you want your script tell where it may be sent. Do not address it "city" even if you live in the town with the studio. The director having your script may move into the field and not notice the lack of address.

Some do not even do that much, but send a stamped but unaddressed envelope, the address to be obtained from the letter. If the letter is lost, and generally it is not saved, the script is lost as well, or at least held until the author queries.

You may think that you do this properly, but do you, always?

In Sections.

In writing action it is well to remember that each scene is a unit and to write it as such, even where two or more may be played as one under favorable conditions. A recent story gave this layout:

10—Street showing side yard. Poor quarter. Potter enters—enters yard.

11—Yard as above—Nora on—Potter enters—greets Nora—enters house.

Later on another character comes along the street, enters the yard and steals a shirt from the line.

It happened that a yard was obtained with a clothes line so close to the fence that the two scenes could be played as one, the character coming on, climbing the fence and stealing the shirt, all in one scene.

At a glance it would seem that in any event this scene should have been written in the latter manner. In point of fact it is the logical development, but the split action provided against two contingencies. It might not have been possible to get the fence and yard in combination, or to have gotten the fence and the clothes line close enough to the fence. Giving each action its scene number makes it possible to play as two scenes, perhaps a mile apart, or one continuous scene.

Enthusiasm.

If you do not like your story yourself, it is foolish to expect that editors and producers will feel an enthusiasm you do not share. If you have a theme that you know should be good but which you feel is not, write it, that you may get a record of the business and development, but do not attempt to sell it until such a time as you can write it over again with a proper feeling of enthusiasm. It is in this detail that the work of the free lance writer can rise superior to the more perfunctory work of the studio man. The free lance cannot hope to approach the staff writer in the matter of fluent technique and to write a story equally convenient to that particular studio is still more difficult. In routine, then, the free lance is at a very decided disadvantage. He can hope to appeal only through the superior merit of the plot idea and the enthusiasm of its development.

The word may seem to be misused here, but it is not. A script may be developed with enthusiasm. The author's engrossment in his idea may be such that he gives to the run of action a spontaneity that cold technique alone never can give. The staff arranger, performing set duties, may bring to his work a nicety of technique that will make an interesting picture. He may avail himself of the countless tricks of the trade to get effects. He may do through this trickery what the free lance may gain through interest in the story. Of the two, the inspirational development, when good, is to be preferred. The trouble is that so few stories from outside sources are written with enthusiasm. It is necessary to hold to the studio writer for the general run of stuff. The free lance is not to be depended upon, as yet. But it should be remembered that the staff man can give technique. The free lance can sell only inspiration, since he cannot compete on technique.

Needless Trouble.

It is easy to write in a property, but not alway easy to obtain the same, so be careful not to call for unusual stuff unless you actually need it. It might help a picture to use three lawn swings to give the suggestion of a resort boarding house, but some chairs will do as well and may be more easily borrowed. Probably the director would not take the trouble to get the needless props, but why write them in?

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important! Operators Notice!

THIS department has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition. I am doing this at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me, with the date day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now, please understand that I must have the following data: First, What make of films is it? Second, Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange? Third, What day was it received? Don't mix up bad patches, or other faults, cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels, put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 95.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What is axial spherical aberration, and what is its effect on the screen? Taking the total illumination of the crater as the basis, what losses of light occur between the crater and the carbon and the eye of the spectator in the audience?

Roll of Honor On Question No. 89.

The Roll of Honor on Question 89 consists of: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Tex.; John Solar, Watertown, New York; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Me.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, La.; C. A. Dann, Toronto, Can.; F. V. Poyser, Brandon, Manitoba; Victoria, British Columbia; Bert Meester, Hobart, Ind., and William A. Burnett, Newton, Ia.

I have selected the reply of C. A. Dann as best suited for publication.

Reply to Question No. 89.

By C. A. Dann, Toronto, Can.

The Question:

What faults are most likely to be found in projection carbons, and what do longitudinal (lengthwise) cracks in carbons indicate? Why are cored carbons preferable to solid carbons for projection purposes, and what combinations and sizes of carbons do you recommend for 25, 35, and 45 amperes D. C., and 40, 50, 60, 70 and 80 amperes A. C.? What, in your judgment, would be the indication that you carbons were working above capacity?

The Answer:

Replying to Question 89 categorically: (a) The faults most likely to be found in projection carbons are: (1) Inefficient binder, causing the carbon to crumble, waste and needle when burning at or near capacity; (2) Defective core, producing unsteadiness in the light; (3) Lack of uniform density—hard and soft spots. When a hard spot is reached the arc will flutter and jump, and the brilliancy of the light will be reduced; (4) Carbon uniformly too hard or uniformly too soft. The former will produce a yellow, fluttering light, and the latter will consume rapidly and needle badly; (5) cracks around the circumference of the carbon. As the carbon burns down and the crack comes opposite the back of the crater it would produce a tendency of the crater to break away, and, in proportion to the depth of the crack, would detrimentally affect the form of the crater. There would also be a danger if the crack was very pronounced of the carbon breaking off at that point while you are manipulating the lamp. Longitudinal cracks in the carbon indicate that it has been well baked. A carbon should not be rejected because it contains that kind of crack.

(b) Cored carbons are the most satisfactory for projection work, since the core having a lower resistance than the body of the carbon, it tends to keep the crater centered and large. With a solid upper carbon the light is sure to be erratic, moving from one point to another, and thus producing shadows on the screen.

(c) For 25 to 35 amperes D. C. a combination recommended is 5/8 cored upper and 1/2 solid lower. The majority of operators I know use a combination of two 5/8 cored, and I, personally, have found the same to be very satisfactory. For 45 amperes D. C. I would use 3/4 cored upper and either 5/8 solid or cored below, preferably the latter for reasons already given. For 40, 50 and 60 amperes A. C. I would use 5/8 cored upper and lower, and for 70 or 80 amperes 3/4 cored upper and lower.

I might add that I would not depend upon the rating of the generator, rheostat or transformer for amperage data, as these ratings quite often, at least as respects the first two items, differ very considerably from the actual output.

(d) The best indication that a carbon is working above capacity, providing, of course, the carbon itself is a good one, is that the carbon becomes excessively hot, shows tendency to needle and may loosen in the clamp.

The brother speaks of the cored upper and solid lower combination being "recommended." Well, I'm the one who did the recommending. My own experience is that, while it is quite true that the arc is more stable with two cored carbons, still, at the same time, the light is whiter when a solid lower is used, provided that it be not too hard, and a perfectly even illumination can be maintained if the operator gives the arc his close attention.

Callers.

Recently the editor was agreeably surprised to, in response to a timid knock on the door, see a tall, lean, lanky individual walk in and announce his name as H. Von Emmel, Oakland, Cal., which same individual proceeded to spring on us a working card from Local 169. Brother Von Emmel tells us that things are flourishing out in Oakland, and it was plain to be seen that he locked no manner of modesty as regards the appointments of the new Franklin of that city, of which he is chief operator.

Brother Von Emmel is in New York on a business trip, and will return to the city by the Golden Gate as soon as the gay White Way has absorbed his bank roll. He had better watch out, friend Von E., because the White Way is some doings and bank rolls are to it as is the morning dew to the sun. I trust, however, his departure will be delayed at least a reasonable time. Come again, brother.

Next day the door again opened to admit Brother C. C. Courter, chief operator Arcadia theater, Savannah, Ga., a fine, large, handsome chap with a scandalously engaging smile. Neighbor Courter tells us that down in Savannah everything is lovely and the goose roosts on the ridge pole; also that the local in his city is in good condition, with a membership of almost fifty—including stage hands and operators. We had a very pleasant chat together Before he left I packed up a nice bundle of my best regards and sent them by him to the boys in Savannah, and I hope the members of the local will see that they are duly delivered.

From a Traveler.

J. T. May, formerly of Bartlesville, Okla., writes:

> Possibly the following might be of interest to your readers: Since the first of the year I have traveled over the greater part of Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, South Dakota, Minnsota, Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky, and in the course of my wanderings have viewed, I think, about every kind of projection there is. In Oklahoma the men generally are doing good work, and business also is good. In Kansas City the operators have not yet broken away from that "three men to two houses" gag, although the City-by-the-Kaw has some very fine photoplay theaters. Two of the houses charge 25 cents admission. In Lincoln, Neb., in what houses I visited the projection was about as good as I have ever witnessed. In Omaha there is not a show in the city where the projection would not disgrace a town of two thousand people. (I have heard this before, and from a good many sources, therefore I presume there is no doubt of its being the truth.—Ed.). That is to say, I mean in the downtown district. However, the projection is all that could be expected when one considers the working conditions, and the boys who recently founded a local in Omaha are making a game fight to better conditions. By-the-way, I will have to back up a little. There is one house, on Harney near 16th street, that is not as bad as the others. (Umph! Huh! that is a rather qualified boost for that particular house.—Ed.). In Sioux City I found about as up-to-date bunch of operators as it has even been my pleasure to meet. All the boys I met were hustling chaps, who knew their business and made use of what they knew. (That's the dope. Hurray for Sioux City!—Ed.). I only tarried in Sioux Falls for three hours, but in Mitchell and Huron, So. Dakota, as in Pipestone and Worthington, Minn., I found the operator to be the whole show in everything but salary—the pay being six to fifteen dollars a week. (Phew! aren't managers in those towns afraid they will suffer from enlargement of the heart? It is perfectly scandalous to waste money that way! Think of paying a mere operator fifteen great, big, perfectly good iron men for working six or seven days. Scandalous!—Ed.). I visited a number of smaller towns in this territory, but no large ones, returning thence to Kansas City and St. Louis. I did not enter a single theater in the latter city, but noticed two or three of the downtown houses were closed. But in East St. Louis I ran into another up-to-date, hustling bunch like the Sioux City boys. Belleville, Ill., I found to have some very handsome and well equipped houses; also the projection was excellent. In Springfield, Bloomington and Peoria, Ill., projection was about the usual thing, as was also the equipment. In Freeport, Ill., the stage hands are organized, but are making no effort to line up the operators, and the operators, so one of them told me, want a separate organization, but lack the sufficient number of men to get it. Why they don't climb into the band wagon together with the stage hands I am unable to understand. I visited one house in both Rockford and Elgin, and one cannot criticize a city on the work in one house. I will say, however, the projection was ordinary in both theaters. In Hammond and Gary, Ind., I found several very pretty, well equipped houses, and projection was good. Chicago and its shows are too well known to require comment. At Logansport and Seymour, Ind., also at Kokomo, Ind., the houses were not well equipped, and projection was nothing to brag of. At Indianapolis it was my pleasure to assist in the picketing of an unfair downtown house on Saturday night. It was my first experience, and I got a lot of fun out of it. That Indianapolis bunch have things well lined up, and they certainly are scrappers. At Franklin, Ind., the operators have the only labor organization in the city. Have been organized about a year, and since organizing have only had a week's work at their craft—with the exception of two operators. (Do you mean to say all the others have been out of work for a year? Don't quite get you.—Ed.). This local is fortunate in having for its president Brother Earl Hoffman, who is as fine a gentleman as I ever met. He is doing all he can to improve conditions in his city. In Louisville there are three or four very nice houses, but in one of their finest, Keith's Mary Anderson, I have seen pictures run that were very, very old. The finest house in the city has been unfair to the musicians with scarcely any effort being made to line it up. I am intending to take a trip to Colorado and Wyoming next month; if you care for it I will send you the results of my observations.

And now I want to thank you for calling me down on that salt-in-the-water rheostat proposition. While I have used water resistance frequently, I have never used salt, therefore was only going on the principle of the thing.

In your reply to Harry Abbey you said that the series and shunt fields are often connected in opposition to each other. Please explain. Do you mean that the series field has a tendency to make one pole south while the shunt winding is trying to make it north? Also I would like to have a little instruction for the cause of change of polarity in the generator. Have hunted my Hawkins, Moreton and American Correspondence School books through, but cannot find anything at all on this subject. I do not see how it can happen at all, accidentally, unless with the shunt wound machine you overload so heavily as to cause the fields to lose their magnetism, in which case it is possible, but not probable, that low voltage eddy current in the armature might reverse the polarity of the fields, and then when the overload is removed the polarity would be changed. This applies only to shunt wound machines, and as these are very seldom used on a projection machine would not cause such trouble as Friend Abbey wanted to know about.

When are you going to give us more of "Billy" in the Railroad Man's Magazine again? "Billy" can make a Keystone comedy look like Arlington National Cemetery when it comes to fun, and believe me, after a hard day's work patching up films for the exchange, and trying to get decent results out of a machine that should be in the National Museum, he is certainly a tonic, so come again with him P. D. Q. (meaning darned quick.—Ed.).

Yes, I will be glad to have your comments on the trip you speak of, but be very careful, Brother May, and give only facts. Where projection is good and the boys are doing their duty, and are backed up by managers in doing it, it encourages them to have that fact known. On the other hand, where projection is poor it is a good thing to give that fact publicity, and I am always willing to do it, provided I am reasonably sure I have the facts as they are.

With regard to a generator reversing its polarity, I have not the time to go into that matter and look up all the various reasons why a generator may, and sometimes does reverse its polarity, now, nor have I all this at my finger ends. I will ask one of our electrician correspondents who is familiar with this matter to give us the dope if he will. With regard to placing the shunt in opposition to the compound, as I understand it, it merely refers to the direction of current flow. You must understand that the direction in which the current flows around the r agnet cuts a very decided figure, and if the current from the shunt flows in one direction, and the current from the compound in another direction, the effect is quite different from what it would be if both flowed in the same direction. Yes, in a way it amounts, in effect, to one current trying to make the north pole north and the other trying to make it south.

As to the "Bill" stories, why I rather enjoyed writing them, and I guess from letters received a good many enjoyed reading them, too; but, while the Munsey Company paid me very well indeed, as such things go, still, even so, the writing of the stories was not profitable, in that the same amount of time applied to other things brought in more of the fine, large, beautiful, long-green, which we all so much admire, and which seems to be, for some reason or other, more or less of a ncessity in this vale of sorrow and weeps.

Yes, It Is Worse Than Bad.

New York City writes:

> I recently read, with great joy, that you are on the trail of the film exchange, with regard to the inspection of films My employers use Mutual and General service and, while the General films are well inspected and repaired, those of the Mutual are something worse than bad. Many of the splices are not scraped, but just cemented together, emulsion and all, and misframes and similar faults are common. This reflects directly on the operator's reputation whereas it is the film exchange that is really to blame, therefore, for the good of all, I wish you would publish this and take such action as will compel the exchanges to sit up and take notice. I enclose samples which are some of the worst I have ever seen. When they went through the machine it sounded like an explosion. If film exchanges would pay a little more attention to keeping their films in decent shape they would see their trade increase in such amount that instead of paying a mere 17 or 18 per cent. dividend, they could pay 25 per cent. Your remarks with regard to the I. A. are good, and I hope the delegates will take notice and reconsider the injustice perpetrated two years ago. I am willing to learn from you. I was one of your pupils for the few lessons you gave in the room of Local 35, Branch 2, about two years ago, and I think it is more than a shame that for the grudge of one or two individuals we all have to suffer.

The patches certainly are the limit. I have sent them to Mutual headquarters. If the Mutual New York exchange is sending out film in that sort of condition most emphatically there is huge need for improvement in their inspection department. This department is not attempting to run the film exchanges, but when films are sent out in bad condition the exchange cannot rightfully say "that is my business," because it is also the business of the operator who has to run them, and of the theater manager whose show must suffer. I am creditably informed that in some New York City exchanges film inspectors are paid as little as five or six dollars a week of seven days. Now I cannot say positvely that that is a fact, but the information seems reliable, and if it is a fact it is an outrage. No wonder films inspected by five and six dollar a week inspectors are in bad condition. What would you expect? Film inspection is an exceedingly important part of the moving picture industry, and should be done by competent mechanics who are not required to inspect two reels in the time they ought to devote to one.

Typewritten Slides.

C. D. Smith, photographer, Canton, Ill., wrote some time ago asking the address of the maker of the radio mat slide, which was supplied to him. He now says:

> I find the slides to be very satisfactory, as they project a clean, clear black letter on a perfectly white background. If they are left in the carrier too long the heat will melt the gelatin between the cover glass. However, I believe they will stand any reasonable length of time without the heat affecting them. In my opinion they are a good thing. Some managers around here seem to think they are expensive at 3 cents each. I argued with one of them who uses something in the way of tracing cloth. One can hardly read his slides, for the simple reason that his background is too opaque, and the typewritten letters won't stand out, therefore I hold that the higher price slide is the better. I told him I thought 3 cents per slide was very reasonable, if one could project a neat, clear slide which people could read, instead of the kind of proposition he was using. It is strange how some people cheapen their theaters by trying to save a nickel. Am I right?

You certainly are. And now with regard to the typewritten slide proposition. The typewritten gelatine slide is a good slide provided reasonable care be exercised in its making; nor is 3 cents expensive for a high-class article, which the radio mat slide undoubtedly is. Another company, the Utility Transparency Company, puts out a slide which costs less than 1 cent. It is admittedly not as good a slide as the radio mat slide, but provided the directions which go with the "Make 'Em Yourself" slide outfit, which the Utility sells, be followed with a reasonable degree of intelligence, and a well-inked black typewriter ribbon be used, the writing on these slides is perfectly legible. The only difference between them and the radio mat slide being that the letters in the radio are more sharp and cleaner cut than is the straight typewriting on gelatine.

Both of these slides are recommended, but to make a success of them, like everything else in this world, one must use a little judgment and common sense. Many people try to make a gelatine typewritten or ink-written slide after they have handled the gelatine and gotten their fingers all over it. They can make the slide all right, yes, but they are, of course, dissatisfied with the result. Those finger marks are going to show, and nothing you can do will prevent it. In making typewritten slides, using gelatine and a typewriter ribbon, there are two or three things which absolutely must be observed: (a) keep your fingers off the gelatine, for finger marks will show; (b) have your typewriter type at least reasonably clean, and not covered with lint, and with the round spaces in the various letters plugged up with an accumulation of dirt; (c) use a well inked black ribbon—not an old worn out one that would not even write decently on paper.

The radio mat slide has the advantage that you cannot very well get your fingers on the gelatine, unless you do it deliberately; also it is written with carbon paper on both sides of the gelatine, instead of with the typewriter ribbon. In fact the ribbon may be lifted out of the way while writing the slide, although if it is not it will make no difference, because it does not touch the gelatine. Both the Radio Mat and the Make 'Em Yourself slide outfits are recommended by this department, with the proviso, however, that you must follow directions in making slides if you want good results. The Radio is the best; the Utility is the cheapest. Both will produce very good results if rightly handled and—there you are.

Righto.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Can., sends in answer to Question 89 and says:

> Am awaiting with much interest the results of your experiments in motion picture optics. I trust that, when completed, the facts will really have been ascertained, since the variations in the views of your correspondents who are strong on optics has evidenced that they have not all reached the whole truth on the subject, and, while we appreciate their efforts, we who are not experimenting in the matter, would like to have the proposition reduced to a demonstrable certainty, so that even the doughtiest motion picture optician cannot subsequently arise in the department circle and hand it a blow in the solar plexus.

That is exactly why you are "waiting," Brother Dann. I am waiting, too. On Sunday, June 27, I straddled my trusty steed, poked his gasoline heart into action and, with a friend on the tandem and the light ray dope strapped securely in place on the luggage carrier over the front wheel, headed his nose up the Boston Post Road, and, after encountering a hail storm, a downpour of rain, riding through one hundred yards of water from six to eight inches deep, plowing through a mud road for six or seven miles, and using language no regular printer could use in his regular business, arrived in Ansonia and handed to Brother Griffiths the light ray article, together with the photographs, drawings, etc. I then started back over the Boston Post Road trail and, between showers, in showers and through showers, arrived safely in Brooklyn at 9 p. m., 178 miles—some doings, by golly!

As soon as Griffiths gets through with the dope, and returns it to me, it will be immediately put into print, and copies will be sent to operators in whose judgment I have confidence.

Note.—Now, don't imagine that because some of you don't get those sheets that I have no confidence in you. In this particular matter I am selecting those I believe to be most competent to criticize a light ray proposition.

One of these proof sheets will go to the Pacific Coast, possibly two or three of them. As soon as these are received back the thing will be put into final shape and published. All that means a lot more delay, but it also means we will be pretty safe in concluding that there won't be any solar plexus business, though undoubtedly there will be criticisms, and improvements made in the article later on. All I am trying to do now is to make sure that the thing is founded on the right basis—that I have the light ray boat pointed toward the harbor of success. It is too big a proposition to even hope that the present result will be perfect, though it is not too much to hope that it will be shown that our labors have brought forth real fruits and have absolutely solved a good many fundamental propositions which have puzzled us all for a long time.

License Laws.

Of late the officials of three cities and several operators' unions have written asking assistance in the compilation either of license laws or questions to be asked in examinations, and also asking general advice concerning the various matters pertaining to the enacting of license laws.

This is an extremely difficult matter to deal with. In the first place, as I have time and again said, there is no use in trying to compile a "list of examination questions." That part of it may be eliminated right at the start. With regard to the compilation of a license law that, too, would be impossible, since local conditions will, to some extent, govern its provisions. It would be rank nonsense for a town of say 10,000 or 20,000 inhabitants to enact a law containing all the provisions necessary in a law designed to cover New York City, Boston, Chicago, or any other large city.

Broadly speaking, the ordinance should provide for the following: (A) Designate places in which it shall be illegal to display motion picture films until the projecting apparatus and the operating room have been inspected and approved. Provide for periodical inspection of operating room and apparatus, and designate the inspector, presumably the city electrical department. Forbid the use of oxhydrogen gas or lime light for a motion picture projection. Name the licensing power and give it full authority to make regulations, and to enforce them, subject, however, to appeal to the mayor or city council. (B) Provide an operators' examining board, which should consist of not less than three members, one of whom may be the city electrician, one from the Building Department, and one man who has good practical knowledge of moving picture projection apparatus, operating room practice and projection. This latter is rather hard to find, but a practical knowledge of projection apparatus, projection room practice, and practical projection is absolutely essential to a really practical and fair examination. Specify, briefly, the qualities necessary to obtain a license to operate motion picture apparatus and provide that traveling operators who can properly identify themselves and produce a license or licenses from other cities or states may be allowed to operate under the same for a reasonable period of time, say not more than three days, this latter to enable traveling operators to run their show without being put to all the trouble and expense of taking out a local license, which they will only use for one or two nights at the most. To compel a traveling operator who can produce evidence of capability in the form of a license from other licensing authorities to take out a local license for one or two nights' work is nothing short of an imposition. Require that applicants for license shall have a certain amount of experience, not less than six months and preferably one year, either as operator or operator's assistant, before being eligible to examination. Provide that in case this experience has been had in other cities satisfactory proof of such experience shall be presented to the licensing authority. Establish minimum age of an operator, which should be 21 years. (C) Provide for the licensing of persons to act as assistant to operators, and designate what work they may or may not do in the operating room. Minimum age to be 18 years. The assistant's license to be known as a second grade license, and its holder to be eligible to examination for first class license at the end of a set period, say not less than one year. (D) Provide fees to be paid for licensing of operators and assistant operators. These license fees should be merely nominal. In the smaller cities it is not to be expected that examining boards will bring in much revenue to the city. It is neither fair or just to charge a man any considerable sum for the privilege of earning his daily bread. New York City charges no fee at all, and in that she is perfectly right, this notwithstanding the fact that the examining board of three works every working day of the year examining applicants. (F) Provide penalties for violation of any provision of law or any regulation made by the licensing authority. In addition to these general provisions I would suggest that the law governing operating rooms should make provision for (a) their thorough ventilation; (b) a vent flue sufficiently large to carry away all fumes and smoke in case of film fire, the same to contain an electric fan of ample dimensions; (c) a fire-shutter fusable link system calculated to automatically drop fire shutters over the ports in case of film fire; (d) placing conduit on the operating room floor should be absolutely forbidden; (e) provide that operating room construction be such that the room will be thoroughly fireproof, and that brick, hollow tile or cement construction be required where its use is practical; (f) that the operating room feed wires be large enough to carry the combined current capacity of all apparatus in the operating room, regardless of whether it is all ever used at one time or not; (g) require that the theater wiring be so done that the operator will, in case of need, be able to instantly switch on a portion of the house lights; (h) that a metal receptacle for hot carbon butts be required; (i) that all film rewinding and repairing be either done inside the operating room or in a fireproof room immediately adjoining and connecting thereto; (j) that a proper metal fireproof receptacle be required for films, and that it be required that all films not in actual use, or in process of repair or rewinding, be at all times kept in this receptacle; (k) that, in new construction, metal lined operating rooms be forbidden; (l) that the projection machine be thoroughly grounded to the metal lining or frame work of the operating room, if there is such; (m) that the keeping of oils, alcohol or other highly inflammable substances inside the operating room, in quantities of more than two ounces each, be forbidden; (n) that no exposed inflammable material be allowed inside the operating room, except a work bench constructed of two inch lumber, and such books of instruction as the operator may have actual need for; (o) such other regulations as may, under local conditions, seem advisable.

I do not feel that I could go farther in this matter. It would be a big task to draft a law. I would not mind that if the law, after it was finished, would fit all conditions.

One union asked for suggestions as to how to placate the managers, who almost invariably opposed the adoption of license laws. Well, it is a pretty hard proposition to do that. It is exceedingly difficult to get the manager to see any benefit in anything which he imagines will in any way restrict the supply of operators, and thus possibly tend to increase operators' salaries. As a matter of fact I do not think that any city having a license law has ever found anything of this kind to happen. Even Boston and New York City, which have, I believe, the most rigid examination of any cities in the country, both have a surplus of operators. The same is true, so far as I know, of all other cities where a license law is in vogue. However, even allowing that it did, it seems to me that the theater manager ought to be as reasonable about operators as he is, for instance, with film service. It is no task at all to convince a manager that ten dollars extra per week in film service will bring good results, but it is a terrific task to convince him that even two dollars a week invested in operator's salary will bring anything at all. It does not seem to me like common sense to look at things in this light. I have always, all during my forty-eight years of life, found that, invariably, and absolutely without exception, increased prices, either where the prices have to do with labor or commodities or anything else, brings increased quality, and usually increased quality in excess of the money invested, speaking by comparison, of course.

One of the locals wound up its letter with the remark that was just a little bit amusing. It said: "We all extend our best wishes to you, and consider you as the father of them all, to whom we can come for advice. Please don't publish this letter in the department, because it would give the exhibitors the impression that our local is weak in asking you for advice." Well, that gave me a good laugh, alright. Supposing the managers were going to form a local organization, and they wrote to Mr. Neff, formerly International President of the Exhibitors' Association, who has had a wide experience in such matters, asking his advice. Would that look like weakness? It seems to me it would look like good, sound sense. It is a wise man who, before acting, seeks to get information from all available sources; only the fool is ashamed to ask for advice, and blunders ahead, usually either ramming his head into a stone wall, or at least encountering absolutely unnecessary difficulties.

Uses Edison Cement.

W. E. Carner, Willits, Cal., says:

> In the issue of March 13, under the head, "Look Out For It," I see where F. R. Culbert says you must have Pathe cement for certain films. I am running "Exploits of Elaine" and find I can make patches with Edison cement. Having nothing but that brand, I took a piece of celluloid film just long enough to make a good patch, cleaned it, and cemented it to the clear side of the film, first having trimmed the non-inflammable so that the ends would butt square. It is a makeshift, but will let the operator get by what might otherwise be a mighty bad predicament.

Practical little stunts like this are of great value, therefore in behalf of 30,000 operators and at least half that number of manager readers I remove my chapeau, and say, many thanks, Brother Carner.

A Good Record.

Frank R. Culbert, Orange, Massachusetts, writes:

> I wish to express my opinion with regard to article in issue June 12th concerning exchanges sending out reels in poor condition, and your request that operators send in patches and faults cut out of films. I have been an operator for almost ten years. Have always made a practice of inspecting my reels, and have never had a break down on account of poor patches or broken ones. It requires me two hours to look over five reels of second run and put them in good condition. My own experience is that exchanges have many faults, and, if you only knew the real facts, they do not wish to be bothered with those kind of letters, nor will they give one any satisfaction. The only answer I ever received to a complaint was: "the reels came in too late, and we did not get time to repair them." I have handled almost every brand of film, and have taken service from nearly every exchange in this territory—especially in Boston. I now look at the matter thus: the whole trouble is up to three people, viz.: the operator, the theater manager and the film exchange. In the first place, all the patches now made, with the exception of a few, are not made the same as they were a few years ago, and the boys in the east don't like them, though from reports the western men are satisfied. The films which retain the old style patch are the Selig, Vitagraph, Biograph, L-Ko., and a few others. There are too many splices in Bio, Majestic and Reliance, and if they happen to be the new style ones, I think a great many broken sprocket holes result. However, it does no good to tell the exchange about it and you will get no satisfaction, and even no answer. At present, I am using the best make of films on the market, but there are the ever-present faults, nevertheless. Well, it is the duty of the operator to inspect and repair his reels every change, and not let the manager have him sweeping the theater, or posting bills, and running chances with his reels. A great many operators nowadays think that because they have a take-up and loop setter it is not necessary to repair the films at all, which is wrong. The duty of the exchange manager is to get more girls to look over the reels, or, better still, to have a man go around to different theaters and see how films are being treated. But this is not done. The exchange seems simply to look for the money and nothing else.

This is a somewhat jumbled, but rather interesting letter, although I cannot at all agree with the brother's conclusion. In the first place it is NOT the duty of the operator to inspect and repair films. Most emphatically it is not. It is the duty of the exchange. The operator is employed to project the reels, not to inspect them, and he has got enough to do too if he does the projecting in the best possible manner. Friend Culbert is mistaken. I don't write the exchange at all. I write to the headquarters of the company handling the exchange and they do the corresponding with the exchanges, and you bet it has effect, too. When an exchange manager receives complaints in that way he sits up and takes notice, and if he gets enough of them he will get busy too. The excuse that "the reels came in late and he did not get time to repair them" is no excuse at all, for the manager has no business to send out reels until they are inspected and repaired. The fact that the exhibitor is waiting for the reels does not constitute a valid excuse. In fact I repeat:

There is absolutely no valid excuse that can be made by film exchanges for sending reels to a theater until they have been thoroughly inspected and placed in first class repair.

Of course if this were rigidly carried out, it would probably mean the purchase of additional reels by the exchange, and a raise of price of service, but if that is necessary in order to accomplish the result it should be done, and any expense thus incurred is a legitimate expense of the business.

As to the change in the method of making patches, why that is a condition we will have to make the best of. You say the exchange manager should "get more girls." Yes, and he ought to get higher priced ones too, and no girl should be allowed to inspect and repair more than an average of perhaps ten reels of film a day; also the work of the inspector should be occasionally checked up, and the inspector should be held rigidly accountable for any mechanical faults found in the films after inspection.

It seems to me that one method of getting some action on this proposition would be for the various operators' unions to insist on say 50 cents an hour overtime for inspecting and repairing films; also the adoption of a rule prohibiting the men from running reels which are in bad condition. Running such reels add to the fire danger, and, moreover, tend to discredit the operator by compelling him to put on inferior projection. This being the fact, the union has a most excellent argument for the adoption of such a rule. If the manager finds he is obliged to pay real money for the inspection of films it won't be long before the howl that reaches the exchange managers will be so loud and so pronounced that something will be done.

Some Job.

B. Noble, Toronto, Canada, sends in the following:

> Say, old man, any time you get tired of that literary yob, just drop down this way. Here is a sample of the swell positions one can pick up around here most any day. But I guess you would not do, at that, for you are married, and at such a munificent salary as is offered your frau might get an enlargement of the head and put on too much style. A manager of a messenger service showed me this and said: "I thought you operators got pretty good pay. Why I pay my messenger kids more than that." Well, since then I have denied I am an operator. The local in Toronto is having a jolly time I don't think. A new union has started up and it is claimed they are offering to put their members in theaters and supply an assistant at eight dollars a week.

The brother encloses a clipping from a daily paper of an advertisement that reads: "Wanted—Operator for moving picture machine, with a 1915 license. A good, steady man required; single preferred. Wages $7.00 per week, or $4.00 per week and board. Chance for a job in factory making war supplies during day; operate at night. No union men need apply. Address Red Star Theater, Walkerton, Ont."

I do not think the Red Star theater need worry about any union men applying. At least I doubt if there will be a general movement of union men after that particular position. What the Red Star wants is a man who will work eight or ten hours a day in a factory making war supplies with which to kill other men, and then kill himself by putting in three or four hours in a hot operating room in the evening, making a total of anywhere from eleven or twelve to thirteen or fourteen hours a day, always assuming that the Red Star theater don't expect the operator to sweep out, get the reels, inspect the films, keep the sidewalk clean, polish up the front door and box office window clean out the cuspidor in the manager's office and a few other trifling chores. It is highly probable, however, that these things will be required of the Red Star operator, because a man who offers four dollars a week and board certainly is going to expect a whole lot for it.

As to the trouble the Toronto local is having, why I don't want to reap the ill will of any part of the Toronto union, but I am bound to say that from all reports that organization brought this trouble on its own head. From many sources I have been informed that the Toronto union paid more attention to playing politics than it did to union business; that its membership was divided into cliques, and that one clique fought another, all of which is pure unadulterated foolishness, nonsense and idiocy. Unions which use up any portion of their energy in internecine warfare or struggles are not going to get the best results. In all too many organizations it is not so much a question of getting results as it is of whether John Doe will boss the union or Jim Doe will boss it. Right here in New York City everything was ripped up the back for at least three years wholly, solely and entirely through the personal ambition of a few individuals. Nor has that spirit entirely disappeared in New York City even now, though things are, I am thankful to say, on the mend in that particular. A good business agent and a good president, and a good secretary are important, but

A union which works as a unit, one for all and all for one, standing solidly together, will accomplish far more with a comparatively poor set of officers than will a union which is divided by internecine struggles, political deals, and skul-duggery even though its officers be able men.

Right here in New York City I could name men who have, in the past, been officers of operators' unions, and who were smart, energetic and thoroughly capable, but their personal ambition overpowered everything else. When it came to the question as between the good of the body as a whole and their own advancement, why, in their mind, there was but one answer. Their ambition was paramount to everything else. Put into other words, the union politician is crooked. He perhaps would resent the application of that term, and he probably might resent it honestly too, but the fact remains that the term applies. He is crooked because he professes to be an honest union officer, yet he is seeking his own aggrandizement and his own ends more than he is seeking the good of the body as a whole. I personally know of many unions to which this applies. I am sorry to say it but it is a fact and you all know it is a fact.

When the Toronto union gets into shape again, I would advise its membership to keep its eyes open, both individually and collectively, and the very first man caught playing politics, take him down, duck him in the river and pull him out again. If that does not cure him throw him in bodily and don't bother about pulling him out—maybe he can swim.

I suppose this article will arouse the venom of quite some few of the good political brothers, but I am not concerned with that. If the shoe fits you by all means wear it; if you do not like the way it feels, mend your ways and then we will let you take it off.

Light (Continued).

THE intensity of light refers to its brightness, as for example, a sunshiny day possesses a more intense or brighter light (degree of illumination) than a cloudy day.

The intensity of light diminishes in proportion to the square of the distance from its source. For instance, let us refer to Figure No. 17, which represents light rays emanating from a small source, such as an arc lamp or the flame of a candle. Let the square A represent screen one foot square placed at a distance of one foot from the light and the square B screen placed at a distance of two feet from the light. These two squares are in a line with the light, square A exactly shades square B. If we remove square A the same amount of light which fell upon square A will now fall upon square B. Square B is twice the diameter of square A, or four times its area. Since the same amount of light which fell upon square A covers a surface four times as great at twice the distance, it follows that the intensity of the light falling upon B is only one-fourth of the intensity of light falling upon A, or conversely, the intensity of the light falling upon A is four times the intensity of light on screen B.

This law of illumination must be taken into account very particularly where artificial illumination is used, for if it takes a certain number of lights to illuminate a certain small set properly, it will require four times as many lights to properly iluminate a set which is only twice as large. Therefore, it is practically impossible to artificially illuminate a very large set since the limit of the practical number of artificial lights is soon reached.

When light strikes an object part of it is reflected or thrown back. It is upon this fact that we are enabled to see objects and to photograph them. It is upon the kind or quality of light reflected that enables one to photograph objects. As shown in our experiment with light sensitive paper the violet light is quite active photographically. While the other end of the spectrum, red, is not.

*Copyright, 1915, by The Chalmers Publishing Co.

If the object reflects all blue or violet the photographic sensitive surface will be strongly affected and the object easily photographed, but if the object reflects yellow and red color only the sensitive surface will be only feebly affected. It is for this reason that photographic operations are carried on in dark rooms which are illuminated only by faint red or orange light. All dark room lights should be carefully tested by exposing a sample of the most sensitive surface that is to be worked under the light in question for a greater period of time than such sample would be exposed under any ordinary working conditions. If on development the sample shows traces of fog, the light should be changed or its intensity decreased. When a certain color of light predominates, the unaided eye is not able to distinguish a contamination of another color, consequently wherever possible it is very desirable to make a spectroscopic examination of the light passed by screens used for dark room illumination.

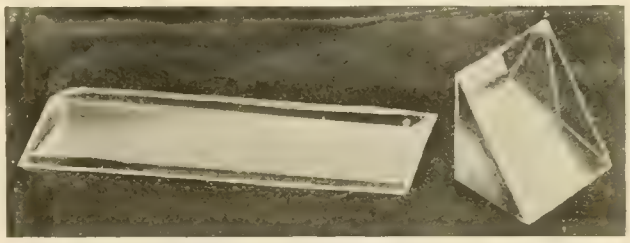

Fig. 12. Glass Prism.

From this it will be seen that much depends upon the quality of light reflected in photographic work.

Refraction. When light passes from one medium to another of different density it is refracted or bent as shown in diagram No. 11. The different colored rays being refracted or bent in different degrees. Upon this principle depends the construction of lenses.

Dispersion is shown in diagram No. 13: that is, light in passing through a glass prism is separated into its component parts, and in case of white light into the spectrum colors violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red.

Absorption. When light falls on an object which neither reflects, re-that nor transmits the light is said to be absorbed. No known substance is an absolute absorber of light; that is, an absolute non-reflector. A flat or matte black surface comes the nearest to being a total absorber of light, but it is not possible to paint an object so black but what sufficient light will be reflected from it to reveal its details when brilliantly illuminated. Thus we see that what we call blackness is not that no light reaches the eye but that very little does. The blackest object looks gray in comparison to what is called Chevreul's black, which is the darkness of the mouth of a dark cavern or a hole in a large box lined with black velvet.

If the object reflects only red all the other colors are absorbed; if only yellow is reflected then all others are absorbed. Again, if we use, as our incident light, any particular color of light which happens to be wholly absorbed by the object, that object will appear black; if, for example, we look at a yellow and a blue flower by the yellow flame of a spirit lamp with common salt in the wick, the yellow flower appears distinctly yellow, for it does not absorb yellow light on reflection; but the blue flower looks black, for it absorbs all the yellow light and reflects none of it.

We have briefly discussed four qualities of light. The entire science of optics is embraced under these four sub-heads and the better we understand these properties of light the more intelligently will we be able to know how to illuminate a scene and what lenses to use, in order to obtain any photographic result that we wish.

We have already found that light is propagated outwardly in straight lines in every direction from a luminous object. When it strikes a smooth reflecting surface, such as a mirror or a pool of still water, it is reflected back from the reflecting surface at the same angle at which it strikes, or in more scientific terms, the angle of reflection is equal to the angle of the incidence, as shown in Figure 18. As we have become accustomed to visualizing objects as being in a straight line before us, since light always travels in straight lines, when we look into a mirror we do not see the mirror itself but the image which it reflects and the reflected image appears to be behind or beyond the mirror, since our habit of sight perceives the reflected object in that direction. If, however, the rays of light fall upon an object which is not perfectly smooth, each tiny particle which composes its surface presents a different angle to the light rays than its neighbor, so that the light will be reflected at a different angle from each of these particles. This light reflected from the rough surface has thus had its direction broken so that it travels in many different directions. This is shown in exaggerated form in Figure No. 19.

Such light is called a diffused light, thus, on a cloudy or hazy day, the light of the sun is diffused by its many reflections and re-reflections from the particles of watery vapor in the atmosphere. On a clear day the direct rays of the sun cast a dark shadow when any object is interposed between the sun and any surface upon which its rays fall, but when the light is diffused the reflected rays from many directions fall beneath the object, since the object is not in line with these reflected rays, and illuminate the surface beneath the object and we are not able to distinguish any perceptible shadows. Practically all interior illumination is diffused light, for we can only have direct illumination where the sun shines through a window or other opening, and we find it necessary to diffuse the light in interior scenes in order to make them appear natural, for it is not yet possible in the majority of cases to obtain sufficient illumination in an actual interior to act upon a photographic film with sufficient intensity in the short time of the exposure necessary with the motion picture camera. We have to build our interior sets in a studio leaving them open to the light at the top, and generally upon two sides, thus allowing a flood of light to enter. If the stage is an open platform, or if the studio is not of ground or ribbed glass, which of itself diffuses the light, it becomes necessary to suspend screens of thin white cloth called diffusion or halation screens above the set, to break up and diffuse the direct rays of the sun. We can all recall witnessing, even very recently, interior scenes taken in the direct sunlight where the pictures hung on the wall cast long oblique shadows and the characters, as they went through their actions on the screen, were each accompanied by a funereal silhouette which mocked every gesture in grotesque distortion upon the floor or wall. Happily, such scenes have now passed into the limbo of fading memories. When artificial lights are used, such as arc lamps, the light is diffused by ground or ribbed glass screens or with tracing cloth or similar material. The tubes of Cooper-Hewitt lights cover such an area that it is not usually necessary to use a screen for them, for the light, coming from so large an area covered by the tubes, is all ready diffused enough.

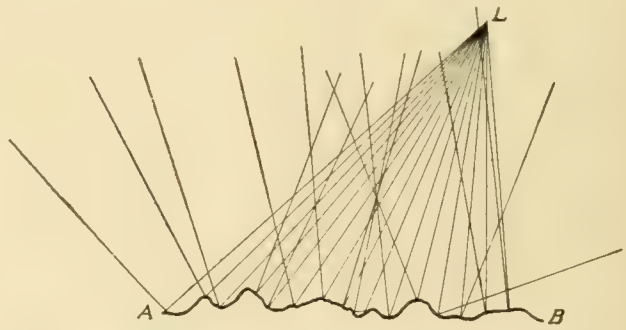

Fig. 19. Diffusion of Light by Irregular Surfaces.

When we produced the spectrum by passing a ray of light through a glass prism we found that the beam of light was bent or turned to one side by the glass; that is, the light was refracted. This refraction only takes place at the point of entrance between two mediums of different density. After being refracted at the surface the light continues to travel through the second medium in a straight line from the point of entry to the point where it emerges on the other side where a second refraction takes place, light again continuing to travel in a straight line. This angle of refraction varies according to the density of the medium in its relation to light and is always the same in the same medium, thus, different kinds of glass and all transparent crystals and liquids have different angles of refraction. This angle of refraction is called the index of refraction. These indexes of refraction have been measured by the mathematicians who make calculations for manufacturers of lenses and it is possible to calculate mathematically a formula for a lens and predict all of its properties before one has been made. Such calculations are, however, far beyond the scope or need of any ordinary photographer.

In Figure No. 20 we have a point from which emanates rays of light.

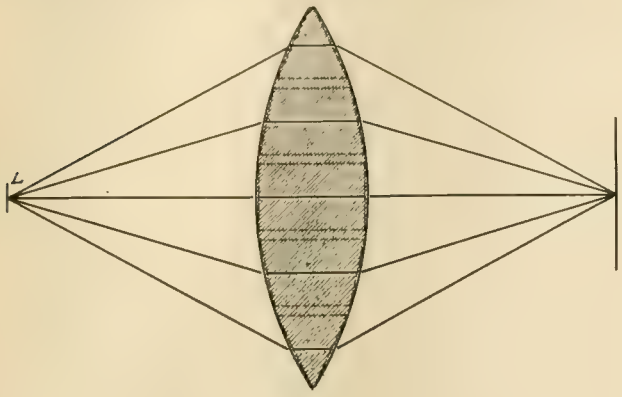

Fig. 21. Lens and Prism Series Superimposed.

Suppose we take a number of prisms with varying angles as illustrated in the diagram, the angle of each being such that each ray which passes through each prism is refracted to the point so that each of these rays is again collected at this point. Let us now examine the line of prisms which we have thus placed. The central prisms have sides which are nearly parallel which progress outward from the center, the angle increases until the two faces come together. We will now replace the line of prisms with a lens covering practically the same range as the prisms as in Figure No. 21. We find that the lens also gathers all of the rays as the prisms did and refracts them again to the same point so that we can consider the lens as a number of prisms rounded off into a single piece, or speaking still more exactly, that the lens is a continuation of an infinite number of prisms, the flat surface of which is too small for the eye to detect. This infinite number of surfaces, or points, we find ranges itself into the segment of a circle. This refraction of rays emanating from a point back to a point again is termed a "point of focus."

If we now take two luminous points at the same distance from the lens but separated a short distance from one another, as in Figure No. 22, we will find if we have a screen for the rays to fall upon, that the two points will be reproduced side by side in exact miniature on the screen but that the point of illumination which is above the original point of illumination is reproduced below the point of the original point of focus of the first point. If we now move this screen closer to or farther away from the lens, we find that the point of light enlarges in a circle of illumination. This is termed the circle of confusion. By moving the screen back and forth we also find that there is only one position in which the points of illumination are perfectly reproduced.

If, however, we now move one of these points of illumination to a much greater distance than the other, we find that while one is sharp and distinct the other forms a small circle of confusion and that when we move the screen so that the more distant one is in focus, that the other becomes a circle of confusion, or out of focus, as it is termed. If, however, we move the two points closer to one another, but still at different distances from the lens, we find that we can bring them both to a focus on the screen or rather, so near to a focus that the eye is not able to distinguish the difference in sharpness between the two. This difference in distance between the two points of illumination is called the depths of focus.

Mae Hotely's New Boots

They Shocked the Shoemaker, But She Showed Him What She Wanted.

EVERYTHING from the store but the boots" is the brag of Mae Hotely about her new costume. She used to pride herself on the fact that she never wore the same twice, but this has become the day of the trade mark clothes and the Lubin comedienne fell into line with the rest of them, big boots and all. But instead of having a costume made that would advertise itself as a costume, made for the express purpose of being funny, she took a trip from the Beach to Philadelphia, where a search of the stores yielded a hat as funny as anything that might be especially manufactured and it is a 1915 model, at that. So too, is the suit. It came right out of stock and has not been altered, but the boots were quite another matter. Miss Hotely realized that to be funny without big boots was impossible at the moment or, more correctly, she should belong to the thirty-third degree unless she wore the regalia, so she hunted up a shoemaker in Atlantic City. She told him what she wanted, but he refused to believe her. He insisted upon taking her measurements and assured her that the shoes would be plenty large enough to be comfortable. She assured him that she wanted shoes large enough to be most uncomfortable. It was unbelievable. He shook his head. Even the information that she played in motion pictures carried no enlightenment to the son of Sunny Italy. He didn't know whether she was drunk or crazy, and he did not care, but he would make no boots. Then she had an inspiration. She went back to the studio and borrowed a pair of boots from Billie Reeves. Two minutes later she strolled in on the shoemaker with the "scows" protruding from beneath her lingerie dress. "Make them like this," she explained, and when the poor man came out of his trance, he did as Exhibit A will show.

ESSANAY PLAYERS RETURN FROM TENNESSEE.

E. H. Calvert and his company of Essanay players, after three months of picture work in the Tennessee mountains, have completed the work there and returned from the Chattanooga studio to Chicago. Nearly a score of photoplays, requiring a mountainous setting, were produced by the southern company. Notable among them were several plays concerning the famous character, "Tish," in the stories of Mary Roberts Rinehart. Mr. Calvert and his company soon will leave for Starved Rock, Ill., where the outdoor scenes in "The Man Trail" will be taken. This is the red-blooded tale of lumber camp life, written by Henry Oyen. The wild and rugged scenery of Starved Rock is wonderfully well adapted for the scenic background to this play. It will be a multiple reel feature, released through the V-L-S-E.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

A NIGHT'S LODGING (MinA), July 8.—Reviewed by Edward Weitzel on page 668, issue of July 24.

AS IT HAPPENED (Biograph), July 12.—Harry Carey and Claire McDowell head the cast of this one-reel drama of the West. The heroine's brother brings about the misunderstanding which makes love's path a thorny one. The story is not complicated, but straightforward and interesting, and has been effectively transferred to the film.

THE REV. SALAMANDER, UNATTACHED (Essanay), July 12.—A new plot, with a baseball atmosphere, makes this one-reel comedy doubly welcome at this season of the year. The production, including a bit of the Great American Game, has been cleverly done.

THE COMING OF THE KINGDOM (Road o' Strife Series, No. 15) (Lubin), July 12.—The final number of the Emmet Campbell Hall serial shows Alene renouncing a kingdom for the man she loves, and closes with the lovers in a fond embrace. The film reproduces some elaborately staged court scenes. The work of the entire cast all through the serial has been uniformly excellent.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 55, 1915 (Selig), July 12.—Celebrating a sane Fourth, New York, is the first news item. World's largest flag, New York; juvenile Fourth of July parade, Evanston, Ill.; White Sox winning at Panama-Pacific Exposition; old time fiddlers, Roanoke, Va.; Frank Holt under arrest, Glen Cove; Lucile fashions; Zeppelin raids, London; war pictures, Belgium; burial in London of Lieut. Warneford; start of Liberty Bell for San Francisco, complete the reel.

MR. JARR AND GERTRUDE'S BEAUX (No. 14 of the Jarr Family Series) (Vitagraph), July 12.—Gertrude, the Jarr servant, and her four beaux, have the center of the stage in this comedy. A park bench, three pairs of white duck trousers and a pot of glue are among the list of "props" with which Willie Jarr helps on the fun. Florence Natol makes Gertrude a dashing damsel, when dressed in her Sunday best, and Harry Fisher, Edward Favor, Logan Paul and Jay Dwiggins are an amusing quartette of swains.

A FLASHLIGHT FLIVVER (Kalem), July 13.—The reply of the facetious photographer, "I must answer you in the negative," when asked by a customer, "Will the picture be a good one?" cannot be applied to this one-reel comedy. "Ham" and "Bud" attempt to run a photograph gallery and their efforts are positively funny.

WHAT A CINCH (Lubin), July 13.—A half-reel farce which depends largely for its humor upon the ability of the producer and the cast. Will Louis, and the people under his direction, have been fairly successful in bringing about this result.

STUDIES IN CLAY (Lubin), July 13.—A novel and amusing cartoon comedy, on the same reel with "What a Cinch." The drawings are by Vincent Whitman.

THE PARSON WHO FLED WEST (Selig), July 13.—The story of a minister who takes the crime of another man upon himself, this one-reel Western drama uncovers a vein of sentiment which will appeal to many. The acting and the directing are praiseworthy.

THE FABLE OF "THE SCOFFER WHO FELL HARD" (Essanay), July 14.—Golf players will find this one-reel fable, by George Ade, a treat. It illustrates the grand maxim: No man is safe after he makes one wallop, and the fate of a scoffer who becomes a bug is traced with the best brand of Ade humor. Harry Dunkinson's playing of the title role scores heavily.

THE HONEYMOON BABY (Vitagraph), July 14.—The horrible fate of a newly married couple who try to escape detection by taking a borrowed baby with them on their honeymoon, is set forth most humorously in this one-reel comedy. Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew are the Newlyweds; the baby is also a good actor.

THE ONE FORGOTTEN (Biograph), July 15.—Isabel Rea, Edward Cecil and Frank Newburg, make this one-reel drama entertaining. The story is ultra sentimental, but the moral is sound, a recalcitrant husband being brought to realize the worth of the wife he neglects.

A PIPE DREAM (Essanay), July 15.—The first half of this one-reel farce is superior to the latter half. It is, nevertheless, an average good offering. Billy Mason is amusing as the tramp, and Ruth Hennessy is a lightly-tripping fairy.

THE FIGHTING KID (MinA), July 15.—Reviewed by Edward Weitzel on page 668, issue of July 24.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL No. 56, 1915 (Selig), July 15.—Views of a cyclone in Missouri, also at Cincinnati and Ludlow, Ky., take up the first part of the film. The other items: Race between Vanitie and Resolute, New London; 6,000 men swearing allegiance to the flag, Detroit, Mich.; Lucile fashions; parade at Lowell, Mass.; social-worker evicted, Chicago; newsboys at Woodland Beach, Staten Island, N. Y.; war pictures from England, Italy and Serbia.

BILLY, THE BEAR TAMER (Vitagraph), July 15.—The humor of this one-reel farce is not at all subtle, but most of the action takes place in the open, and the laughs are reasonably frequent. Billy Quirk, Constance Talmadge, and Albert Roccardi labor incessantly and successfully with their several roles.

BROKEN WAYS (Biograph), July 16.—A one-reel Griffith re-issue, with Henry B. Walthall and Blanche Sweet, the picture is its own excuse for again being offered to patrons of the screen.

THE BACHELOR'S BABY (Essanay), July 16.—G. M. Anderson is again seen in the role of a man who sacrifices his own happiness for the woman he loves. The one-reel drama is carefully mounted, Mr. Anderson giving an earnest and painstaking performance. Margaret Clayton plays a young girl most creditably.

AN HOUR OF FREEDOM (Lubin), July 16.—Here is an original plot. It is taken from a story by John Barton Oxford, and makes a rattling good one-reel comedy. Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe play the leads in the right spirit and the entire cast is adequate.

WELCOME TO BOHEMIA (Vitagraph), July 16.—Real comic complications and lively action makes this one-reel farce an excellent vehicle for the endeavors of Wally Van, Nitra Frazer, Cissy Fitz-Gerald, and a number of other experienced and spirited players of farce. L. Case Russel is the name of the author.

THE LITTLE RUNAWAYS (Biograph), July 17.—Two bright little children assist Gus Pixley, Irma Dawkins and Jack Mulhall in putting over this one-reel drama. The story is light in texture, but appealing, the child element being handled naturally.

FOR HIS MOTHER (Edison), July 17.—Paul Niles has written a one-reel drama of army life which deals with the common soldier, and shows how army discipline reclaims a wild young chap. The play is well made and well produced. Carlton King, Herbert Yost and Helen Strickland play the leading parts.

JANE OF THE SOIL (Essanay), July 17.—A Tennessee mountain heroine, but no moonshiner element, gives this two-reel drama the charm of novelty. The story averages well, the action is brisk, and the acting of Lillian Drew, Richard C. Travers and Edmund F. Cobb effective.

A DEED OF DARING (Episode No. 36 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 17.—The title does not do this one-reel drama justice: there are several deeds of daring performed by the nervy Miss Holmes before the play is finished. A carload of invisible Chinamen is utilized, and events are kept at the old breathless tension.

WIFIE'S MA COMES BACK (Lubin), July 17.—This one-reel comedy is a brilliant example of how not to treat a mother-in-law. Mr. B. Reeves, in some mysterious manner, has acquired a wife, much coin, and an invalid mother-in-law. He attempts a little amusement at the sick woman's expense, and has the tables turn upon himself. A very good comedy.

LIVES OF THE JUNGLE (Selig), July 17.—Nothing particularly new is revealed in this one-reel drama. The incidents are entirely probable, however, and have been carefully transferred to the screen. The result brings the drama into the acceptable class of photoplays.

General Film Company Specials.

MIDNIGHT AT MAXIM'S (Kalem), July 12.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig, on page 2111, issue of June 26.

THE WOMAN (Essanay), July 12.—In this Chaplin two-reel release Charlie treats himself to a shave and his audience to a new phase of his art. He dons the garments of a fashionable young lady, and impersonates the fair creature with uncommon skill. The picture does not contain as much rough-and-tumble comedy as most of its predecessors, but is full of fun of a more subdued type.

THE SMOLDERING (Selig), July 12.—A two reel drama in which mother love in the heart of a drug user gives her strength to fight back the craving long enough to insure her son's marriage. The theme is a morbid one, unrelieved by any touches of comedy, but has considerable dramatic strength. The production has been given every necessary accessory, but the stage direction is occasionally at fault.

COINCIDENCE (Biograph), July 13.—This two-part drama, taken from two stories by Roy Norton, tells a sympathetic story of considerable dramatic power. The producer has given careful attention to his part of the work and Jack Drumeir's impersonation of a blind musician is a fine example of deep feeling and artistic appreciation. Mary Malatesta, Ivan Christy, Walter Coyle and Joseph McDermott offer characterizations of merit.

TEMPER (Essanay), July 13.—This three-reel drama, written by H. S. Sheldon, has all the elements of a photoplay of the best type. The story is powerful, true to life and preaches a strong moral. Henry B. Walthall plays the leading character with feeling and skill and is finely supported by Ruth Stonehouse, Ernest Maupin and Warda Howard.

A NATURAL MAN (Vitagraph), July 13.—Things as they are not have often been woven into an effective play. Such is the case with this two-reel photoplay. The story is apocryphal, but possesses interest, several touches of humor, and is more than passably well acted by Otto Lederer, Alfred Vosburgh, Myrtle Gonzales and their associates.

THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW PATH (Kalem), July 14.—This two-reel sensational drama pictures a condition in the industrial life of a large city which is founded on fact, the struggles of a young girl to support herself on the small wage received from a department store. The drama is a creditable piece of work from every point of view. Ollie Kirkby, Marin Sais, Frank Jonasson and Arthur Shirley play the principal characters.

ALL FOR OLD IRELAND (Lubin), July 14.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 667, issue of July 24.

A HOUSE OF CARDS (Lubin), July 15.—The symbolism in this three-reel drama will be best understood by adepts at draw poker. The story, however, is engrossing, modern in theme, and has been well produced by Leon D. Kent, L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, Melvin Mayo and Grace Huntley, are more than satisfactory in the leading roles.

THE OCTOPUS (Selig), July 15.—Thomas Santschi's production of this three-reel photoplay, adapted from a story by Charles Belmont Davis, brings out the strong points in a convincing manner. The theme deals partly with the seamy side of life and the logical conclusion is not sacrificed to the "happy ending." Thomas Santschi, Lillian Haywood and Leo Pierson form a competent trio in the leading characters.

HER VOCATION (Edison), July 16.—The author of this three-reel drama believes that caring for home and husband is the true vocation of a married woman. This view of the matter is set forth entertainingly, if not convincingly, the adventures, during a hunt for local color, which an authoress and her husband find their way, being decidedly interesting. Margaret Prussing, Augustus Phillips, Sally Crute and Harry Beaumont are well cast.

THE CONFESSION OF MADAME BARASTOFF (Vitagraph), July 17.—There is much to praise in this three-reel drama, written and produced by Charles L. Gaskill. It deals intelligently and dramatically with a certain grade of Russian society, the army atmosphere being skilfully sustained. The interest never drops, and the climax is reached—and completed—with telling effect. Gladden James, John Costello and Edna Holland form the familiar triangle. Their acting merits nothing but praise.

Mutual Film Corporation.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO 28, 1915 (Mutual), July 15.—In this issue we see the French battleship "Conde," General Galopin reviewing the French troops, that portion of the Capitol at Washington wrecked by the Frank Holt bomb, a dredge passing through the Panama Canal, Red Cross dogs, the race between the "Vanite" and the "Resolute," the first annual beach fashion show at "La Jolla," near San Diego, and a gala moving picture performance at the Gaumont Palace, Paris, France.

A CHASE BY MOONLIGHT (Komic), July 18.—A good cast is employed in the comedy of this film, namely Fay Tincher, Elmer Booth, Clarence Barr, Max Davidson and Louise Aichel. Fay's papa does not altogether approve of her choice of a sweetheart, which paves the way for the chase which is further aided by unrelated incidents that flow along in the most natural manner.

THE LIE (Reliance), July 19.—This picture is attractive principally because of the beautiful coast locations chosen for its setting. It treats of the story of a man who is shipwrecked and comes home several years later to find his wife married to another.

HIS COLLEGE WIFE (Beauty), July 20.—A comedy number, attractively pictured, in which Billy is called home from college and keeps his marriage a secret. The young wife acts as maid. Complications come up of an amusing nature. Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber play the leads. This is quite pleasing.

THE RUNAWAYS (Majestic), July 20.—This is a play played by children and is in many instances very amusing. Carmen De Rue, Violet Radcliff and George Stone have the principal roles. A rustic atmosphere has been brought into the picture, which is really very charming.

WAIT AND SEE (American), July 21.—A pretty love story, with Edward Coxen, Winifred Greenwood and others in the cast. The young millionaire loses his shoe and the girl finds it, discovering "Mr. Cinderella" by advertising in the papers. This is nicely presented and makes good light comedy.

OLD MOTHER GREY (Reliance) July 21.—Teddy Sampson is an attractive figure in this production in which an old woman is persecuted by worthless relatives who gain possession of her fortune through illegal means. The picture is quite an enjoyable one.

P. HENRY JENKENS AND MARS (Falstaff), July 23.—A new variation of a familiar theme, in which Riley Chamberlin does some good comedy work. He appears as a modest clerk who for one day wears the helmet of Mars. This so fills him with courage that he talks back at his wife, gets a raise in salary and surprises everybody, himself included. This is good comedy.

THE LITTLE CATAMOUNT (Majestic) July 23.—Dorothy Gish appears in this as a mountain girl who falls in love with a fisherman, the latter portrayed by W. E. Lawrence. The atmosphere is good and the characterizations better than usual. This makes a very pleasing out-door subject.

MAKING OVER GRANDPA (Royal), July 24.—In this the girl rents a baby and brings it home in order to touch the heart of her miserly old grandfather. The idea in this is good but it is not handled very strongly.

HIS TWO PATIENTS (Thanhouser), July 25.—The wife of an army officer imagines herself an invalid. A specialist is sent for, who discovers she is shamming and tricks her into walking alone. Later he operates on a lame girl, falls in love with her and teaches her to walk. Harry Benham plays the leading role; the girl cripple was appealing in her few scenes. A pretty story, well handled.

WHEN AMBROSE DARES WALRUS (Keystone), July 12.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 668, issue of July 24.

THE FOX WOMAN (Majestic), July 15.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 666, issue of July 24.

THE AMERICANO (Reliance) July 17.—A fairly interesting two-reeler of a semi-military nature. Marguerite Loveridge, Lawrence Payton, Raymond Wells, Carl Formes, Jr., Kate Toncray and Thomas Jefferson comprise the cast. The scene of the story is laid in Mexico, where the Manhattan Oil Company is operating. Marguerite Loveridge is especially charming.

THE MYSTIC JEWEL (Majestic), July 18.—There is nothing out of the ordinary about this two-reel production which is a melodrama with a slight flavor of the Orient. A jewel stolen from a woman of the Orient by a young American is the cause of all the excitement. This woman enters the room where the young man and his friend are seated, infuses poisonous gas into the atmosphere of the room, and attempts to gain possession of her jewel in this way. A portion of the story of the woman is inserted to better explain the circumstances.

THE HONOR OF THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY (American), July 19.—A very fair plot characterizes the story of this two-reel film. The district attorney's daughter makes him promise never to sacrifice his honor. His trial comes when he arrives too late for his daughter's marriage to a young man whom he believes to have committed a murder. It is afterward discovered, however, that the young man is innocent of the charge.

DIRTY WORK IN A LAUNDRY (Keystone), July 19.—Ford Sterling appears in this two-reel low comedy, assisted by Minta Durfee and others. The action, most of it, takes place in a laundry and quite a lot of harmless fun is extracted out of the institution, making full use of the equipment and machinery. There is also a spirited chase in which Ford leaps from a motorcycle to an auto, both going at top speed. This contains many laughable incidents.

THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY (Thanhouser), July 20.—A strong two-reel presentation of Oscar Wilde's famous story. The plot is unusual, and even though none of the familiar epigrams of the author find their way into the subtitles there is an artistic flavor to the production. Dorian's picture shows evidence in the passing years of his selfish, dissipated life, though his own countenance remains unchanged. Harris Gordon handles the leading role effectively and Helen Fulton was pleasing as the ill-fated young actress who won Dorian's heart. The story is unusual and well worth while.

THE MATING (Mutual Masterpicture, N. Y. M. P. Corp.), July 22.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 668, issue of July 24.

OUTCASTS OF SOCIETY (Thanhouser), July 27.—This two-reel story of a young girl falsely accused and convicted of shoplifting is one of quite strong appeal. There is a touch of human nature and some real pathos in the prison scenes, where she meets both the girl who is responsible for her plight and also the latter's mother. The prison friendship later leads to continued friendship on the outside, when all begin a new life together. Mignon Anderson plays the leading role. This is much stronger than the average story of its type.

THE PHANTOM EXTRA (Broncho), July 28.—A two reel subject, featuring Richard Stanton, Rhea Mitchell and others. The hero is a young politician, elected to the legislature. He falls in with a fast set of lobbyists, who want him to vote against the mine bill. The heroine, daughter of an editor, has a fake extra printed, telling of a great mine disaster. This induces the politician to stand by his principles and vote for the measure. Later he forgives the girl for her trickery. This is well constructed and entertaining in spite of the girl's resort to such measures, which always weaken the character of a story.

WHEN LOVE LEADS (Domino), July 29.—A two-reel number, with Clara Williams, Harry Keenan, Jack Nelson and Margaret Gibson in the cast. The older sister Mary sees Florence marry their employer, whom she herself loves. Florence becomes very extravagant and steals money from the safe, following this by eloping with her former lover. Mary tries to save her sister's reputation by taking blame for the theft, but her employer learns of his wife's guilt. The story closes with him presumably becoming interested in Mary. This is a little short of conviction in some respects, as stories of sacrifice frequently are, at the same time it is well constructed and fairly strong.

WHEN THE TIDE CAME IN (Kaybee), July 30.—A two-reel number, with Estelle Allan, Thomas Chatterton, George Fischer and Louise Glaum in the cast. The city girl comes to the coast where she fascinates the young fisherman. He neglects his own sweetheart who drowns herself. The city girl throws him over and the story is brought to a close by him finding the dead body of his former sweetheart. The plot is not new or particularly strong; the seacoast settings are attractive. The photography is also good.

North American Film Corporation

THE HIGHEST BIDDER (North American), July 19.—No. 12 of "The Diamond from the Sky." Hagar is in the sanitarium and slowly regaining her reason. The Stanley estate is sold at sheriff's sale, Arthur purchasing it through Detective Blake. The sale scenes are well staged and contain some comedy. Later Arthur, still known as John Powell in the West, strikes it rich in the oil fields. He is seen and recognized by Vivian in a cabaret. Luke takes the diamond from the Indian papoose in the closing scenes. The interest is well maintained.

HOW EGGS ARE TESTED (July 26).—An interesting and instructive illustration of the manner in which the freshness, and vice versa, of eggs is ascertained. On the same reel with the following subjects:

THE SPIDER MONKEY (July 26).—This presents an attractive illustration of one of the most interesting of the monkey species, a little animal which lives entirely in the trees, living on fruits and soft bark. On the same reel with the above. "The Mongoose," a comment on which appears elsewhere, is also on the same reel with the above two subjects.

SPITBALL SADIE (July 31).—A rather enjoyable farce comedy centered about a baseball game in which the female pitcher of the female team that comes to town causes a sensation, and mischievous Luke in an attempt to impersonate the lady, gets what's coming to him.

RIGHT OFF THE REEL (Joker), July 5.—Max Asher and company disport themselves in this characteristic number. He plays a moving picture actor who masquerades as a wealthy man to gain the widow's daughter. He succeeds but breaks the widow's heart. This is not extremely funny, but has many amusing moments.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 175 (Universal), July 14.—Raising the submerged yacht, Ankle Deep II.; a children's celebration in Cleveland; Bryan welcomed home at Lincoln, Neb.; aftermath of the Cincinnati cyclone, and other scenes are featured in this number.

THE TALE OF HIS PANTS (Nestor), July 26.—This one-reel comedy number features Lee Moran, Billie Rhodes, Neal Burns and others. The humor is not particularly strong, but some of the country characterizations are good, particularly in the church scenes. The plot is very slight; it makes a fair offering.

THE NEW JITNEY IN TOWN (Imp), July 27.—A light comedy number featuring King Baggot and Jane Gail. He leaves his clerkship and buys an old automobile which he converts into a jitney bus. Some amusing incidents result. A pleasing light subject.

THE DOUBLE STANDARD (Victor), July 28.—In which two young wives smoke, flirt and conduct themselves as their husbands do. All meet in a restaurant and happiness follows a general mixup. This is neither very new in plot or strong in treatment. It makes an average number.

THE RISE AND FALL OF OFFICER 13 (Nestor), July 30.—A typical number by Smith Addison, featuring Lee Moran as a young recruit on the police force. He proves himself a hero and gets in strong with the chief and his daughter. Later some toughs queer him and he loses out. A good light plot, handled in a pleasing way.

MEIN FRIENDT SCHNEIDER (Big U), July 31.—Murdock MacQuarrie is featured in this as a pawn broker. Robin Adair and Anna Lehr are the sweethearts, the latter playing the pawnbroker's daughter. Suspected of being a money shark the pawnbroker turns out to be a friend and benefactor of the poor. The production strikes an appealing note and leaves a good feeling with the observer. A nice little story.

THE VILLAGE SMITH (Joker), July 31.—A number by Clarence G. Badger, with Max Asher, Gale Henry and others in the cast. The widow dresses up a hobo visitor and goes riding with him to make the blacksmith jealous. Low comedy of about average merit.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

BOUND ON THE WHEEL (Rex), July 25.—This three-reel offering, written by Julius G. Furthmann, features Lon Chaney and Elsie Jane Wilson, with George Berrill, Tom Webster and Lule Warrenton in minor roles. It is a close and accurate study of life in a poor factory district, and like an Ibsen drama it looks squarely at life, leaving out none of the sordid details. The result is a picture that is unpleasant and depressing, and yet it is done so admirably that the observer is impressed with the truth of what he sees. The son of shiftless parents marries a factory girl; his father dies of drink and his mother of heart disease. Later the son becomes worthless and accidentally drinks poison, leaving his wife free to find real happiness with another.

THE EARL OF PAWTUCKET (Broadway Universal Features), July 26.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 667, issue of July 24.

A STARTLING DISCOVERY (Universal Special), July 26.—No. 6 of "The Broken Coin" series, in two reels. Kitty and Frederick are still in the clutches of the Apaches. Roleaux comes to the rescue of Kitty and he and she have some thrilling adventures. The leap from the cliff on horseback was well shown. Later Kitty succeeds in getting both parts of the coin, but as she is in the act of putting them together a hand reaches out with a revolver, bringing the reel to a mysterious close.

THE FLIGHT OF A NIGHT BIRD (Gold Seal), July 27.—A very pretty love story in two reels, featuring Hobart Henley, Cleo Madison, Agnes Vernon and others. The development of the first reel, in which the rich young idler meets the girl is natural, unforced and almost a model for this sort of situation. The hero's later adventures as a factory employee are also entertaining. A good, light love story.

LIFE AND MOVING PICTURES (L-KO), July 28.—A two reel low comedy number, featuring Harry and Mrs. Gribbon, H. Pathe Lehrmann, Alice Howell and Billie Ritchie. Mr. O'Dominwell has just married and is very jealous of his wife's cousin. They attend a moving picture show and see pictured the troubles of many newly wedded couples. The husband starts a rough house at the show. This is characteristic and has many laughs in it for admirers of this type of comedy. There is nothing of an objectionable nature in the number.

HERITAGE (Laemmle), July 29.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 666, issue of July 24.

THE HUNCHBACK'S ROMANCE (Imp), July 30.—A two-reel production, based on a short story by Bruno Lessing. The story depicts Yiddish characters and a cast headed by Rebecca Gernstein presents same in a competent way. The plot concerns a hunchback garment worker who brought a baby girl over from Russia and raised her. She falls in love with a younger man and the hunchback saves both their lives in a fire. The atmosphere of the production is excellent and the action good. The climax comes in the fire scenes when Alexis proves himself a real man in spite of his infirmity and his love for the girl. The acting is sincere and convincing.

FAREWELL DINNER TENDERED A. E. YARR.

A surprise banquet was tendered to A. E. Yarr, retiring manager of the Milwaukee office of the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit, on the evening of July 14, in the Badger Room of the Hotel Wisconsin. Plates were set for fifteen.

Mr. Yarr was hurriedly called to the hotel and was very much surprised to see his numerous friends gathered around the festive board to wish him Godspeed and good luck in any new venture that he undertakes. Mr. Yarr has made many good friends by his never-failing courtesies and good will toward everyone connected with the motion picture industry.

The table was headed by the old "vet," E. H. Hoyt of the Metro Film Service, Minneapolis, as toastmaster, and he called upon J. Gallagher of the Mid-West Feature Company, Minneapolis, who responded by giving an interesting talk of conditions in his territory. Louis B. Goulden, president of the Goulden Film Corporation, had the table in roars of laughter by his clever imitations of two local film characters. Sam Norville, of the Milwaukee Feature Film Company, responded with his original poem, "Remorse." Walter A. Baier, of the Jacobs Film Booking Offices, responded with an interesting talk on film conditions in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. Yarr tried to respond but was overcome with emotion, but nevertheless managed to thank those present for their good will. Best wishes were extended to B. C. Smith who succeeds Mr. Yarr as manager of the local office of the Casino Company.

Others present were S. J. Smith, Princess theater, Sioux Falls, S. D.; S. R. Clingan and W. Loranger, of the Casino Company, Detroit; Max Wiesner, World Film, Chicago; W. Brimmer, M. Kann and V. De Lorenzo, of the local Universal office, and Frank T. De Lorenzo, of the Badger Poster Mounting Company.

WORLD FILM PRESENTS MONTAGUE LOVE

Montague Love, who stayed behind in this country on the return of the Cyril Maude players to England after their success in this country, and who later affiliated with the Arnold Daly successful revivals at the Park theater, New York, and a recognized English leading man of note, also a screen actor of remarkable ability, plays the leading male role in the successful screen drama, "Sunday," recently produced by the George W. Lederer Filmotions Corporation starring Miss Reine Davies, "The American Beauty of the Stage," and presented by World Film.

most ways, as far above any other form of expression as that shining sun is above the earth, where frightened-to-death Americans are allowing themselves to be made into images resembling the denizens of Russia.

At the conclusion of Mr. Griffith's remarks and after the director had been given three cheers, President Pearce thanked him for his address. Mr. Tugwell moved that the league go on record definitely as opposed to all forms of legalized censorship.

The motion was passed unanimously.

Friday—Closing Session.

The final session was one of the most interesting of the week. Not only was there considerable business transacted—following chiefly upon a supplementary report of the committee on resolutions—but near the close many players entered the hall. Remarks by Hobart Bosworth, Frank Keenan, Raymond Hitchcock and Mack Sennett held the attention of the delegates far beyond the hour named for the final adjournment. Of course, the principal business of the day was the election of officers, although interest in this was minimized by the fact that it had been the general understanding that President Pearce, owing to pressure of private business, would not be a candidate for re-election and that Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, would be selected to succeed him. This happened.

The annual per capita tax was reduced from $2 to $1. Thanks were extended to the San Francisco exhibitors, headed by Mark Cory, chairman of the arrangements committee, for the excellent way in which they had provided for the comfort and entertainment of the visitors. The trade press was praised and thanked for its support of the League. There was a lively discussion of the resolution deploring the operation of theaters by manufacturers, but it was passed. Mr. Schmidt opposed the action of the committee, stating that if he could get early possession of a subject that had received a big premiere presentation in one of the large houses he had no difficulty in charging and collecting 50 cents. There was applause when he said it was difficult these days to get hold of a really big subject.

Mr. Beach offered a motion, which was passed, providing for a uniform system of bookkeeping in all state and local branches of the League. Mr. Beach also moved that the officers of the National League be authorized to compile a list of the motion picture theaters of the United States, regardless of whether their owners be members of the organization or not, and that measures be taken to assure the inviolability of the list. This was passed. Action was taken opposing the showing of pictures in saloons. It was decided to defer the election of a secretary until the books pertaining to that office had been audited by the incoming administration.

Invitations to hold the next annual convention of the League were received from New York, Detroit and New Orleans, but they were referred to the national board. President Pearce read a letter from Thomas A. Edison, in which the inventor said there was ample reason for mutual congratulations on the growth of the business and sent his sincere personal congratulations to the exhibitors on the dignity to which the showing of pictures had attained. The League formally extended to the Northwestern Association of Exhibitors an invitation to amalgamate.

Mr. Tugwell nominated President Pearce to succeed himself, and commending the administration of the present incumbent. Mr. Pearce, however, said he was compelled to decline. He in turn nominated Fred J. Herrington, praising him, and in conclusion describing him as one who "comes clean from Pittsburgh." The nomination was seconded by Treasurer Jeup, who said he had known Mr. Herrington ever since the Cleveland convention, the first national gathering of the exhibitors, five years ago. Mr. Herrington was elected by acclamation.

Also by acclamation were elected Mark Cory, of California, as first vice-president, Mr. Brophy, of Oklahoma, as second vice-president and Mr. Jeup as treasurer.

President Beach introduced Hobart Bosworth, who referred to the big things impending in the making of pictures and expressed the conviction that they were for the betterment of the exhibitor and the public, and that all connected with the industry would profit much by the changes.

On motion of Treasurer Jeup it was decided to instruct the executive board to take up the codification of the constitution and by-laws.

Frank Keenan made an address that was mirthful at times and serious at others. He said that while he had worked in but one picture he had for a long time been a "picture bug," and for that reason felt he could talk to the exhibitors from the standpoint of the public. He spoke of the importance of the story. He also alluded to the necessity of employing only capable actors, and said no longer was it possible to get by with a picture in which the star had as chief recommendation curly hair or large brown eyes. Speaking about his own work for the screen he raised a howl of laughter when he said, "I just want to confide to you that I have seen myself in my first picture and, believe me, I am good."

Mr. Sennett said that the Keystone Company was spending more money now than ever and that everything was being done to make its pictures more and more acceptable to the exhibitor.

Raymond Hitchcock explained that his popularity on the screen lay mostly in the fact that up to date the subjects in which he had appeared had not been released. He kept the audience in laughter all the time he was on the platform. The mirth was not lessened when, in referring to the talk of Mr. Keenan, he said: "Me for the large eyes and curly hair."

President Pearce declared the new officers duly elected and installed, and the fifth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America adjourned sine die.

Friday Night—The Ball.

The crowning event of the convention was the grand ball, held in the Municipal Auditorium in the Civic Center. This event had been widely heralded, and extensive preparations made, a feature of the arrangements having been the bringing from Los Angeles of almost fifty prominent screen artists from the leading studios. As was the case with the convention itself, the task of arranging the details of the ball devolved upon the chairman of the Convention Committee, M. E. Cory, and much of the credit for the success of this affair must be given him.

Owing to the fact that the historic old Liberty Bell arrived in San Francisco late Friday evening, some of the plans for the ball had to be changed at the last minute and many of the dignitaries of the state and city were unable to be present until the festivities of the evening were well under way. Governor Johnson, who was to have led the grand march with Geraldine Farrar, was a member of the committee that brought the historic relic to the exposition grounds and unfortunately could not be present. Mayor Rolph was also absent, but representatives of the city government were on hand to grace the occasion.

The gathering of screen favorites was fully up to the expectation of the ball committee, and during the early part of the evening the boxes they occupied were surrounded by eager throngs of admirers, the floor officers finding difficulty in keeping the crowd moving.

In keeping with the exposition and Liberty Bell spirit which prevailed, the hall was tastefully decorated in the exposition and national colors, and after the commencement of the grand march the scene was further enlivened by the releasing of hundreds of colored balloons.

The grand march was led by Carlyle Blackwell and Blanche Sweet, followed by other leading picture players, the new and retiring officers of the National League and the state and local organizations. Following this, the regular dance program began and lasted until the early morning hours. Owing to the immense size of the auditorium, and the fact that many who attended were onlookers occupying seats in the balcony, the floor was crowded at no time, and the attendance was larger than appeared to be the case. Motion pictures were taken of the grand march by Mills Brothers. Mr. Sciaroni was in charge of the lighting and photographing. The pictures were shown at the Empress theater on Saturday evening.

The committee having charge of the floor consisted of M. E. Cory, chairman; R. F. Abraham, president of the San Francisco local league; H. L. Beach, retiring president of the state league, and the newly-chosen vice-president of the National from California; R. L. Marks, secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco; I. Oppenheimer, Joseph Huff, E. Nasser, A. Markowitz, A. Goldberg and W. A. Cory.

Among the player folks and film men who were present and occupied boxes were Geraldine Farrar, Blanche Sweet, Carlyle Blackwell, Mabel Normand, Raymond Hitchcock, Mrs. Raymond Hitchcock (Flora Zabelle), Mack Sennett, Owen Moore, "Diamond Jim" Brady, Barney Baruch, Fred Mace, Marshall Neilan, Ella Hall, Robert Leonard, Hobart Bosworth, Hobart Henley, M. L. Markowitz, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Frank Keenan, W. S. Hart, House Peters, Kenneth O'Hara, Myrtle Gonzalez, Mrs. Gonzalez, Sam Spedon, William Duncan, Jesse Lasky, Morris Gest and wife, C. B. De Mille, W. W. Hodkinson, wife and party, Bobbie Harron, Mae Marsh, Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Mrs. Gish, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow, Irving Ackerman, Fred J. Balshofer, Marie Empress, Art Smith, aviator; Mrs. Smith and Manager William Bastar and Mrs. Bastar, G. M. Anderson, Victor Potel and Mrs. Potel, Ben Turpin, Jesse Jackson, and Shorty Jack Hamilton.

Convention Notes.

S. J. Greenwood, for several years located at Tulare, Cal., attended the convention with Mrs. Greenwood and took advantage of his stay in San Francisco to inspect the Exposition. He has just sold his house at Tulare and is looking for a new location.

G. E. Thornton, manager of the Oakland house of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, attended all of the gatherings and ably represented this big firm.

A. J. Bachelor, another house manager for Turner & Dahnken, spent considerable time at the convention. He recently took over the management of the T & D Theater at Berkeley, Cal., having formerly been located at Sacramento.

Jack L. Lawrence, formerly chief operator at the Queens Theater, Ltd., Christchurch, N. Z., was an interested visitor at the convention. He is located at San Francisco during the Exposition, having charge of the moving picture department of the Bolivia exhibt.

Harry J. Leland, formerly of Sacramento, but now of Woodland, Cal., where he recently opened a splendid new house, was present at the convention. He reports that business has been very satisfactory at the new Strand Theater since the opening date.

O. J. L. Byers of Angels Camp, Cal., is one of the live wire exhibitors of California. He has practically no competition, as he operates the only picture house in the county in which he is located, but nevertheless keeps in close touch with the industry and, of course, was at the convention.

C. L. Jacoby, formerly of Napa, Cal., but now manager of the Park Theater, opened a short time ago at Oakland, attended the meetings to secure the latest ideas from the standpoint of the exhibitor.

Max Graf, formerly of San Francisco, and later with the Pathe Exchange at Salt Lake City, attended the convention. He will leave shortly for Dallas, Tex., to accept a position with a leading exchange.

J. C. Cohen, of Honolulu, T. H., took advantage of his stay in San Francisco to spend several days at the convention and the Exposition.

Utah was represented at the national gathering by E. Mehesy of Salt Lake City and A. L. Stallings of Provo.

P. S. Braun, who recently opened a new theater at Rio Vista, Cal., a prominent summer resort on the Russian River, managed to get to the convention and absorb many useful points.

F. D. Shastri, of Benares, India, was an interested visitor at the convention, dividing his time during the week between the Auditorium and the Exposition.

A. Herbruger, of Gautemala, Central America, attended several of the business sessions and features of entertainment.

The California Film Exchange received by express just before the grand ball on the closing day of the convention a large number of copies of the new Universal Weekly, and these were distributed as souvenirs.

Manufacturers' Exposition

BEAUTY, comfort and attractiveness marked the exhibits of the exposition salon, two floors above the convention hall in the auditorium. When the throngs of visitors, both exhibitors and the interested public, entered the show place of the many firms represented they felt at once welcome.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

The most prominent and artistic booth was that of Paramount Pictures Corporation, which occupied the most showy place in the hall. It was the first to strike the eye, and naturally the initial impression lasted, and it was even more impressed by a smiling life-size color photographs of Geraldine Farrar and of Mary Pickford. Entirely of white woodwork of wistaria trellis construction, the Paramount exhibit covered the space of three booths. Over the center arch blazoned the trade mark, while on every side were gilded the names of the principal producing companies that release through the program. Under each arch of the trellis huge boxes of smiling California blossoms were placed, while bright green vines twined to the canopy above.

Comfort, as well as display, was a feature of the booth. Huge divans, easy chairs, and rugs galore made the place a cozy meeting spot for showmen and their wives. Many of the stars were shown in oils—Geraldine Farrar being featured, with Blanche Sweet and others of the several companies.

Those who received were President W. W. Hodkinson, Herman Wobber, of the San Francisco office, Kenneth McGaffey, of the Lasky studio, and a trio of pretty girls who handed out programs and pictures of stars.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

No sooner had the eye of the visitor scanned the room than it lighted on the large square booth of the Metro. "Come over and be metroed," was the invitation, and no one who entered the place missed the display. Here Harry Reichenbach smiled a welcome and Fred J. Balshofer gave invitations to a private running of "Second in Command," the six reeler in which Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow are starred.

This booth on the entrance to the palace, was one of the most richly decorated of them all, having a color scheme in neat decorations which pleasantly held the eye. It was set off by rich oil paintings of Mr. Bushman, Mme. Petrova, Marguerite Snow, and many other Metro satellites.

Besides the invitations to the theater callers were presented with neat souvenirs of Bushman and other stars, and a Bushman puzzle, together with a program of Metro Day at the exposition and other interesting literature.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

One of the most attractive displays was that of the Universal. The Big U had a booth twenty feet long, decorated with blue and gold bunting, and in which hung large handsomely framed photographs of Hobart Bosworth, Herbert Rawlinson, J. Warren Kerrigan, Cleo Madison, Grace Cunard, Ella Hall, Robert Leonard and a host of other well-known players. Topping and in the center of the display of the players is a smiling picture of President Carl Laemmle.

The exhibit is in charge of M. L. Markowitz, manager of the California Film Exchange of San Francisco, assisted by W. A. Cory, brother of M. E. Cory, chairman of the convention committee, and D. S. Markowitz, of the Los Angeles branch. M. J. Jonas, head of the publicity department of Universal City, came up early and stayed with the show until it closed.

New York Motion Picture Corporation.

As usual Thomas H. Ince was on deck and ably represented by Kenneth O'Hara, head of the Inceville publicity office. Mr. O'Hara was the first Los Angeles man on the scene, and his work shows it in many ways. At one entrance the visitor is greeted with a dark purple funnel-shaped miniature stage-effect display, in the center of which is a handsome illuminated photograph, life-size, of Mr. Ince. Directly under is an illuminated copy of a telegram from New York, which reads: "To the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Fifth Annual Convention, San Francisco; Keep Your Eye on Ince, Kessel and Baumann." Here a maid hands out a neat little booklet which says on the cover, "Best Pictures on Earth." Opened, the book says: "They come from Inceville," and as the cover is laid over, Ince pops up from a folded stand-up, at the wheel of a camera, standing on a map.

Another Ince booth showed off to good advantage the stars in sepia tones on buff paper, featuring Bessie Barriscale, William S. Hart, and many others as well known.

Mack Sennett is also in this row, having sent up a fine life-size picture of Mabel Normand, and a large one of Roscoe Arbuckle, and another of Raymond Hitchcock. This is a silent display, but it speaks volumes for the faces that are shown.

Another booth which Mr. O'Hara arranged was the Sennett-Ince combine. This was a deep purple display with plenty of electric lights to play upon the faces of the two great directors of comedy and drama. This was another silent one which did its mission.

David W. Griffith reigned supreme with half a hundred of his popular stars artistically arranged about him. This display was in charge of Bennie Zeidman. Many visitors who attended the convention out of curiosity beseiged the Mutual booth for postals and stayed about looking at the many pictures of the famous players.

World Film Corporation.

The exhibit of the World Film Corporation proved an interesting display. At different and artistic angles were beautiful portraits in natural color of several well-known World stars, among the more prominent being Clara Kimball Young, Robert Warwick, Vivian Martin, Alice Brady, Beatriz Michelena, and many others of prominence. Literature on various "Two Dollar Broadway Attractions" was freely distributed. The booth was in charge of Joe Deitch and W. W. Drum, who were on hand personally to meet the exhibitors and outsiders.

It was an interesting time for the showmen, not only from the point of the manufacturer of pictures, but from the exhibiting end of the business, for every projecting machine company was represented as well as the accessory makers and musical and entertainment dealers.

Thomas Edison, Inc.

The good old Edison machine was exploited by the Edison man on the coast, George Breck, who has been in the business for many years here and in Los Angeles. He showed the latest Edison model, and a goodly crowd surged in and out of the gates. Every article in the film accessory line also was shown by Mr. Breck. Even as I watched the veteran demonstrate a late model a man who had been in the booth shortly before returned and placed a deposit of $100 on the latest big model. He was J. H. Knowles, of the New York Amusement Company, at Sonora. He did not question the price, which has not yet been set, but ordered the first one shipped to him.

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co.

The Motiograph was there, too, with Edward H. Kemp in charge. He is of this city, and arranged one of the neatest machine display booths. It was of dark velvet drape set off with gold letters spelling the name of the machine. Six projectors were on display, one of which had never before been shown, the 1916 model. The original Motiograph was also on exhibition.

Nicholas Power Company.

In a row at one side of the decorated salon were the booths of the machine men. Nicholas Power was granted the highest award at the exposition of the Panama-Pacific, and this banner and ribbon were on display, together with the latest projectors, stereopticons and other attachments. One interesting feature of the Power exhibit was the two-sided film-testing machine, which used paper film. On one side was the star and cam Geneva movement, while on the other was the Powers, Maltese cross and cam movement. The two films were threaded and the old style movement soon tore the film to shreds. Another interesting machine was the original Power projector, which was examined with much interest by showmen. R. W. Horn, of New York, was in charge of the exhibit.

Precision Machine Co.

Frank Cannock, one of the chiefs of the Simplex, was present in the booth of the Precision Machine Company, which was under the management of Fred A. Clark. Present also was Mr. Atwater, from New York. Everything in the latest Simplex machine was on display as well as attachments.

G. A. Metcalfe.

W. L. Stern, sales manager for G. A. Metcalfe, of San Francisco, was on hand with two booths filled with three machines, the Simplex, Power, and Baird, the latter being the latest model of the big projector. He also displayed a copy of the grand prize award of the 1915 fair. In addition were various accessories and the Minusa gold fibre screen and the Frude Film Circuit closing device. The little Simplex $35 camera was also an interesting exhibit for people who are interested in motion photography.

The Art Slide Co.

The Art Slide Company had a booth under the direction of P. Young, who, by the way, said he was one of the pioneer exhibitors of this city. On exhibition were the latest in slides, including a moving picture slide just entering the market. He received several orders while I was there. This particular specimen of the novelty when inserted shows Charlie Chaplin slowly arising from the depths of a barrel. It is unique.

The Feaster Film Feed Co.

The Feaster Film Feed Company was represented by William G. Smeltzer, sales manager for the Walter G. Preddey Company of this city. He demonstrated the no-rewind machine, which attracted attention from the exhibitors.

National Carbon Co.

Along with the machines came the fuel for their burners, the National Carbon Company having a display of everything from a small quarter-inch hand carbon to the two-inch sticks for battleship searchlights. And while I talked with W. C. Kunzman of this city, who had charge of the display, along came Peter J. Jeup, who said: "Well, well, here they are. Do you know I was the first man in Detroit who used these carbons, and my theaters are still burning them," which was quite a recommendation. H. J. Raffin assisted Mr. Kunzman, who is from the Cleveland office. He demonstrated the flaming arc on a screen in a manner interesting to showmen.

Heywood Brothers & Wakefield.

Not only were direct film articles shown, but the theater equipment men had their booths. The Heywood Brothers & Wakefield Company showed some elegant opera chairs and furniture. The concern has equipped some of the largest and best houses on the coast, having offices in Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles. Manager C. E. Corbly and Evan Griffen were in charge.

American Photoplayers Company.

And all the while the Fotoplayer made music for the visitors. The big No. 45 oak player was set up at one end of the salon, and every person who visited the exposition went to the end of the room and listened to the music before he or she departed. Another instrument was demonstrated in the miniature theater, where throngs watched the latest pictures being projected.

Balboa Producing Co.

The Pathe exchange of San Francisco had charge of the exhibit of the Balboa Producing Co., with H. W. Oviatt and H. W. Korper in charge. Here were handed out neat banner souvenirs of the Balboa players, including Ruth Roland and Henry King, Jackie Saunders and Joyce Moore. The booth was neatly decorated with large pictures of prominent Pathe players, and the film which survived the Los Angeles fire was shown.

David Horsley.

One midway booth which attracted much attention was that of the Mina films, where David Horsley's smiling photograph greeted the exhibitors. There were pictures of the great Bostock studios in Los Angeles and interesting announcements. Ernest Shipman represented Mr. Horsley temporarily. Mr. Shipman opened the only register outside of the official one, and while I talked to him for ten minutes fifteen interested persons signed up for literature to be sent them telling of coming attractions under the Mina flag.

Los Angeles Motion Picture Co.

Even if the exposition was for the exhibitors, there was one booth which was exclusively for the manufacturer, this being the display of the Los Angeles Motion Picture Company, under the supervision of its manager, H. Paulis, who, by the way, is the inventor of a clever tripod mechanism which he has built and sold in numbers. The feature of the tripod is the instant panoramic release which allows the camera's eye to be instantly turned in any direction without the slow winding process. A knob under the tripod screw quickly relieves the tension on the camera base, allowing it to be turned to any direction. The Angelus cameras and other picture taking apparatus, including the Angelus printer and the Gold King Screen, were also on display.

The trade journals held forth in the press row.

Fox Entertainment.

One of the most enjoyable of the many features of entertainment during convention week was the automobile ride through the city on Friday afternoon, tendered by the Fox Film Corporation, and ably managed by William Citron, the San Francisco manager. A fleet of sight-seeing cars was provided and shortly after two o'clock the party of one hundred and fifty exhibitors that had gathered at the Fox Exchange on Golden Gate avenue started on the tour.

For the benefit of the out-of-town exhibitors the route was planned almost entirely within the limits of the so-called burned district, enabling them to form an estimate of the damage caused by the catastrophe of 1906. The exhibitors were furnished with colored serpentines and their trip was an animated one. The party traversed Market street, went through Chinatown, passed the main gates of the Exhibition, covered the Fillmore street district and the Mission and returned to the starting point by way of the new Civic Center.

Luncheon to Visiting Players.

While the first morning session was coming to a close the Los Angeles aggregation of players arrived and were received by the committeemen. After several popular screeners talked the exhibitors, players and others embarked in a score of automobiles which had been gaily decorated and were taken for a ten-mile ride through the outskirts of the city. The parade, headed by a big band, went down Market street for the length between Valencia and the water front, which is about three miles. With flags flying, band playing, the line of machines was the main attraction of the heavy shopping and business crowds of Friday afternoon.

An elaborate luncheon was served in a downtown restaurant and a flashlight picture made. After the delayed repast the party adjourned to the hotels and rested, preparing for the ball in the evening.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

BUILDING OF MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE.

Effort Being Made to Induce Exhibitors to Join and Pay Dues.

FRANK H. VINE, formerly manager of the New England office of the World Film Corporation, is traveling throughout Massachusetts in an endeavor to arouse enthusiasm among the exhibitors in an effort to have them support the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors League.

The exhibitors take very little interest in this organization, which has accomplished wonderful results in the past three years. Through the efforts of the organization, the five minute bill, which affected only the small exhibitor, was repealed. It was this organization which fought censorship in the past session of the Legislature.

A number of exhibitors have joined the organization, but have failed to contribute a cent for its support. The financial burden is generally borne by a few. This year the most of the bills were paid from the personal account of President Earnest H. Horstmann, who is connected with a large organization, which the proposed legislation against which he fought, would not have affected in the least had it been passed.

The small exhibitor fails to realize that the work of the league has saved his living for him. The least an exhibitor might do is join the organization and after that pay the yearly dues, which are very small and from which innumerable good results will be obtained.

President Horstmann has worked untiringly in the interests of the league. He is willing to continue this work provided that he receives the support of the exhibitors. It is unfair for any exhibitor to expect this man to fight legislation single handed, because he heads the league. It is pitiable that he should be made to bear all the burdens.

The second summer outing of the Massachusetts Motion Picture Exhibitors' League will be held on Wednesday, August 4. It will be held at either Pemberton or Villa Napoli, Nantasket. The committee of arrangements comprises J. Lourie, Glover Ware and Louis Boas. All who contemplate attending should notify the committee immediately.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS' OUTING.

Picture Men Have Big Day at Atlantic City—Many Present.

ONE of the most enjoyable summer outings yet given in which the Pennsylvania moving picture industry participated, took place on Sunday, July 18, when the second annual outing of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia was held at Atlantic City, N. J. Perfect weather conditions greeted the occasion and as the party of several hundred members and friends of the League assembled in the train-shed of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, in Camden, preparatory to boarding the special train which transported them to the scene of the day's festivities, it was evident that each was there with the express intention of having a good time.

This annual event proved more successful than last year and the members are loud in their praise of the individuals who conceived the plans for such a day of enjoyment and fun. Although the program officially opened at 9.10 a. m., when the "special" rolled forth from the covered shed on its trip across the state, the fun-making began long before. As early as 8.30 a. m. the individual groups of picnicers began arriving, and from then on it was one continuous laugh. Strangers, there were none. Everyone seemed endowed with an unprecedented spirit of goodfellowship so that before long the party had taken on the appearance of one big family and the success of the project was assured.

After a dip in the surf of the famous Atlantic City beach, dinner was served to the party at the Continental Hotel and, again after a round of pleasure during the afternoon, supper was served at the same place. There was dancing in the evening.

Among those present were: Charles Segal, president of the Exhibitors' League; Jay Emmanuel, secretary of the League; Mr. Crappel, of the League; Steve Talbot, of the Photo Play Review; Simon Libros, manager of the Picture Playhouse Films Company; H. Powell, Continental Film Exchange; Mr. Glen, of the American Feature Film Exchange; Louis Hopkins, of the Columbia theater; Carl Hess, of the Lehigh Palace; J. H. Butner, of the Continental Film Exchange; Mr. Solomon, of the Bosworth Company; Mr. Green, of the Susquehanna theater; Mr. Givens, of the Famous Players Exchange; Messrs Clark and Bethel, of the Metro Company; Mr. May, of the World Film Corporation; Mr. Jacobs, of the Imperial theater; Marcus Benn, of the Benn theater; Mr. Getzler, of the Greater New York Film Rental Company; William Alexander, of the Fox Company; Edgar Mels, of the Lubin Company; Jim Daley, of the Lubin studios; M:. Hebrew, of the V-L-S-E; Mr. Efinger, of the Leader theater; S. Hopkins, of the Broadway theater, and Davis Corson, of the United Film Service, and Wilson F. Bleloch, representative of the Moving Picture World.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' OUTING PROGRESSING.

Much Activity Being Shown by the Members of New York Local in the Big Brighton Beach Field Day.

WITHIN the past week the proposed Gala Carnival and Field Day, to be given by the New York Local Number One of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has taken on a more definite shape in the active organization. It was announced for the first time last week that the New York exhibitors would inaugurate this outing as a permanent annual event of a similar nature to the usual midwinter reception and dance. The date set for the midsummer field day is Saturday, August 21, and Brighton Beach will be the scene of the carnival festivities.

The motive that prompted this idea of an outing was not any idle money making scheme. It was the necessity of raising immediate funds to ward off hostile censorship legislation that is certain to come up at Albany this fall, as well as to try and have passed certain measures in regards to the admission of children to theaters. This carnival and field day event should really be considered a trade affair. It is held under the auspices of the exhibitors' league for the sole reason that the exhibitors have taken the initiative in regard to warding off inimical legislation.

The heads of the various committees have been designated finally and in their order are as follows:

Samuel H. Trigger, general chairman; Lee A. Ochs, general vice-chairman; Phillip Rosenson, treasurer; Thomas Howard, financial secretary; Aaron A. Corn, chairman entertainment and reception committee; William Hilkemeier, chairman invitation committee; Thomas Howard, chairman publicity committee; Isaac Hartstall; chairman ticket committee; Thomas Howard, chairman program committee; Mrs. Lewis J. Selznik, chairman ladies' committee; King Baggot, chairman photoplayers' committee (gentlemen); Lottie Briscoe, chairman photoplayers' committee (ladies); J. Sarzin, chairman of contests; Hugh Hoffman, chairman press committee; "Silent Bill" Haddock, chief announcer; Robert C. Whitten, sergeant-at-arms.

For the benefit of those who might have missed last week's notice the general schedule for the day is as follows: At 10 a. m. the day begins with water sports, such as swimming races, rowing races, water polo, fancy diving, etc. This will continue until 1 p. m. At 1:30 the trade in general will assemble at Coney Island and march to the Brighton Beach Race Track, where the carnival and field day sports will begin at 2:30 p. m.

The New York exhibitors think that it cannot be too strongly emphasized that this gathering is really a general trade affair for the benefit of all. For this reason they solicit ideas as well as financial assistance from all quarters. The call is for co-operation and the cause is deserving of special attention even to the point of sacrifice.

All communications, suggestions, donations, etc., should be addressed to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 110 West 40th street, New York City.

Kempton Greene, by Himself

ONLY three years in photoplay, with an inconspicuous beginning with one company, would ordinarily mean a limited amount of experience in the work, but I think I can put in a claim for a graduate's diploma—that is, so far as having passed the grammar grades. I never expect to be wholly finished. Instead of spending my vacation away from the city, I joined a friend and got a chance to play small parts at the Lubin studio for Colonel Joseph Smiley. Summer lapsed into autumn and then winter came. I was still increasing my experience as a screen player. One thing led to another, until Mr. George Terwilliger gave me my first leading part in his play, "The Cry of the Blood." Last winter he chose me to go to St. Augustine with his special company, where I played a succession of important parts and had some unforgettable escapes. I wouldn't mention them if they had been the usual exaggerations of the ordinary press-agent, for an actor in the pictures is expected to attach no importance to the daily risk of his life. But this was one degree more risky. A yacht was loaded with oil and set afire, the conflagration timed so that it would end with the explosion of a chest of powder. I was left aboard, with orders to jump into the water at a certain moment. With the fire raging behind me and the powder due to explode within a minute, I hesitated to plunge over the rail. Why? Because I saw three sharks swimming near the surface. I could either be blown to smithereens or be nibbled by the sea beasts. I plunged. By some miracle the sharks did not attack me. I am back at the Philadelphia studio, unscathed and happy. I like to specialize in wayward sons, dissolute brothers and bad boys generally. My ambition, however, is to abandon acting altogether and produce light comedies.

BIG SETS FOR "THE COTTON KING."

For his production of "The Cotton King," Director Oscar Eagle of the World Film Corporation, insisted on having settings as correct as the most experienced of scenic artists could devise. He wanted a cotton exchange in which any big city broker might feel at home, one that would appear genuine from whatever angle photographed and he didn't care if his sets occupied all of the floor space in the large Fort Lee studio.

The studio is a big building, but there wasn't much vacant room last Saturday afternoon when Director Eagle had his exchange in place for the photographing of several of the dramatic scenes in the coming feature. Massive pillars rose some thirty feet toward the glass roof; in the center of the floor was the pit peopled by a throng of shouting dealers; on an elevation to one side were the boards for the marking of the quotations, and so on to the last detail, everything belonging to a cotton exchange was included in this most elaborate of sets.

With George Nash playing the leading role and a crowd of some seventy-five principals and extras, Director Eagle worked through the heat of last Saturday afternoon until he had completed the big interior spectacles of "The Cotton King." Now it remains for him to take his company south for the photographing of several exteriors requiring buildings of a type not to be found in this locality. When the picture is completed, upwards of 1700 people will have appeared in the scenes. It is an odd coincidence that Mr. Eagle played in the original stage production of "The Cotton King" more than twenty years ago.

"Old Jane of the Gaiety," a Thanhouser release of July 18 in the Mutual program, is a story of the theater. The cast includes Ethyle Cook, Grace De Carlton, Jay Yorke, Morgan Niblack, Janet Henry and Winifred Lane.

Just Mr. and Mrs. Boyle

JOSEPH BOYLE, of 2737 North Nineteenth street, Philadelphia, Pa., who, in his leisure moments, assists John Ince in the direction of Lubin photoplays, eloped on July 2. Of course he did not go alone, his accomplice being Maud Douglas, of 2722 North Nineteenth street, one of the pretty actresses in the Lubin fold. Everybody at Lubin's has known for months that Mr. Boyle had fallen a victim to Miss Douglas' flashing eyes and blond beauty, but nobody suspected even lately that the couple had gone to Elkton. Nearly a fortnight ago they were married, and have been living happily ever after.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Boyle.

The elopement came after a strenuous day's work, in which Mr. Ince and Mr. Boyle were directing Crane Wilbur, Mary Charleson, and others. Mr. Boyle whispered something to Mr. Wilbur, Mr. Wilbur whispered something to Mr. Ince, the latter cranked up his machine, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur, Mr. Boyle, Miss Douglas jumped into their seats and the car whizzed southward to the Maryland Gretna Green.

When the deed was done, all were pledged to secrecy, but recently Mr. Ince simply had to tell. As a result, Mr. Boyle has a sore hand receiving congratulations and Mrs. Boyle is somewhat in doubt as to whether eloping pays after all, because of the unmerciful teasing she received.

Frederick Arnold Kummer

WORLD FILM CORPORATION will shortly present the Wm. A. Brady photoplay "The Ivory Snuff Box," by Frederick Arnold Kummer. Holbrook Blinn plays the lead in the photoplay, which is a powerful detective story. It is Mr. Blinn's second appearance in World Film features, and he has been provided with a strong vehicle for his wonderful dramatic powers.

Frederick A. Kummer.

Frederick Arnold Kummer, the author of the photoplay, has many dramatic and literary achievements to his credit. Of the former "A Daughter of Eve," "The Brute," "The Painted Woman," "The Other Woman," "The Diamond Necklace" were successes with the public and served to establish Mr. Kummer's reputation as a novelist and dramatist of great ability. His novels and stories have appeared in the leading magazines of the country and many of them have been separately published and some of them form the basis of his plays.

Recently Mr. Kummer turned his attention to the construction of feature photoplays and again met with conspicuous success. His original profession was that of engineering, but his essays in literature were so encouraging that he has, for eight years, devoted most of his attention to writing, being ranked by competent critics very highly among modern authors. "The Ivory Snuff Box" is scheduled for early release.

"The Lilt of Love" is the latest of William C. Dowlan's Laemmle offerings. It is a drama of a sympathetic sort. Mr. Dowlan and Violet McMillan play the leading roles.

Ban on Fight Films Sustained

U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia Hands Down Important Opinion of Affirmance.

THE action of Frederick S. Freed, Deputy Collector of United States Customs, at Newark, N. J., in refusing to permit L. Lawrence Weber, prominent theatrical conductor of New York, to import photographic-film positives of the heavyweight championship fight between Jess Willard and Jack Johnson, held in Havana, Cuba, on April 5, and the action of Judge Thomas G. Haight, of the United States District Court, at Trenton, in refusing to enjoin Collector Freed from barring the films from this country, were sustained in a decision handed down by Judges Joseph Buffington, John B. McPherson and Victor P. Wooley, for the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in Philadelphia, on Monday afternoon.

In the decision handed down by Judges Buffington, McPherson and Wooley, for the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, on Monday, the court says:

"The plaintiff concedes that the letter of the statute," here referring to the Act of Congress of July 31, 1912, "supports the collector and the district court, but asserts that the Act is in substance unconstitutional and should therefore be disregarded. In brief the argument is that Congress, while in form exercising its power under the Commerce Clause, is in reality attempting to exercise police power that belongs solely to the States.

"We do not take this view of the situation. It is needless to say that only in a clear case may an act be declared unconstitutional, it being equally true that if such a case be presented the duty of a court is plain: In our opinion the statute under review belongs undoubtedly to a class of which numerous examples exist, namely, statutes that fall directly under the Commerce Clause but effect indirectly the field of police power. It can hardly be doubted, that the right to the power to determine what article offered for import shall be admitted belongs solely to Congress, and that the right to admit on certain terms implies the plenary right to refuse admission on any term. It is true that after an article has once been admitted, and has thus become part of the common stock of property Congress may so far lose control over it that the regulation of its future use may fall properly within the jurisdiction of the States; but the article does not become subject to the State until it has passed the custom house, and, if Congress chooses to exclude it altogether on the ground for example that the public health or public morals suffer be it be admitted, we are of the opinion that such exclusion is permitted by the Constitution. Manifestly, the power exists somewhere, and as the States do not possess it there is no other depositary except the federal government. Indirectly, no doubt, the police power of the States may thus be interfered with.

"If, for example, a State should not be willing, or should perhaps even be desirous, to allow moving pictures of a prize fight to be exhibited, such a policy would of course be hampered by the Act in question, but the interference would be indirect, merely an unavoidable consequence of the exercise by Congress of its sovereign and undoubted right to regulate, and therefore to prohibit, commerce with foreign countries.

"The declaration in the bill that the films in controversy are intended not for sale but solely for exhibition is not controlling. Indeed, the allegations of the bill as a whole leave no room for doubt that the object of exhibiting the films is the large gains that are expected to accrue therefrom, and we see little, if any, difference between such an object and the sale or leasing of the films themselves. The plaintiff intends to sell the privilege of looking at the moving pictures, and from the very nature of such films that is precisely the use for which they are designed.

"But in any event the films are articles of commerce capable of being sold or leased, and the mere fact that the plaintiff has no present intention of using them for any other purpose than exhibition does not change their essential, material, character, or remove them from the class of tangible things that are the subject of "Commerce," in a definition of that word.

"We need not prolong the discussion. Not infrequently Congress has sustained in a similar exercise of power. In Buttfield vs. Stranahan, 192 U. S. 470, the exclusion of inferior tea was upheld; Brolan vs. U. S. supra, sustained the exclusion of opium; in the Abby Dodge-223 U. S. 176, sponges gathered at a certain season of the year were denied admission; imitation of coins were excluded in the United States vs Marigold, 9 How. 560; in Reid. vs. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, the interstate transportation of diseased cattle was forbidden, and the Lottery Cases, 188 U. S. 321, the inter-state transportation of lottery tickets; Hoke vs. U. S., 227 U. S. 328, sustained the constitutionality of the so-called white slave act; and in Hippolite Co. vs. U. S., 220 U. S. 45, the prohibition of transporting a food product was sustained on the ground that Congress had made the product an outlaw.

"The government brief contains a list of nearly 20 statutes in which Congress prohibits the importation or carriage of various articles that we need not enumerate.

"The decree is affirmed."

The appellant's attorneys say that an immediate appeal to the United States Supreme Court will be taken.

STAATS-ZEITUNG WAR PICTURES.

Announcement is made in the advertising columns of this issue of The Moving Picture World of an extended trip to the Pacific Coast and return to be made by G. A. Lanzke, representing the Staats-Zeitung series of motion pictures of war scenes from the German point of view. Those interested will be able to see these pictures by consulting the weekly program of exhibitions given in the advertisement. Six reels are being shown in connection with an interesting lecture by Mr. Lanzke in the big theaters of each city visited.

Triangle Film Incorporated

Aitken, President of $5,000,000 Concern—Baumann, Griffith, Sennett and Ince Are Vice-Presidents.

THE Triangle Film Corporation, a $5,000,000 company, to produce and market motion pictures, was incorporated at a meeting in La Junta, Colo., on July 20. The new concern is the outcome of the alliance of D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett and Thomas H. Ince, who, with Charles O. Baumann, were made vice-presidents. The other officers are: President, H. E. Aitken; secretary, Adam Kessel; auditor, Charles Kessel. According to a despatch received by The Moving Picture World from Messrs. Kessel and Baumann, all contracts and agreements in connection with the Triangle Films Corporation were signed, sealed and delivered. The meeting was attended by the men chosen to fill official positions and lawyers representing other parties concerned in the incorporation.

The Triangle Company is the result fo the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combine, previously reported in the World. The energies of the three famous directors will be centered on the production of multiple-reel photoplays in which stars from the legitimate stage will be featured. For the presentation of the more elaborate of the spectacles, the company's ambitious plans include the leasing of a chain of first-class theaters in the larger cities of the United States. It is probable that subsidiary companies, financed by foreign capital, will be formed abroad.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

"MY LOST ONE" (Mi Perdida), is the chief feature of the Vitagraph theater program this week. "My Lost One" was written for Nicholas Dunaew, by Jesse Datus Smith, and produced under the direction of Harry Handworth, with Mr. Dunaew as Juan Mora, Dorothy Kelly as Perdida, and William Dunn as Henri Ducharme. The scenes are laid on the East Side, New York, and give the picture a decided foreign atmosphere. The story tells in simple narrative how Juan, deserted by his wife to satisfy an ambition to become a great singer, is inspired to write an opera, which he names "Mi Perdida."

Chapter twelve of "The Goddess" is an important feature on the program. The two parts show Celestia in her endeavor to quiet the restless miners, who have been goaded on to deeds of violence to the strike breakers, and depicts many thrilling episodes. A rural comedy of homely humor, "Old Good for Nuthin'," introduces Edwina Robbins, Jay Dwiggins and Bobby Connelly. Number seventeen in Roy L. McCardell's Jarr Family Series, "Mr. Jarr and the Visiting Firemen," tells how Jarr makes good his bluff that he is a full-fledged fireman, Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley being the principals in the comedy. An amusing story with Lillian Walker, Evart Overton and Mary Maurice "A Keyboard Strategy," in which wedding bells ring out for a male flirt, and "The Quarrel," a comedy of how a dog came near spoiling a first wedding anniversary, with Myrtle Gonzales, William Duncan and Anne Schaefer, complete the program.

Marguerite Clark at the Strand.

At the Strand theater this week Marguerite Clark is appearing in a picturization of "Seven Sisters," adapted for the American stage by Edith Ellen Furness, and produced by the Famous Players Film Company. The play is based on the Hungarian system of marriage, where matrimonial conventions consign to spinsterhood a girl whose younger sister marries before her. Under the circumstances, seven daughters may be considered a very well disguised blessing, particularly when the middle one is such a hoyden that she places her sisters' romantic chances in further jeopardy by being expelled from the convent school. That is what the naughty Mici, portrayed by Marguerite Clark, does in the play.

The Strand Topical Review, Travel and Educational studies, new comedies, and the usual excellent musical numbers are on the program.

Lenore Ulrich at the Broadway.

Kilmeny, a love story of the Gypsy Trail, produced by the Oliver Morosco Company, with Lenore Ulrich in the name part, is this week's leading feature at the Broadway theater. Miss Ulrich, who was last seen as a star in one of "The Bird of Paradise" companies, makes her first appearance on the screen in this picture. Other numbers on the bill include Broadway Animated News, South American Travel Pictures and the latest short comedies.

Spoor on "Sermonizing"

Aims to Produce an Entertaining Picture First—Moral Will Take Care of Itself.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, in commenting on sermonizing films, stated: "While Essanay just produced a photoplay that carries a great moral value, "The Blindness of Virtue," Essanay never has and never will try to foist a sermon on the public, whether they want it or not.

"I take it that the first mission of a photoplay is to entertain. It must fail in its mission if it does not entertain. The public never will stand for a play that tries to teach a moral lesson if it is not presented in an interesting manner.

"Of course the photoplay must be clean, wholesome and uplifting in sentiment. It need not present a moral at all to be an excellent production. But if you have all these primary facts in a play and besides this a moral that points out a great fundamental truth in life you have a combination that grips the spectator as no other play can do.

"There is a basic love of truth and justice in everyone, even in the person who himself is not above reproach, that responds to a great teaching, if presented in a fascinating manner. This is clearly seen if you go to a theater where the mellowest kind of a melodrama is being shown. The crowd instinctively is carried away with the hero and will hate the villain.

"In 'The Blindness of Virtue' it was the aim of Essanay to make a fascinating photoplay, not to preach a sermon. In this play of Cosmo Hamilton, however, there is a great moral. It is not pushed forward; it is not emphasized. It is allowed to take care of itself and unfold naturally as the story develops. There are no dogmatic theories offered; there are no conclusions drawn. The public is thoroughly competent to draw its own conclusions. It sees and analyzes and comes to its own conclusion. The public as a whole knows what is right and wrong and in a play of this character inevitably draws the correct inference, without the producer trying dogmatically to foist it on them.

"Moral plays of this character will always have a place in photoplay production, and a large place. But the purely sermonizing play that sermonizes for the sake of dogma and forgets the entertaining part will never find a very large following."

BILLIE BURKE SIGNS WITH NEW YORK.

MISS BILLIE BURKE has concluded negotiations which were entered into ten weeks ago, between the New York Motion Picture Corp. and Miss Burke for her appearance in a motion picture to be taken at their studio in Santa Monica, Cal.

The sum paid to Miss Burke is the largest paid to any artist who has so far appeared in pictures. Her salary is to be $40,000 for five weeks' work and in conjunction with this Messrs. Kessel & Baumann, president and vice-president of the New York Motion Picture Corp., have agreed to pay all Miss Burke's expenses and furnish her a private car to and from California. Have also agreed to give Miss Burke the exclusive use of an automobile, first-class make, during her stay in California.

Adam Kessel, after Miss Burke had signed the contract, handed her a check for $50,000, which stands as an option on her exclusive services for the next three years at a salary of $150,000 a year, she being required to give the picture company her services for twenty-six weeks of each year.

Billie Burke Putting Her "O.K." on the Scenario Written for Her by Thomas H. Ince.

And as the contract entered into between Miss Burke and the New York Motion Picture Corp. calls for consecutive weeks Messrs. Kessel & Baumann today applied, through Wm. T. Sandall of 59 John street, New York City, for an insurance policy through Lloyds of London for $50,000 insuring them against rain during Miss Burke's stay in Los Angeles. This will possibly be the second time that Lloyds have issued a policy against rain in this country, the other occasion being on July 4, 1910, a policy being issued to the promoters of the Jeffries-Johnson fight.

Adam Kessel signed the contract for the New York Motion Picture Corp. and among others present were Miss Burke's mother, Flo Ziegfield, and John McKeon of the New York Motion Picture Corp. Miss Burke leaves for the Coast about August 15, 1915.

Frances M. Evans

THE number of women who occupy leading positions in the film world is growing. A new film exchange just started, has a woman for its president. It is Mrs. Frances M. Evans, who occupies this position with the E. & G. Film Service, Inc., a new exchange located in a suite of offices at 110 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Mrs. Evans, who has been connected for years with the film business, is very well known to most of the exhibitors in New York, who all appreciate her extensive knowledge of the dramas of the screen and her excellent taste in selecting and recommending features.

Frances M. Evans.

The vice-president and general manager of the new concern is Wm. Weisfeld, formerly of the Rex Feature Film and the Colossus Film Co. The selection is a very happy one as everybody in the film industry and among the exhibitors of New York knows Mr. Weisfeld very well. His long experience as an exhibitor and his competence and ability as an exchange man, gives him the thorough knowledge of the wants and needs of the exhibitors, and there is no doubt that he is only too able to take care of all the business which is apt to come to the new exchange.

The secretary and treasurer, Louis Gero, has been connected with the film business for a number of years, devoting his energies mostly to importing features. The new exchange starts with about 100 big selected features and a great number of comics (Chaplins) and commercials, and it is one of the best equipped exchanges of its kind in the city.

WORLD FILM ENLARGES CINCINNATI QUARTERS.

The new quarters of the World Film Corporation in Cincinnati are among the most beautiful as well as the best equipped offices in this section of the country, and speak well indeed for the rapid growth of the business as effected by Manager Brehm and his able staff of assistants, whose slogan is "Watch Us Grow! Grow With Us!" Situated in the Savoy Hotel building on Sixth street, the new offices take up the entire two floors of the building, numbering ten different rooms, all tastefully decorated and supplied with the very finest equipment.

The new quarters provide separate offices for each department, and matters pertaining to each individual department are taken up directly with the heads of these offices, without necessitating an interview with each member of the force, before one's wants are attended to. Manager Brehm declares that though enlarged to nearly twice their former size the immense volume of business transacted even taxes their present capacity.

Assisting Mr. Brehm are George W. Hinton, formerly of the American Feature Film Company of Chicago, who is a recent addition to the force. R. S. Moran is still in charge of the force on the firing line, and together with Harry Young and H. P. Rhinock will take care of the out-of-town business. Tom Neer will retain charge of the shipping department.

Motion Pictures in 1870

Filling a Gap in the Chronicles of Kinematography—Henry R. Heyl Speaks on His Motion Picture Entertainment of Forty-five Years Ago.—What the First Motion Picture Program Looked Like.

By W. Stephen Bush.

I AM WRITING this to fill a gap in the chronicles of kinematography and I am indebted for my materials to an old citizen of Philadelphia, who had made an artful appeal to the persistence of vision as long ago as 1870. The man's name is Henry R. Heyl and the motion picture entertainment he gave occurred on the 5th of February in the aforesaid year. The Young Men's Society of St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church of Philadelphia gave the entertainment at the Academy of Music in aid of the Library Fund. Associated with Mr. Heyl was O. H. Willard, in whose studio the motion pictures here spoken of were made.

Henry R. Heyl.

The program which was published in connection with the entertainment is still in existence and is naturally enough highly valued and carefully kept by Mr. Heyl. He consented to part with it long enough to have a copy made for the readers of The Moving Picture World.

The First Moving Picture Program.

STEREOSCOPTICON.
DISSOLVING VIEWS. LES VUES D'ILLUSION.

With the advantages of very superior instruments and the capacious stage of the Academy, this exhibition will be produced upon a scale of magnitude and grandeur never before presented in this city.

The views to be used on this occasion are selected from the finest that can be found, and will embrace places of interest, and copies of works of art in our own and foreign lands, among which will be a series of rare and most beautiful instantaneous photographs of Niagara in Winter, charming views in the Yosemite Valley, Scenes amid the Glaciers of the Alps, together with photographs of fine Statuary that appear in perfect relief upon the canvas, and many beautiful pictures with moving effects that give to them a natural and lifelike appearance. Also a series of illustrations of interesting legend of Rip Van Winkle will be shown, in connection with which a sketch of the story will be given.

Photo Studio of O. H. Willard, 1206 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, where the first motion picture photos were made for the Academy of Music exhibition of February 7th, 1870.

With the assistance of the Phantasmagoria a number of striking illusions will be presented that will both amuse and interest.

TABLEAUX VIVANTS.

During the evening, several Tableaux will be introduced. Among which will be the Landing of Columbus, from the painting in the National Capitol, and beautiful representations of Statuary.

THE PHASTAMATROPE.

This is a recent scientific invention, designed to give to various objects and figures upon the screen the most graceful and lifelike movements. The effects are similar to those produced in the familiar toy called the Zœtrope, where men are seen walking, running, and performing various feats in most perfect imitation of real life. This instrument is destined to become a most valuable auxiliary to the appliances for illustration, and we have the pleasure of having the first opportunity of presenting its merits to an audience.

Among the scenes in which this instrument will be used on this occasion, will be a representation of little All Right in a number of his daring feats. Also, a characteristic address from Brother Jonathan to the audience.

SHADOW PANTOMIMES.

Several well arranged subjects are in preparation for this feature, in which the opaque, shadow of real persons, of sizes varying from four to thirty-six feet in height, will assume the parts. Jack, the Giant Killer will be done in a style that will refresh early recollections.

A Mammoth Menagerie of performing animals will also be on exhibition. Imagine an elephant, eighteen feet high, and weighing 16,000 pounds, upon the stage of the Academy. A short act in one part entitled the Power of Corn, will conclude the Shadow Pantomimes.

Good Music May also be expected at intervals during the Evening.

Entertainment begins at 8 O'Clock.

ADMISSION TO ALL PARTS OF THE HOUSE, 50 CENTS.
Reserved Seats 25 Cents Additional.

Tickets of Admission may now be had of any of the members of the Society.

Reserved Seats can be secured now at the Jewelry Store of Messrs. E. M. & C. A. Heilig, Corner of Ninth and Vine Streets.

Mr. Heyl has always been interested in photography. He realizes that he was the "first on the ground," but he also realizes that in his time the manufacture and exhibition of motion pictures would have been commercially unprofitable if not impossible.

"It was," said Mr. Heyl, "only after the art of what may be called chronophotography arrived that motion pictures became a commercially profitable article. Chronophotography arrived through the perfection of a transparent film or ribbon and the invention of a camera that would take consecutive pictures of moving objects at the rate of 30 to 40 exposures per second. Our exhibition in Philadelphia more than forty-five years ago was the first public exhibition of moving pictures in which photographs of living objects were shown as if in motion by projecting the views upon a screen. The subjects exhibited were an address by Brother Jonathan, Japanese acrobatic performers and waltzing figures. The related photographs were small glass plate positives of selected subjects reduced from wet plate negatives taken from rapidly succeeding poses by an ordinary camera. The exhibiting device was called "The Phastamatrope." It consisted of a revolving skeleton disc around the periphery of which the glass positives were removably placed to register accurately as they intermittently came into the lantern rays. The disc was revolved intermittently having a decided period of rest while the picture was exposed and a much shorter period of movement between the exposures. During the intervals between the rests a vibrating shutter cut off the light. The rotation of the disc was in absolute control of the operator so that the movements of the waltzers were kept in perfect synchronism with an orchestra of forty musicians and the pantomimic gestures and lip movements of Brother Jonathan coincided with the voice of the reader who supplied the audible words."

Though Mr. Heyl turned to other pursuits and had looked upon his invention more in the nature of a new application of the laws of optics he found his interest in the new art reviving when the later devices had made a new factor in civilization out of the motion picture. His mind had always been of an inventive turn and he had sought and found success in many commercial ventures always blazing his own trail and acting as the pioneer for others. He has many ideas for technical improvements and takes a very lively interest in modern kinematography. He is a great believer in the educational value of the motion picture and has strikingly original ideas on the future use of the motion picture as an instrument of education and enlightenment.

ESSANAY PLAYERS IN CANADA.

The Essanay Company has sent a corps of photographers through the northwest to get scenic pictures. The photographers went first to Toronto, Can. From there they left on the Canadian Pacific for Vancouver, British Columbia. Many stops will be made en route to get the very best scenic pictures of this district. Their itinerary carries them through the Rocky Mountains where there is some of the most picturesque scenery in the country. Already some wonderful pictures have been taken and shipped back to the Essanay studios at Chicago. The picture takers will be gone for more than a month and will get a large variety of scenes. The Essanay Company now is releasing two scenic productions a month. These are five hundred feet in length and are shown in connection with five hundred feet of animated cartoons. The cartoons are the "Dreamy Dud" series, drawn by Wallace A. Carlson.

NORTH AMERICAN MOVES TO NEW YORK.

The offices of the North American Film Corportaion have been moved from 222 South State street, Chicago, Ill., to 71 West 23rd street, New York.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN

Winkler's Programs.

M. WINKLER of Brooklyn, N. Y., will be remembered by our readers as having contributed several musical programs which have appeared in these pages. The World Film Corporation has this to say about one phase of Mr. Winkler's efforts:

> M. Winkler, who has achieved quite a reputation for arranging musical programs for features, has been especially delegated by Carl Fischer, music publisher, to select suitable music for each World Film feature. This he has done for four of our productions so far, and copies of these programs have been sent to each office. They are also being sent with the cut books to all the contract customers. Mr. Winkler has proved his genius in selecting these accompaniments, and what he has prepared should be in great demand by every World Film exhibitor.

These programs from the Universal Weekly will give you an idea of Mr. Winkler's method of work:

VICTOR.—"The Stool Pigeon." (Two-reel drama.)
Reel 1.—"Lost Happiness." "Mousma." Intermezzo.
Reel 2.—"Debutante," waltz. "Mysterioso," by Lake.
"Tone Poem," by Prior.
IMP.—"Wild Blood." (Drama.)
"Passioned Blood," waltz. "Reconciliation," by Bendix.
STERLING.—"His Smashing Career." (Comic.)
"The Runaway." Comic Opera Selection.
IMP.—"The Adventure of the Yellow Curl Papers." (Two-reel Drama.)
Reel 1.—"Novellete," by Marquis.
"Pryor's Fox Trot."
Reel 2.—"Valse Caprice," by Rubenstein.
"Cremonia," waltz. "Alita," by Losey.

In a letter accompanying the matter given above Mr. Winkler says, in part:

> The dramatic possibilities of the better features are unbounded, but the libraries of most of our moving picture musicians are very limited. With them it is always the same question: "How shall I match that picture if I never seen it?" We take it, the musician alone cannot do it; he must be assisted by others. For two years I have been trying to interest the film companies in this problem and I must say I have succeeded. I am still "on the job" to get other film companies interested in this matter, and I hope to get them all.

I want to say that I wish Mr. Winkler all the success in the world. From what I have heard in the past it is not the producers alone whose interest needs to be aroused. Many of them have from time to time attempted in various ways to assist in providing a proper musical setting for their more important pictures, but the apathy shown by musicians and exhibitors toward these efforts has tended to discourage them.

Mr. Winkler further says:

> The World Film and the Universal Film are sending out their program weeks before that picture reaches the theater. This enables the musician to obtain the missing compositions or substitute numbers of the same character which he may already possess.

The programs include the name of publisher and where music may be purchased. The companies invite reports from the various offices regarding interest manifested by exhibitors in these specially selected musical accompaniments. Now the rest is up to the musician. Take some live interest in this matter. Don't spend your time in trying to pick flaws and find fault. Remember, these programs are suggestions merely for your guidance in selecting musical numbers in harmony with the general character of the pictures; numbers which are, in the main, in most libraries or easily obtained. It is granted that few if any programs or suggestions are in strict conformity with the ideas of all, but a general idea of the nature of the music required should be helpful to all. Don't knock. Boost.

THE DANCING GIRL.

> Moving Picture World. Gentlemen:—As I have received much help from programs you have published I would like to submit one which proved very satisfactory and received many compliments. It is for "The Dancing Girl" (Paramount) and I hope it may help some one who is playing for this picture. As each reel is in the same key, simple segue from one number to another as the scenes demand. Sincerely, > Elizabeth D. McConville, Lyn's Theater, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

Organ Versus Orchestra Music.

Wm. Wertsch of San Francisco, Cal., writes:

> I take the liberty of replying to the article by Clarence E. Sinn in Moving Picture World, May 15, page 1077. A big pipe organ of three or four manuals is truly a magnificent instrument plus an artist to manipulate the same. I admit it to be the best one man proposition for moving pictures. But from there we disagree emphatically. I believe that under no circumstances can even a good organist compete with an orchestra in picture playing, even on its own ground—serious music. The organ cannot pizzicato, slur nor give a "jumping bow" effect. At best, its violin and cello stops are weak imitations of the real thing, and to many others as well as myself the deadly monotony of tone is soporific (when used to accompany a moving picture). As to mechanical sound effects furnished, my only comment is that the Prohibition party should prohibit their manufacture for the good of the cause. What equals in piquancy the efforts of a good trap drummer on the job?
> The article affirms (correctly) that the orchestra tone is best and further along claims the detail (slightly ambiguous) possibilities of the piano are on a par with the organ—viz., 100 per cent. Now as every "four-piece bunch" includes a piano our possibilities are manifestly increased or more perfect.
> (What I really said was "the orchestra is best in tonal coloring"—not best in tone. In this I was, of course, only voicing my own personal opinion. I like the tone-coloring of the orchestra better than that of the organ. Berlioz, Logier and Kling use this term to designate the different kinds, or different qualities of tone used in obtaining orchestral effects. Thus, the violin, cello, clarinet, cornet, etc., in the orchestra have a more distinctive quality than the stops on the organ which are given those names. Dr. Th. Parker in his dictionary of musical terms gives it thus: COLORIS: (Fr.; Ger.C(K)olorit.) The tonal color scheme vocal or instrumental, of a composition—the mouification in vocal or instrumental timbre—employed for obtaining special effects." As to the term "detail work" being ambiguous, I can only say that it has been frequently used in this page by myself and many others for want of a better expression to define the work of pianists and organists who follow the action closely that is, in detail—by increasing or diminishing the speed or the volume, by introducing short phrases and themes as some special action suggests, and by modulating chords, arpeggios, etc., used as connecting links between themes. I do not say this is necessary to picture playing; I only say that it is much in vogue among the "one man" players, and their instruments, being more elastic than the orchestra, it follows that it can be more perfectly done upon the piano, organ or some combination instrument.—Ed.)

Mr. W. continues:

> That it is easier to get a good organist than a good musical director is not clear to me save for the one reason that to be an artist the organist must possess brains and to earn the corresponding salary must put it over that he is earning the goods. Is it not reasonable and manifest that a musician having the advantage of thorough orchestral experience in theaters, etc., should be better qualified to fill the bill as leader for a motion picture than any organist whatsoever? By virtue of this experience he should be able to see a dramatic point or situation—serious or comic—quicker than another, and be able quicker to put a satisfactory musical setting to the same.
> (An intelligent and experienced theatrical leader should be able to fit a picture musically, but does Mr. Wertsch mean to infer that only such are engaged in picture theaters? I don't believe he thinks so. From all I can gather, such leaders are not in the majority. I know theatrical leaders who cannot get over the idea that theatrical music must be entreact stuff—

that they are playing, not for drama, but as they would play between the acts. That is their idea of theatrical experience. In a town near Chicago an exhibitor has tried several times to get an orchestra to "play for his pictures," but as they simply played selections, medleys and dance music (principally one-steps and waltzes) without any regard to the picture, he had in each case to let them go and take on a pianist who, at least, tried to play appropriate music. Mr. Carl W. Baker, who has furnished orchestras in several localities through the middle west, wrote some time ago that he had found exhibitors more than willing to put in orchestras providing they played music appropriate to the pictures. Others have written me in the same vein, though I cannot at this moment lay my hands on names and addresses. To continue:

I maintain, banishing "selections" to be an unnecessary curtailment of repertoire; sometimes the action of a picture is in part negative enough to allow almost any kind of selection being played. Further, if you come to a slow part and the action demands otherwise, it can be left out and go to the next movement. Further, it is possible by a slight rhythmic change, introducing of drummers' effects, etc., etc., to alter without burlesqueing the character of almost any Andante; also the coda of the waltz is often in good order—for instance—timed to close a scene or reel. The same idea of timing will often make a selection with its various movements just fit a picture. The dead pause is often dramatic, and the "time pause" where the theme changes (and often the music) is also often effective and refreshing.

I haven't given Mr. W.'s letter entire on account of its length, but have tried to give its salient parts. Maybe he thinks he is criticizing me. I don't know; if so, his only fault is that he has never read much of this page. About all he says has been said here at one time or another. So far as "banishing selections" is concerned I have given my views on this so many times that it seems like useless repetition to go over it again. In the same issue quoted (page 1077 M. P. World) is a letter from J. W. D. with comments by myself in which I suggested that this particular leader (and all others similarly afflicted) should cut out selections and all pieces containing several movements or heavy finale. When you know how to use (and time) them, as Mr. W. suggests, all right. When you don't know how—as the Mr. Henbraino mentioned—all wrong. Some time ago a correspondent from Los Angeles, Cal., complained of an orchestra there playing "Light Cavalry Overture" in a love story, working up the big forte finale in the most quiet and delicate part of the picture, and stopping with a crash—then a period of dead silence right in a spot where music was necessary if it was necessary at all.

Richard Tucker

RICHARD TUCKER has returned to Edison primarily to play the part of George Osborn in the feature production of "Vanity Fair," in which Mrs. Fiske is to be starred. Mr. Tucker played the same role with Mrs. Fiske, in the theatrical version, which, however, will not be used in the Edison version, an entirely new and complete scenario having been prepared from the book itself. Edison has been able to secure several players who figured in the original stage production.

Richard Tucker.

Mr. Tucker, however, is not new to Edison films, though they are the only pictures he has played in. He returns from Worcester, Mass., where he had his own stock company for the summer season, except for occasional visits to the stage, Mr. Tucker has been with Edison nearly four years, and has appeared prominently in many of their most successful releases.

He was born in Brooklyn and was an industrious bank clerk in Rochester, N. Y., when the theatrical yearning became too much for the routine worker and he joined a stock company then playing there. After about a year's experience, he was with Nat Goodwin and played three seasons with that star, who was then appearing in a repertoire of revivals of former successes. After a season with Bertha Kalisch in "Cora," Mr. Tucker joined his fortunes with Mrs. Fiske and appeared in some four plays and several curtain raisers with her, including "Salvation Nell," "Mrs. Bumpstead-Leigh," "Becky Sharp" and Hauptmann's "Hannele," earning flattering commendations for his work.

Mr. Tucker has also been singularly popular as a favorite in stock which, so much like the film, enables the playgoer to become well acquainted with the player. This stock experience comprises well-known companies in Rochester, Toledo, Ottawa, Cleveland and Philadelphia, where he played last fall in the American Theater Stock Company. Mr. Tucker was also featured in "At the Mercy of Tiberius," a dramatization of the book of that name.

In the photoplays, Mr. Tucker has been one of the quickest to gain popularity as he combines exceptional experience and technique with a spontaneity—a natural boyishness of manner, tempered with a clean-cut and directness of interpretation making for a distinct screen personality. He is again a member of the Edison stock company and will appear soon in a number of the three and four-reel features which that company is putting out.

Kathryn Osterman

KATHRYN Osterman is the latest legitimate star to succumb to the lure of the film. The announcement that she is to desert the drama for studio work follows the desertion of Billie Burke and Raymond Hitchcock to the studios.

The signing of the contract by Miss Osterman with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, a new $3,000,000 organization, to star in three big features will mark, so Broadway hears, the beginning of a retaliatory process on the part of both moving picture producers and the so-called legitimate forces.

Kathryn Osterman.

The Frohman offices declared some days ago that the signing of a moving picture contract by any of their stars would automatically cancel their contract with the Frohman management. Billie Burke took the plunge.

Now with the announcement of Miss Osterman's advent into the picture camp the moving picture producers are going to insert a clause in the contracts with their stars that they cannot appear on the legitimate stage, thus holding fast the letter of the old adage that it is a poor rule that will not work both ways.

Miss Osterman frankly declares that she is becoming a film star because the demands of the studio are not so exacting as the demands of the so-called legitimate. Recently Miss Osterman appeared in a moving picture play called "Housekeeping Under Cover," and it proved so popular that she was besieged with offers to appear regularly in the films and finally decided upon the Equitable.

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation is incidentally starting out to do big things. Felix F. Feist is the general manager, A. H. Spiegel president and Lewis J. Selznick vice-president. The studios, in charge of Isidor Bernstein, who is the general director, are located at Flushing, L. I., and the management has large plans for the initial productions.

With Miss Osterman signed as one of the principals, the management has stated that it is only the beginning of a campaign to secure some of the leading legitimate players.

MUCH CASH IN THIS CAST.

Wealth to the amount of $100,000,000 was represented in one scene from Essanay's photoplay, "Affinities," written by Mary Roberts Rinehart. Most of the scenes for the photoplay were taken in and near Chattanooga. Society became interested in the taking of the picture and more than a score of the wealthiest families of Chattanooga appeared in some of the scenes. These included several persons of national character, among them being C. Z. Patten, Mrs. C. E. James, the Ross Faxons and Montagues. Many of the scenes were taken in their homes and on their lawns.

Lenore Ulrich Entertains the Press

When an Enjoyable Luncheon Is Partaken of at the Hotel Hermitage by Representatives of the Various Trade Papers and Others.

SUBSEQUENT to an exhibition of her first moving picture subject at the Broadway theater on Monday last, Lenore Ulrich, best remembered as the star of "The Bird of Paradise," entertained representatives of the press at a luncheon that proved to be mentally as well as physically satisfactory.

After the exhibition of the film "Kilmeny" and another short-length of film showing Miss Ulrich as she appeared at the depot on her arrival from the west, the fortunate ones repaired to the Hotel Hermitage, where after luncheon had been served and heartily enjoyed, impromptu speeches complimentary to the charming little hostess, and pertaining to the art of picture making were called forth by Carl H. Pierce, of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., who assisted Miss Ulrich in presiding over the affair. George Mooser, general eastern manager for the Morosco Theatrical interests; Wid Gunning, of the Evening Mail; T. Daniel Frawley, general stage director of the Morosco Theatrical Organization, and Margaret I. MacDonald, of the Moving Picture World, were those who responded to the call following a dignified and interesting address by Mr. Pierce himself.

Lenore Ulrich.

Those present were: Leon Langfeld, manager Broadway theater; Carl H. Pierce, special representative Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.; Lenore Ulrich; George Mooser, general Eastern manager for Mr. Morosco; T. Daniel Frawley, general stage director for Mr. Morosco; Gerald Duffy, editor Picture Play Weekly; R. K. Thompson, Picture Play Weekly; Thornton Fisher, Evening World and Moving Picture World; Hamilton Owens, moving picture editor New York Press; J. A. LOOK OUT FOR "CABIRIA" DUPES.

Dupers of "Cabiria" are to be run down and punished, is the advice from Harry Raver's office of the Itala Film Company, makers of the big D'Annunzio spectacle,

Rumors of duping have reached Mr. Raver's ears from several sources, and while no infringements have been perpetrated, some damage has been done in several unsold countries on account of rights being offered without authority at ridiculously low figures by so-called film exporters having offices in New York.

One instance of this damage was an attempt by a well-known pirate having a small office in the Fortieth street section to sell the rights for "Cabiria" in Brazil. As is usual in the Latin-American countries, there are but one or two buyers in each and these men are careful to determine whether or not the firm offering an important film is authorized to do so. A buyer in Brazil, who has been an Itala customer for years, received a quotation from the New York "exporter" which was about half the price fixed by the Itala office and he became suspicious. A cable to Torino brought the advice that Harry R. Raver was in charge of the American Itala Company and the only New York agent.

Torino cabled Mr. Raver to investigate the attempted piracy and the latter immediately placed the matter in the hands of a competent detective agency which is diligently at work on the case.

Hans A. Spanuth

HANS A. SPANUTH, whose likeness appears with this article, is well known both in New York and Chicago film circles.

On his arrival in Chicago he took charge of the feature department of the General Film Company's exclusive service. That was about one and a half years ago, and he brought his weekly rental business in his territory up to $5,000.

After that Mr. Spanuth became connected with Alfred Hamburger and assisted in organizing the Celebrated Players Film Co. After eight months he resigned his position as manager of that organization and became general manager of the Central Film Co., which was organized May 1st, 1914, by Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

H. A. Spanuth.

This company, as originally organized, confined its operations to Cook County, Ill. "The Spoilers," "Les Miserables," and other big features were handled so successfully that the Central Film Co. was obliged to extend its operations to the entire state of Illinois. At the present time its operations embrace the states of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri.

Last fall, when Edwin F. Weigle, war photographer for the Chicago Tribune, brought back his first moving pictures from the battle fields of Europe, the Central Film Co. was selected to handle the bookings. These pictures broke all records, it is said, for pictures of their kind.

Griffith's "The Avenging Conscience" and "Salisbury's Wild Life Pictures" were other big successes handled by the Central Film Co. under General Manager Spanuth's direction.

In New York City Mr. Spanuth got his original start with Miles Brothers, where he was office manager. He then opened up Laemmle's New York office, and afterwards became advertising manager for the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co. He resigned that position after becoming assistant manager, and went into business for himself as producer.

At this time Mr. Spanuth produced "Oliver Twist," in which Nat Goodwin appeared as Fagin. This picture, Mr. Spanuth claims, was the greatest success of its kind at the time, and the first American made feature with an American star and a Broadway cast.

The Central Film Co. recently took the agency for the Kraus Mfg. Co. for the Middle West, handling their entire line of oil paintings and water colors of the various photo players in all sizes. The Central Film Co. has already placed this line of photographs in all of the Chicago department stores, a marked innovation of its kind in the moving picture trade.

Director Capellani's new picture, "The Imposter," will show the George Washington stopping place at Fort Lee. The house stands just as it was in the Revolutionary period. It has been neglected by the Fort Lee community, but Director Capellani has seen the value of placing it before the American people, and in "The Imposter" audiences will have their first view of this place, which is famous in American history.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THE national convention of the motion picture exhibitors at San Francisco was a splendid success, and according to the reports made by those who have returned from the convention everybody who attended was enthusiastic over the manner in which the program of the arrangements was carried out. Delegates, manufacturers, exchange men and others interested in the motion picture business say it was the best convention the national body has held in its five years of existence. The committee, officers of and delegates to the convention are to be congratulated upon the general satisfaction afforded the motion picture interests; but we are impelled to repeat what we said upon the close of the last national convention: the success attained is on paper only. The officers and delegates have not yet accomplished any real, practical ends. They have not yet instilled into the conventions that business zeal which the interests of the motion picture business require. As a social event for the delegates and others who attended, the convention was a big success. The Pan-American Exposition helped to make the gathering more interesting. As an industrial affair, the manufacturers and exchange people were exceedingly pleased with it. But what do the reports of the convention's business sessions show for the exhibitors of the country? We fail to find in them any original propositions, or anything that may serve to guide the subordinate organizations in reaching a solution of the many problems that confront them. Speeches by officers and honorary guests apparently took up most of the convention's time, and the balance of the time was taken up by the passage of resolutions condemning ownership of picture houses by manufacturers, condemning censorship in any form, and protesting against the use of motion pictures to exploit saloons. All these matters have received the attention of exhibitors in the various states and smaller organizations, and these people have naturally been waiting to learn suggestions from the national body as to the best methods for dealing with the problems.

On what the convention did it cannot be criticised. But it did not do enough. The selection of D. W. Griffith to speak on the censorship question was a wise one, as his connection with "The Birth of a Nation" has qualified him to speak on the subject. The assaults of the censorship agitators have probably been more bitter on his picture than any waged against any other single production. But Mr. Griffith had only one suggestion to make for a battle against censorship: that the picture men combine with the press to obtain results in that direction. Mr. Griffith, to our mind, clinched the effect of his address by tacking on the suggestion. In passing its resolutions the convention should have followed his example and given their views to the exhibitors who were not able to be present as to how censorship may be fought, how the exploiting of saloons by the use of pictures might be stopped, etc. A national convention affords the best means for obtaining from the exhibitors throughout the country views on problems affecting the industry and if advantage is not taken of that opportunity there is bound to be disappointment on the part of exhibitors who cannot attend.

Mr. Griffith's suggestion that the picture men combine with the press in an anti-censorship campaign is a good one. It is doubtful, however, that such a plan is a feasible one. The picture people and the press allied with their interests are ready and willing to make the combination, but we fear it will be a difficult matter to get the press Mr. Griffith refers to sufficiently interested. The attitude of that press towards motion pictures is far more favorable than it was a year ago. But it is really only an attitude of tolerance. The relations of that press with the regular theatrical business were such that motion picture people found it as hard to get recognition from one as the other. The theatrical people saw that it was a matter of business with them to discount motion pictures and detract public attention from them. The press saw that if the pictures cut into the theatrical field the newspapers would lose valuable patronage, therefore it ridiculed the pictures and the industry at every opportunity. When there was no opportunity for this, they treated the pictures with silent contempt. It was only when regular theatrical people got into the picture business and certain motion picture producers commenced to advertise in the newspapers that the pictures were accorded serious attention, and even then the favorable comments were restricted as closely as possible in proportion to the amount of advertising. It is by no means beyond the pale of possibility to get the press to co-operate with the motion picture business. Past history justifies the assertion that it is chiefly a financial proposition with the press. Should the picture interests find it possible to be more liberal in its newspaper advertising there is little doubt that enthusiasm can be aroused on the part of the press in combining with them on censorship questions.

As the motion picture business is to-day it is doubtful that the interests would be justified in being liberal with its newspaper advertising. Many newspaper men have said that the returns must be enormous in view of the immense outlay made by the manufacturers and the millions of people who patronize the shows. On this basis of argument they have expressed surprise that the picture people have not tried to invest some of the returns in newspaper advertising. The answer to this is that the advertising now being done by the manufacturers is one of the largest items of expense. There are from 15,000 to 20,000 exhibiting houses in the country and the well established concerns reach these places direct with expensive advertising matter aside from the large and small posters that are seen in front of the houses. The amount thus expended far exceeds the total advertising expenditures the regular theatrical managers made. As to the exhibitors, they could not be expected to advertise in the newspapers while the seating capacities and admission prices were at a minimum. With the erection of the larger houses and the standard of the pictures continuing as it is there is a possibility that the managements will feel justified in taking advertising space for their attractions.

A well-known manufacturer in conversing with a newspaper friend said he felt that the newspapers should show more of a public spirit towards the motion pictures than they do and he was quite sure that they would be justified in taking a stand with the picture interests on the censorship question. There is no censorship of newspapers or the regular theatres. Motion pictures partake to a considerable extent of the characteristics of both of these. There are laws already in force to supervise them. The action against certain regular theatres during the past year proved this. "But," said the newspaperman, "the picture people themselves established a Board of Censorship!" The manufacturer admitted this, but said that the step was taken primarily by the better class of producers as a protection for themselves against interlopers who might produce pictures of an offensive character. Secondly, to have a disinterested and conservative board pass upon the pictures and not have the producers rely solely upon their individual judgments. The producers knew that with such an endorsement the attention of people who had stood aloof from the pictures would eventually be induced to patronize them, which proved true. "Now that the pictures have attained a standard which is absolutely above suspicion why should they be subjected to official discrimination?" asked the manufacturer. Of the thousands of pictures on the market to-day not one can be condemned as immoral. No sane manufacturer will risk investment in such subjects. A producer's judgment may be at fault, sometimes, in the portrayal of stories and an inspection may show that the subject as filmed may offend the delicate tastes of some people and in every case where such objections have been raised the manufacturers have changed the subject to overcome them. If the producers stubbornly adhered to their own views and insisted upon placing the subjects upon the market without regard to the suggested changes the police authorities might ask that some provision be made to relieve them of the trouble caused by such people. But the motion picture people do not do this. On the contrary, they have always shown a disposition to respect the suggestions and yet, through the operations of people who seldom, if ever, visit picture shows laws are enacted which brand the producers and exhibitors as little less than criminals. Some newspapers have taken up the subject, but they are so few that the comments in favor of the picture men's contention have escaped the attention of the public. It would seem but a simple act of justice if the united press took up the matter and gave disinterested views regarding it. The many thousands of people interested in the picture business feel that they are right in their fight against official censorship as proposed, and the newspapers can do no harm or prejudice their interests in discussing the matter.

"The Maker of Dreams"

"Broadway Favorite," Three-Reeler With Hal Forde—Story Is Novel and Has Much Grace.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WHILE it is true that Mr. Forde did commendable work in this offering, "The Maker of Dreams," which may be termed an old love story from a new angle, the center of interest lies in the character portrayed by Alice Hollister. She is the only character of real interest who appears in both the story and its sequel, for she alone of all who are introduced early has a convincing human experience with real dramatically emotional possibilities. She has the titular role, the true leading part, while the part carried by Hal Forde gave him no chance at all till near the end. When he had active, convincing business he did it well.

As a production it is delightful. In some scenes Miss Hollister does work that is as full of grace as a dream. These scenes, in a beautifully moon-lit wood, have been caught by Mr. Hollister's camera and put on the screen with nothing less than magic. The director, Robert G. Vignola, has filled all his important scenes with an art that makes one frankly enthusiastic. The locations are in Florida woodlands with sandy fields, hanging moss and swampy streams. The society scenes and the cabin scenes and in moments of frivolity as well as at dramatic points have many little things that strike one most pleasantly—bits of acting now, and now the general grace of the whole picture.

The story presented great difficulties, at least as looked at through the society-life side of the situation rather than through the girl's lowlier side. This twisting of the viewpoint seems to have been done to get novelty, but it left the piyotal character in the background while in the foreground we have the love stories of a father and then of his son and the two do not swing in the same dramatic orbit. It opens with a picture of society folk. The son of the house is a cynic. He falls in love with a wild girl full of natural charm. Now, it is the man's mother who schemes and the cynic honestly thinks that the girl (whom it would have been tragic for him to marry) is as fickle as the society women, and he marries without love a rich wife. Nothong very tragic has happened to him, but far away out of his life the girl of the woods has gone mad—she could not have been well balanced in the first place to go mad just for a man. When the story again opens—the time is years afterward—we are led to expect some sort of fatal outworking from it, but all that happens is the old man's finding that the mad "maker of dreams" is still true to him and her death. That itself is not tragic from his standpoint. The author, C. Doty Hobart, is thoroughly competent and seldom fails to hit the nail on the head, but with all the charm that this picture has as an offering, we cannot see that he has succeeded perfectly this time.

"Outcasts of Society"

Two-Reel Thanhouser of Social Criticism and Strong Realistic Tendency.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT WAS through the utilization of social themes that Ibsen became famous and the whole dramatic art looked out upon widening opportunity. We are all of us aware of the rank injustice with which small offenders are treated, while the large ones become subjects of public interest through the columns of sensational newspapers, and the time has come for moving pictures to lay bare the vital facts concerning the way those small offenders are treated in prisons to which they are railroaded in an indiscriminate fashion by police courts. The story of social criticism can have no theme more vital than that involving the exposure of our faulty institutions, and this theme underlies an appeal in "Outcasts of Society" to what is broad and generous in human nature.

The story "Outcasts of Society" is singularly correct, almost unconsciously so, in depending heavily on a cast of women. There are three of them, a working girl who is sent to jail for shoplifting, the young shoplifter who "framed it" on the innocent victim, and the latter's mother, a prison inmate for a crime not specified, but presumably for a minor offense. The innocent victim exerts a softening influence on the older ones when all three are brought into contact during prison life, while they combine to save the weaker character at a crucial period after their release from jail. The compassion shown is that of the more sensitive and more sympathetic heart of woman. It is a clean story of bitter facts and out of the ordinary in many other respects.

"Driven by Fate"

Three-Reel Imp Production Deals With Adventures of a Girl Who Inherits Love for the Footlights.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN spite of its melodramatic title, this story of a girl who yields to the lure of theatrical life is pictured more as a comedy-drama. Indeed the chief strength of the story is the manner in which it handles a familiar theme. Instead of the usual series of depressing incidents, the plot moves along in a bright, pleasing manner. The girl goes to the city and just touches the edge of the abandoned life of a music hall entertainer, when her lover arrives and carries her away from the glare of the white lights.

The photography is clear and effective throughout, and the action has been well timed by the director, J. G. Adolfi. Violet Mersereau and William Garwood play the leading roles, and while there are no very dramatic situations, their work is enjoyable. Miss Mersereau plays the part of the actress-mother and later that of the grown daughter.

In the opening scene an actress named Violet Marcel is shown with her fatherless child, living in a country boarding house. She obtains an engagement and feels that she must abandon the infant. She hides it in a basket of clothes and takes a train to the city. The clothes are delivered by a colored woman to a nearby family. They discover the child and after considerable debate decide to adopt it. The child grows up in company with their son. The latter goes to college and on his return falls in love with Violet.

There is much opposition to the match on the part of the father, for the girl has shown indications of artistic temperament. Later when she opens the trunk left by her mother years before she dresses herself up in a low-neck theatrical costume. The father's wrath blazes forth and he forbids the wedding.

Scene from "Driven by Fate" (Universal).

The girl flees to the city and determines to become an actress. She is employed in a cheap music hall and the hero follows her, arriving just in time to save her from disagreeable entanglements. Later the parents come and there is a general reunion and happiness follows.

"Marse Covington"

Sympathetic Interpretation of George Ade's Story—Produced by Rolfe for Metro Program.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IT IS SAID that Director Edwin Carewe photographed some twenty thousand feet of film in making "Marse Covington" and that in cutting the picture down to the allotted five reels he was obliged to sacrifice many good scenes. Here the problem of the director came in deciding what to exclude that the story might be told in five thousand feet without appearing fragmentary for there is a deal of characterization in "Marse Covington" and a bald presentation of the plot would leave an incomplete impression. But whatever was sacrificed, a spectator will feel after viewing the completed product, that enough remains to give a comprehensive idea of Ade's characters. Just as it stands, the picture is well balanced, strong in its heart interest and finely acted, especially by Edward Connelly in the title role.

Scene from "Marse Covington" (Rolfe).

Without traveling farther south than Staten Island, Mr. Carewe located a building that looks precisely like a Virginia mansion, and using this and bits of country in the immediate neighborhood, he found all that was needed in the way of settings for southern scenes, prior to the Civil War and in later years. He secured an ante-bellum model stage coach, too, and at all times showed a painstaking regard for correctness in the furnishing of the rooms tenanted by Marse Covington, his granddaughter, Carol, and the faithful old negro servant, Uncle Dan.

No small part of the charm existing in the story is due to the sympathetic portrayal of the friendship existing between the proud southern colonel and the devoted servant, who, as a boy, was given to Covington. He refuses to take advantage of his legal right to freedom and shares the years of misfortune that follow Covington's loss of property and money. Evicted from their Virginia home, the colonel, Carol and Dan go to New York, where their small savings are soon exhausted. For the happy conclusion, in which the mansion is returned to its rightful owner, the despised Yankee, whom Covington has all along declined to consider as a husband for his granddaughter, is to be thanked. There is quite enough plot for a five-reel treatment and not a few scenes that merit particular mention. The horse race on which Marse Covington stakes his property and loses it accounts for some of the picture's most exciting moments. Louise Huff makes an attractive girl of Carol and John J. Williams gives a telling character sketch as Uncle Dan.

"The Battle of Ballots"

First Production of the Good Luck Film Company Is Argument for Prohibition—Drama in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

M. A. NEFF, general manager of the Good Luck Film Company, selected a pertinent theme for his first production, which offers melodramatic argument in favor of prohibition. There is no obvious preaching in favor of the Anti-Saloon League's propaganda, rather a lesson pointed by contrasting the conditions in a town under a "wet" and under a "dry" regime. Mr. Neff wrote the scenario himself and supervised the making of the scenes, directed by Frank B. Coigne, who also played one of the important characters. The leading roles are presented by Mayre Hall and William Wells, whereas others in a wisely selected cast include Baroness Dorothy Van Raven, Robert Web Lawrence, Laura Mackin, Mary Navarro, G. Charles Bryant and Frank Whitson.

Two families in a town torn by antagonism between the "wet" and the "dry" factions are made the basis of the story in "The Battle of Ballots." The owner of a saloon typifies the liquor interests, while the prohibition element is represented by the ice-man. To start domestic difficulties, the saloon keeper's daughter falls in love with the ice-man's son. Bitterness between the opposing factions is increased by a close election, and as the story progresses the quarrel becomes more intensely personal, until all of the members of both families are involved. In various ways it is shown how ruin follows in the wake of drink and how the advocates of prohibition become the leaders in the community.

It is essentially a picture for small towns and theaters catering to patrons that are not too exacting about the technical niceties of photoplay production. Probably its strongest appeal will be in communities actually facing the problems with which the story deals. Some defects in the assembling of the scenes and in the sub-titles no doubt will be rectified before the film is released. To those interested in the prohibition campaign the pictures of prominent temperance workers taken at the recent convention in Atlantic City will be of considerable interest.

"The Girl From His Town"

Margarita Fischer Makes the Hit of Her Film Career Thus Far in an Adaptation of Marie Van Vorst's Book—Filmed by the American.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IF you ask me to commend to you a clean, absorbing photo-drama, with not one, but several punches of the virile kind in it, and with a star that is not only bewitchingly beautiful from toes to finger tips, but endowed with photodramatic talent that enables her fairly to live the part, I need go no further than "The Girl From His Town," in which Margarita Fischer appears in the titular role of Sarah Towney.

It is not that I hold that the film story perfect; for it is not, as there are several places where one is impressed that padding has just been happily avoided and the thread reduced almost to the vanishing point; but it is that Margarita Fischer and her worthy opposite, C. Elliott Griffin, fills one's mind so full of the main issue that one overlooks these defects. Besides, the story has the home call in it. The girl is from the small town of Blair, in old Montana, where she has presided as the divinity of a soda fountain, at which the boy from the same town had been known to consume as many as six chocolate sodas at one sitting, so that he might gaze into her eyes and watch the play of mirth and laughter on her classically moulded cheeks; and he was wealthy while she was poor.

That was all changed, however, by the slightest accident—the missing of a train at the little burg by the impresario, who chanced to hear Sarah Towney sing at a church social, the night he was compelled to stop over. After that, in the course of time, Sarah became a noted diva, with the musical worlds of London and Continental cities at her feet, and it was in London that the young billionaire, Dan Blair, made his winning fight for her hand and heart.

Dan found it an uphill battle, as Sarah had become much attached to a Russian prince, bearing the family name of Ponitownsky; but she could not forget the "little boy," who had risked gastritis so that he might gaze on the wondrous beauty of her face and eyes. How he succeeded is best told in the film.

Miss Fischer commands admiration in several strong scenes, notably in that showing the interview between the diva and old man Ruggles, Dan's friend, when he tells her that Dan is penniless and dependent on him. How sweetly does Miss Fischer show that it is love and not money that commands the diva's course. How well she simulates the mirth and fine scorn that soon culminate in a rage when Ruggles himself sues for the diva's hand! That is an affecting scene where Dan announces to the diva that he is engaged to be married to the Duchess of Breakwater. The keen heart thrust is bravely suffered, but one has the sugegstion of great will effort. It is only when Dan has departed that the desolation of loneliness clothes the diva as with a garment.

Mr. Griffin is very pleasing and convincing in the part of Dan. He photographs well and avoids posing, the sin of many otherwise fine characterizations. Prince Ponitowsky is well impersonated by Joseph Harris. The mannerisms that characterize the foreigner are kept well in mind and action. The Lord Galory of Joseph Singleton and the Ruggles of Fred Gamble are commendable character studies. The Duchess of Breakwater, in the care of Beatrice Van, is a praiseworthy characterization, and for artistic effort ranks high.

Director Harry Pollard has staged the production with much care. He has given us a number of beautiful exteriors and several fine interiors. The night scene showing London across the River Thames, from the picnic grounds, in which Dan and Sarah Towney are enjoying blissful seclusion, may be poetic; but it is not in conformance with conditions as they exist in that mighty maze of buildings on both sides of the Thames.

"On Her Wedding Night"

Four-Part Mystery Melodrama at Vitagraph Theater—Eleventh Chapter of "The Goddess" Based on Coal Strike.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

TRUE to the technique of a mystery story, this four-part Vitagraph melodrama opens with a murder and then works backwards and forwards at the same time—backwards in presenting the reason for the murder, forwards in carrying the characters into fresh experiences. Eugene Mullin's scenario is expertly constructed, particularly during the first two reels; the production of William Humphrey is in keeping, and the cast is strong, with Edith Storey as the girl who is robbed of her fiance when the wedding party is waiting; Carolyn Birch as the woman in the case and Antonio Moreno as the helpful friend, who in due time takes the place of the murdered man.

Mr. Mullin's construction possesses the great virtue of catching the interest without any introductory preparation. We see a veiled woman sneaking up to a house under cover of the darkness and peering through a window at a man telephoning. On the other end of the wire, Helen, the prospective bride, awaits his arrival, surrounded by the bridal party. Flashes from one scene to the other show the swift accusation, the shot that ends Klendon's life and the consternation of Helen when the conversation is suddenly cut short. With admirable directness we were shown the immediate consequences of the shooting, which remains a half-mystery to the audience. The spectator knows what happened and how it happened; but the cause is revealed bit by bit as Klendon's friends piece the evidence together.

Coming to the final reels there is a slight slump in the interest, owing to the excessive use of the flash-back. The author causes two characters to tell their explanatory stories —the woman in the case and her sweetheart, a Spaniard, who came to America to avenge the wrong done by Klendon. In presenting these narratives, a number of scenes that the audience remembers perfectly well are re-screened at unnecessary length. A mere suggestion of what is being said would serve the purpose and prevent the restlessness liable to result from repetition. Barring this debatable point, "On Her Wedding Night" is a most satisfying melodrama.

The Goddess.

The services of Celestia, "The Goddess" are of small avail in the eleventh chapter of the Morris-Goddard serial. Perhaps in the next installment she will be called upon for kindly intervention but meanwhile we are shown with unrelenting force the horrors of a coal strike in which the money lord

—the coal baron Silas Kehr—refuses to arbitrate. The eleventh chapter is true to the purposes of the serial in treating one of the most serious of American problems, the conflict between capital and labor, and it is to the credit of the producers that the subject is handled in a generously spectacular fashion.

With the strikers on the one hand and the coal baron, his guards and strike breakers on the other, it becomes a pitched battle in which the armed strikers storm the stockade that is defended by the forces of capital. Director Ralph Ince made much of these scenes and at the same time developed his story. Celestia is virtually a captive in the hands of the coal baron and it remains for Freddy the Ferret to find her. William Dangman's playing of the timid Freddy gives the picture some welcome comedy touches.

The crowds in the big scenes were very well handled and Director Ince was fortunate in finding men who looked like miners. In photographing the struggle around the stockade, he placed his camera-men at various points to get the scenes from unexpected angles. Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Paul Scardon, Ned Finley and other favorites are found, as usual, in this ambitious serial.

Ann Murdock in "A Royal Family."

"Sunday"

World Film Corporation Releases a George W. Lederer Production in Which Reine Davies Is Starred.

tion of George Lederer, "Sunday" becomes an acceptable, if somewhat conventional, story with scenes laid in and around a lumbermen's camp and on a fine estate supposed to be in England. In theme and treatment this production closely resembles many others of the same photoplay family, a fact that need not necessarily detract from its popularity. There are the usual elements of sympathetic appeal and adventure, accompanying a love story with a happy ending.

Reine Davies, of vaudeville and musical comedy fame, does very well in the character played on the stage by Miss Barrymore. Left an orphan in a lumber camp, Sunday is adopted by four lumbermen, all of whom become devoted to their charge. As might be expected, a young man with more manners than morals appears in the neighborhood of the camp and tries to steal Sunday without the formality of a marriage ceremony. Jacky, the youngest of the girl's guardians, shoots the intruder, thereby giving grounds for the plot that is carried through to the climax of the story. Finding herself to be an English heiress, Sunday goes to England, where an affair with the brother of the murdered man is launched. Naturally, there are complications when the relationship is discovered, but in the end all is forgiven because it is conceded that Arthur received a just reward for a misspent life.

Miss Davies photographs attractively and her acting, especially in scenes with her four guardians, is engaging. Adolph Link gives a telling character sketch as Lively, whereas the remaining members of the quartet are forcefully portrayed by Charles Trowbridge, William H. Tooker and Albert Hart. Montague Love is satisfactory as the young Englishman who wins Sunday. In the matters of locations and sets, the picture is well supplied, although the best effects are not always realized, owing to photography that appears unduly dark. Other prints may show an improvement in this respect.

"Dr. Rameau"

A Finely Screened Version of George Sohnet's Story, Produced by the Fox Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GEORGE SOHNET, whose works place him among the most popular, if not on a par with the greatest of the French novelists and playwrights, is best known as the author of "The Ironmaster." His "Dr. Rameau," the story of the physician whose embittered childhood makes him an atheist, and who discovers, long after her death, that his adored wife was unfaithful, offers an excellent field for the photoplaywright. The closing scenes of the drama, where the man whose skill has saved thousands of lives, finds himself baffled in his attempt to save the child he thought his own, and he asks help of the God he has denied, are among the strongest situations of fiction, the final picture showing Rameau on his knees before an altar. The photoplay opens with a prologue which ranks as one of the most tense, human and artistic examples of motion picture drama known to the screen. Will S. Davis, the producer, has shown equal skill and thoroughness in handling the rest of the material, which does not always admit of vigor of action. Pertinent criticism may question the use of an American railroad train, but, if this condition was forced upon him, Mr. Davis has been wise enough to also employ American telephones and use the English language in sign-writing.

There are a number of uncommonly realistic effects in the drama—the saving of the child from drowning, and the storm in the prologue, also the one later in the play. The acting demands universal commendation. Frederick Perry acts the physician with feeling and authority. His portrayal of betrayed love and the resultant frenzy while swayed by a whirlwind of passion, never oversteps the bounds of artistic restraint. Jean Southern, Dorothy Bernard, Stuart Holmes, and George Alison, meet every demand made upon their histrionic ability.

"Milestones of Life"

Four-Reel Thanhouser Masterpicture on the Tyranny of Love.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE for consistent beauty of treatment and an exceptionally strong characterization by Mignon Anderson, "Milestones of Life" more forcibly and truthfully portrays the bitter tyranny of wifely affection than any screen drama of the kind ever shown. The role of an exacting wife, no matter how truly fond she may be, is not one to enlist sympathy, especially when she offers tears and reproaches instead of the charm of intelligent companionship to her husband. The part becomes all the more difficult that she has no real cause for suspicion, and that she magnifies an episode of childhood, when she and her husband were tiny sweethearts together and he displayed a variation in favor of a lady almost old enough to be his mother. To consider an episode that no ardent boy has ever escaped as even a past intrigue, to declare that he has never gotten over that love, is the act of a jealous neurotic, such as many good wives grow to be when they no longer attract because they no longer try to make themselves attractive.

Mignon Anderson puts her heart and soul into this characterization, with a result that can only be realized in viewing the photodrama. The effect is powerful—it is that of glimpsing an actual phase of existence, and there is some fiery melodrama to luridly enliven the conclusion, a fire scene in Thanhouser's best style. The four periods are actually of four seasons, that of the Spring, the child love, being the most effective. Of others in the cast Louise Rutter, "the other woman," is most fascinating, such a delight to the eye that one wonders at the husband's heroic fidelity.

"The Fighting Hope"

A Stirring Production by Lasky, Featuring Laura Hope Crews in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS feature is remarkable for many splendid points, but the one thing which struck me as the most remarkable the most gratifying withal was the acting of Laura Hope Crews. This capable and distinguished artiste has achieved an enviable reputation on the speaking stage and she has fully lived up to her fame in her work before the camera. Exhibitors will appreciate the rarity of such an occurrence. Instinctively the performer seemed to realize the special needs, the special advantages and the peculiar limitations of the camera and the audience at the Strand seemed thrilled with her art fully as much as other audiences were who had seen her in speaking parts.

The part she plays is a most exacting one. She is the wife of a weak and unscrupulous man employed as treasurer in a bank. The husband not only betrays his trust to the bank but is unfaithful to his wife. The latter centering her affections on her two little boys does not realize the worthlessness of her husband, who is finally sent to prison for unlawfully certifying a check.

Parts of the picture reveal a deep and quite successful study of the psychological possibilities of the screen. Neither the printed page nor the speaking stage have given us such appealing and terribly complete pictures of a financial panic as this feature. In a flash we see how the failure of a big bank reaches all classes of the community, destroying the petty hoard of the cripple, the savings of old age and the honest thrift of labor. Settings and photography again lived up to the Lasky reputation which is now well established with the moving picture public.

Of one of the props on which the plot depends and upon certain developments of it I do not want to say too much. The composition of the whole thing is obviously frail, the slightest pressure of logic will sweep away a good deal of the illusion. I must mention in conclusion that the cast was excellent. Needless to say aught in praise of the work of Theodore Roberts. The work of Thomas Meighan I thought was particularly good and he helped in carrying off all the big scenes in which Laura Hope Crews showed to such splendid advantage.

"Kilmeny"

Marking the First Appearance on the Screen of Lenore Ulrich in a Four-Part Production by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN STEPPING from the legitimate to the moving picture stage there are always huge chances to be taken, because where color and voice have added their charm, just what the author is going to do when deprived of these important factors of success on the legitimate stage is usually a matter of speculation. But before passing any comment on the picture itself, we will say that Miss Ulrich bids fair to combat successfully the obstacle of silence or what might be termed the abstract in the moving picture. She photographs well, and understands how to register thought and emotion in spite of the eliminations spoken of above.

"Kilmeny" is a simple and prettily staged photoplay. It presents the story of a little English girl of wealthy family who through playing with a gypsy boy of her own age is stolen away, and grows up among the gypsies, leaving them only when she discovers that the gypsy chief is about to force her to marry Barouche, an unprepossessing member of the tribe.

Kilmeny after running away subsists for some time in the woods. One day she sees Lord Leight who is out hunting, shoot a bird which drops at her feet. With the poor dead thing she follows the man with the gun, and as he is about to commit another murder among her feathered friends she catches his arm, preventing him. He takes the girl home with him and she is given, with the consent of Lady Leigh, a home in his house. Indiscriminate action on the part of Lord Leigh causes his wife to become jealous of Kilmeny, and the stress of circumstances arising from such conditions causes the sensitive girl to leave the home of her benefactors and return to the gypsies. But when she is again about to be forced into mariage with the detestable Barouche, Pierre, the cripple gypsie boy with whom she ran away, goes to her real parents and tells them of the whereabouts of the child that they had mourned for years.

The play ends prettily with a reunion of the friendship with the Leighs, and a climax of the love story begun in the home of the Leighs between Kilmeny and the brother of Lady Leigh.

The picture was exhibited to the press at the Broadway theater, and is a credit to its director, Oscar Apfel as well as to the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co.

"Pro Patria"

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Presents Splendidly Staged Six-Part Version of Sardou's Famous Play, "Patrie."

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN STAGING Sardou's celebrated play for the screen presentation the Pathe Freres have spared no expense to make it an intelligent and enjoyable visualization.

The play will be remembered as having had its first production in Paris in 1869, and is laid in the period of Philip II of Spain. Its spectacular possibilities are large, and have been taken advantage of in the making of the Pathe production. An added interest of the production lies in the fact that many of its scenes have been taken at Louvain, which city has been a mark for the atrocities of the present European war.

In the cast of "Pro Patria" appear the names of Henri Kraus, well-known as "Jean Valjean" in "Les Miserables;" and Paul Cappelani, another eminent European actor, while others among the players although not as familiar to American audiences have given delightful portrayals of the characters allotted them. There is in the direction of the production a capability and a true knowledge of the art of picturization displayed, which is heightened in its effect by the hand coloring of the film, and splendid photographic attributes.

As will also be remembered by those familiar with the play a great portion of it is enacted against Flemish backgrounds. It is rich in color, and rife with horrors such as a play of any period of conspiracy and war is apt to be, and at the same time portraying human passions and emotions in the same unchanging aspect as that in which they appear today. There is felt in the production that tensity of plot and mastery of detail that Sardou understood so well. The producer has followed the idea of the author, and the result is a most vivid vizualization of the days when the Netherlands rebelled against the yoke of Spain.

"La Patria" is of especial value not alone as a splendid picturization of a well-known play by a master author, but as an historical production that may be exhibited with impunity in connection with the study of history and the drama.

"The King of the Wire"

A Lively Three-Reel Edison by Ashley Miller.

VERY much better than its weak title, "The King of the Wire" would indicate, the story concerns itself far more with the accomplishments of a lively young newspaper reporter impersonated by Gladys Hulette than with Pat O'Malley as an erstwhile public entertainer and balancing acrobat. The usual fine Edison cast is in harmonious support of what turns out to be the ingenious expedient adopted by a girl reporter to obtain the supposedly unobtainable, an interview with a great Senator who has surrounded himself with keen-eyed guards on the eve of an important move in his professional career. On her success—this is in accord with the idea that drama must present a struggle to overcome opposing forces—hangs a very large part of interest in the story, and it might easily have been written especially for Miss Hulette.

Gladys does not look to be much over fifteen in long skirts from in front, hence there is nothing particularly forced or theatrical when she dons the short skirts of twelve and goes to play with the important Senator's children. She ingratiates herself with them and, in their company, easily passes the lynx-eyed guards. Ashley Miller had such a lively opportunity in this role and his little star that it seems almost a pity that he did not use it to greater extent. Perhaps he will in a comedy presentation of the very worldly and knowing child brought into relations with patronizing superiority of grownups. He makes the story melodramatic instead with an attempted frameup on the part of crooks who enter grounds and house without trouble. Gladys thwarts the crooks, and all ends well for her and the acrobat.

"Sarah Bernhardt at Home"

The Photoplay Releasing Company, of Chicago, Secures the American and Canadian Rights to This Two-Reel Feature.

THE Photoplay Releasing Company, having acquired the rights for the United States and Canada for "Sarah Bernhardt at Home," on receipt of the negative from France, entered an order for a large number of positive prints in order to meet the big demand expected. The film is in two reels and depicts the world's greatest actress in her home life.

The Divine Sarah is first depicted leaving shipboard at Belle Isle, Brittany, and when the yawls, which carry her entourage and her luggage, approach shallow water, she is seen lifted up in the arms of a stalwart midshipman, who wades ashore with her.

The picture was taken two months prior to the amputation of her limb, and even then her halting walk gives outward and visible evidence of the impending ordeal which followed on the surgeon's table.

The aged histrionic marvel of the world then goes through a "course of sprouts" for the camera man which is both interesting and dramatic. She is seen as hostess in her castle, serving the cup which cheers, and making a round of her landed possessions, entertaining the peasantry and ministering to their wants.

She is next seen engaged in a game of tennis; then climbing from rock to rock to escape the incoming tide; then at a fete given in her honor, and then in her library of 6,000 volumes. Next we see her in the floral jungles which abound on Belle Isle, gathering—with her donkey cart as a floral basket—the exotics which there abound, and afterwards watch her as she pays attention to her lobster beds, hauling in the pots with all the ardor and assiduity of one who depends upon this particular calling for a livelihood.

Finally, the great actress is pictured in her den overlooking the sea. There she entertains lavishly and showers adorations and adulations upon her pets. Altogether the pictures show Bernhardt as she really is, in the flesh. Her charities are brought out in bold relief.

The Photoplay Releasing Company is disposing of state and territorial rights very fast, it is said. It is planned to release the picture just prior to the Bernhardt opening at the New Amsterdam Theater, New York City, on September 18. From this playhouse, in the Metropolis, the actress will make a triumphant tour to the Pacific Coast. It will be her final tour. The filmed Bernhardt, at motion picture prices, will follow the Bernhardt in the flesh (at $5.00 per seat) wherever she appears on her American and Canadian tours.

Prize for Hearst-Selig

Gets Bronze Memorial from Exposition's Official Board—Highest Award for Animated Newspaper.

TWENTY thousand people were present in the Court of the Universe at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco on July 15, when the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial was presented with a bronze memorial by Director Frank L. Brown representing the Exposition's official board. This is the highest award to be presented an animated newspaper.

The memorial was presented to the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial because of its educational influence and its stimulus to investigation, research and the general diffusion of knowledge.

According to the directors of the great Panama-Pacific Exposition, the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial has established itself as a new and vital factor in the educative forces of the modern civilized community. The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial has been officially recognized as being first in war, first in peace, and first in popularity. Scenes of the honor paid the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial will appear in a forthcoming edition of the Pictorial.

The presentation of the honor to the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial in the Court of the Universe at the 'Frisco Exposition is just one incident of the great reception accorded the Selig Exposition Flyer all along the Pacific Coast and at the two great Expositions. The honor conferred upon the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial is unprecedented in the annals of the motion picture art.

Selig Day was observed at the Panama Exposition at San Francisco on July 15 and the guests aboard the special train were accorded every honor. The work of Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company for the educational uplift of the motion picture was universally recognized in the series of cordial receptions accorded guests of the Flyer bearing the Selig name.

Edward A. McManus, general manager of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, in accepting the bronze memorial on behalf of the Selig Company, said in part: "The one striking new feature of modern life is the wider and wider diffusion of knowledge. The press has been heretofore the great instrument of this beneficent work. With the supreme inventive genius of modern men the press has been supplemented by the motion picture film, which not only gives the same wide presentation to the subject, but which visualizes it in presenting it pictorially, and which has established itself as a new and modern educative force in the community.

"The organization of the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial is founded upon a vision of its endless stimulating possibilities for the future and an analysis of the great social forces involved in this presentation every Monday and Thursday of the world's news to the multitudes. For the hour, this great Exposition is the focus and the center of the world's aspiration. One of the great agencies in bringing the World to the Exposition, and in taking the Exposition to the World, is the motion picture film winging its swift messages of light to the most remote communities and to the alien peoples across the seas.

"The Hearst-Selig News Pictorial incorporates those business requirements of system, alertness, energy and enterprise, which have gone into the building of modern newspapers. The daily results of this activity parallels in a way the daily gathering of the news of the printed page from the four corners of the earth. It is with this in view that we feel that an agency of such wide scope, of such educational value, and of such potent possibilities in the spread of knowledge fully merits the honor which you have conferred upon it."

The combination of Frank Crane as director and Robert Warwick as star has worked out splendidly. They are now engaged in making the Brady feature "The Stolen Voice," which is largely based on several episodes in Mr. Warwick's personal life.

"TANGLED PATHS" (Majestic).

Sam De Grasse is featured and Francelia Billington, Alfred Paget, Kate Toncray and Ora Carew are prominent in his support in the two-reel Majestic feature produced by Director W. C. Cabanne, "Tangled Paths."

An unusual use of gypsies is made in "Tangled Paths." Two lovers have been separated and a gypsy who is in love with the man tells the fortune of each. She is self-sacrificing and wishes to bring them together, knowing that the man can never love her. She is in an exceptional position for a fortune-teller for she is able to make good her prophecies. The scenes in which the gypsy, played by Ora Carew, archly draws together Nell Summers (Francelia Billington) and Ben Rand (Sam De Grasse) are exquisite in their values as photoplay products.

The lovers have not come to the end of their difficulties without many adventures. Ben Rand (Sam De Grasse) and Jack Doe (Alfred Paget) are both in love with Nell Summers (Francelia Billington). The girl, however, rejects Doe and accepts Rand. Rand is thereupon seized with an ambition to make money. He decides to go to Western goldfields. He induces Jack, his chum, to go with him. After many days of prospecting in the mountains they strike gold. Ben starts back for the county seat to register his claim. Jack follows and shoots him in the back. Jack then registers the claim as his own.

Ben, however, is not dead, and is heard moaning by a gypsy encampment. A gypsy girl (Ora Carew) nurses him back to health and strength. When he is completely himself Ben decides to return to his home. He gets to the railroad station, buys a newspaper and discovers a notice of the engagement of Nell to Jack. He gives his ticket to a tramp and returns to the gypsies.

Scenes at a beach resort to which the gypsies travel, and in which the two lovers are brought together, follow.

KALEM'S "MIDNIGHT AT MAXIM'S" SCORES A SUCCESS.

Reports from all over the country, without exception, chronicle big business with this four reel picture. One from the Coza Theater, Shelbyville, Indiana, received July 17, is typical of the letters flowing in to Kalem's office:

> "On Tuesday July 13th, we showed your superior film, 'Midnight At Maxim's.' Everyone joined with us in thinking it the best ever. On Wednesday evening one of the local papers printed of their own accord the enclosed clipping.
> Wishing you success,
> (Signed) George J. Rapp, > Manager Coza Theater."

"The films shown at the Coza picturing Maxim's at Midnight were a revelation as to modern photography. So far as faces, motion, everything but flesh and blood was concerned, the show was a triumph. Many of the dances were so sharp and well defined that they were really as entertaining as if the actors were there in person. The side scenes at the tables added to the interest. It can be said for Mr. Rapp, owner of the Coza, that the music for each of the dances was the same music in tune as that used by the dancers at Maxim's. It was a great motion picture show, demonstrating that Shelbyville is getting the best films produced."

"HER MOTHER'S OATH."

Unusual Story Told in This One-Reel Biograph Re-Issue, Directed by D. W. Griffith.

IF THE re-issuing of this subject accomplishes no other purpose than to illustrate the difference in the stories that were produced a few years ago in one reel and those produced to-day, then this re-issue is worth while.

The story is indeed an interesting one. It has for a theme a mother who has reared her daughter under very rigid teachings, her only associates being at school and church. An actor, traveling with a medicine show, strikes up an acquaintance with her, but is promptly ordered to keep away. At church Sunday morning, the mother sees him pass a note to her daughter, reports him to the minister and he is publicly denounced. On their return home, the mother forces the girl to repeat a relentless prayer after her, and a few days later she elopes with the actor. The minister, having received a letter from the girl, attempts to reconcile the mother and daughter, and in a frantic refusal to hear the minister's story she drops a kerosene lamp and the explosion renders her totally blind. The prayer has been answered. Some time later, by accident, the mother almost falls into a well, and is in tent on purposely ending her life when the daughter and her husband arrive.

It is a strong story, and the acting of Jenny Lee, whose work as the colored mammy in "The Birth of a Nation" attracted considerable attention, as the mother was exceptionally well done. Dorothy Gish as the girl, Henry Walthall as the actor and Charles H. Mailes as the minister, are also worthy of special mention. Robert Harron, Jack Dillon and Mae Marsh have minor parts. The direction is excellent and the photography is of the usual Biograph standard. As a whole, this picture will be appreciated by even the most critical audiences.

STANDARD PROGRAM FOR H. M. LANDE.

Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia territory for the Standard Program has just been acquired by the well known Pittsburgh exchange owner H. A. Lande. A pioneer in motion picture affairs, Mr. Lande has made an enviable reputation as an expert and successful student of film conditions. By nature a hustler, he has always been quick to take advantage of changing conditions and is a firm believer in progressive methods.

Mr. Lande was associated with Albert and H. M. Warner for several years in the exchange business in Pittsburgh. Three thriving exchanges, all in Pittsburgh, are the outcome of their live methods. One is now owned by the General Film Co., one by the Mutual Film Corporation and the third is under the direct proprietorship of Mr. Lande and will again share in the activities of Albert and H. M. Warner who are prominent in the affairs of the Standard Program.

Comstock's First Production

"Evidence," Produced by Edwin August, to Be the First Offering of New Corporation.

"EVIDENCE," the last season's Shubert production at the Lyric theater which is now being produced as a motion picture drama under the direction of Edwin August for the F. Ray Comstock Film Corporation, promises to be one of the most artistic of recent photoplays of a more or less elaborate character. Presenting as it does, life among the upper class in England, "Evidence" requires a careful and artistic handling, which Mr. August gives in his usual successful way. While most of the picture play has been photographed at Flushing, a number of the scenes are laid in exceptionally beautiful spots where the waters of the Sound and its white winged boats may form a background.

For the cast of the photodrama, Mr. August has chosen two of the players who appeared in the original production, Miss Haidee Wright, a well known English actress, who played the "Duchess of Gillingham" at the Lyric and repeats it for the screen, and Lionel Pape, who will appear in the role of "Stavely" in the picture version. Lillian Tucker, of "Nobody Home," now playing at the Maxime Elliott Theater, will act the "Lady Una," starring with Mr. August, who plays "Lushington." Richard Buhler, best known for his classical roles, such as "Ben Hur," will appear as the "Lord Cyril Wimbourne." Richard Temple, remembered for his work in Broadway musical comedy, will interpret "Captain Pollock," Miss Florence Hackett, the former Lubin star, will appear as "Mrs. Ebengham," and little Maurice Stewart will play the part of "Bing," the son of Lord Wimbourne and Lady Una.

"Evidence" is full of tensely dramatic situations and is sure to make a photodrama of powerful interest. It will be released through the World Film Corporation.

COMPLIMENTS FOR "DIAMOND SPECIALS."

After playing the three reel Diamond Special "Pals in Blue" to capacity houses for several days, General Manager Rubens of the Rubens' Theaters, a string of houses operating throughout Southern Illinois and adjacent states, wrote the following complimentary letter to the Selig Polyscope Company:

"We wish to compliment your company on the recent Tom Mix release 'Pals in Blue.' We consider this picture one of the best three reel productions that have been played in our houses during the past two years. It is one of those rare pictures which contains interesting features of everyday life, good comedy and thrilling situations. While hundreds of film men believe that the day of the Western Drama is over, we are convinced that a photoplay of this class will always be in demand and be appreciated by any class audience."

Mr. Rubens is one of the many exhibitors who realizes the value of the three-reel Selig Diamond Specials and of the Tom Mix plays. Everyone of these are real money-getters and are sure to make the audience come back to see more of the same variety when the Selig trade-mark is again displayed.

ESSANAY COMEDY ON V-L-S-E LIST.

Essanay's next feature release through the V-L-S-E will be "A Bunch of Keys," the comedy by Charles Hoyt, which made such a hit on the speaking stage several years ago. Outside of "The Slim Princess," George Ade's comedy-drama, this is the first play that could be classed as purely comedy, that has been released by Essanay through this service.

Essanay has spared no expense to make this a successful comedy. Several comedians were engaged specially to take part in it. John Slavin, June Keith and William Burress, the well known comic opera stars of the legitimate stage, took the leading parts. The entire company was taken through the rural districts of Michigan, to get the rural atmosphere required for the comedy.

The comedy proved to be unusually adaptable for the photoplay work and critics who have seen the picture declare that it is even better than the stage production. Of course many variations were necessarily resorted to, as Hoyt was fond of the play on words. But as a whole the comedy carries out Hoyt's plot closely. This is released Aug. 16.

"MASHERS AND SPLASHERS" (Wizard).

In "Mashers and Splashers," a clever one reel "Wizard" comedy made by Louis Burstein, "Bobbie" Burns and "Walt" Stull for the World Film Corporation, Burns and Stull, the two comedians who interpret the roles of hen pecked husbands in a series of "Pokes and Jabbs" comedies display great ingenuity as laugh makers in the guise of expert swimmers. The scene for the comedy is laid in the surf bathing pool in Palisades Park, where "Pokes and Jabbs" find themselves surrounded by a bevy of pretty girls. When their wives discover that the Rest Resort to which they have gone to recuperate from overwork in town, which, by the way, is named "Loopsedasilap," is only "Palisades Pool" spelled backwards, they hasten to the spot where their two husbands are disporting in the surf, and exercise their wifely authority in the proper manner. The two comedians are assisted by Miss Helen Von Huben, Miss Pearl Shepherd, Miss Ethel Burton and Miss Laurie Mackin, of the regular company, and a group of expert diving girls.

"COUNTRY BLOOD" (Lubin).

"Country Blood" is a Lubin comedy drama written by Lawrence McCloskey, produced by Arthur V. Johnson, and with a cast headed by Mr. Johnson and including Lottie Briscoe, Eleanor Blanchard, Bernard Siegel, Howard M. Mitchell and Tommy West. It is a bucolic love story straying from the country village to the big city, where both the country maiden and the country man fail to find the satisfaction they crave, and from which they return to their village home to find happiness ever after. The play is exceedingly well acted and has a number of strong scenes, especially one between Lottie Briscoe, the country maiden, and Eleanor Blanchard, the society matron. Arthur V. Johnson plays the part of the country lover who seeks balm in Gilead playing the harmonica and driving a hack. Taken all in all, the picture is most interesting, most human, and of course has that peculiar appeal which stirs the heart-strings of the average audience.

"FATE TAKES A HAND" (Reliance).

There is a very effective and unusual bit of photography in the two-reel Reliance feature "Fate Takes a Hand." Jim Brant, a crook, played by Francis J. MacDonald, determines to kill the district attorney. He hides in a building opposite the official's office with a revolver equipped with a Maxim silencer. The district attorney enters his own office and throws his hat and coat upon a chair. A light is behind the hat by chance. So a silhouette of the hat and a part of the coat appear on the drawn window shade. Brant fires at the image on the shade.

Scene from "Fate Takes a Hand" (Reliance).

The district attorney has been called to the telephone by his wife. It happens that Broadway Maxine, played by Adoni Foireri, the confederate of Brant, has been called to the district attorney's office. She is ready to betray Brant, but the bullet intended for the district attorney kills her.

By means of the cut-back, the action in both the apartment in which Brandt is hiding and in the district attorney's office is clearly shown. Also the mistake which Brant makes, owing to the silhouette on the shade, is presented in a way possible by no other artistic means.

The main theme of "Fate Takes a Hand" is the continual thwarting of Brant's desire to reform by Maxine. Brant tries times after time to return to an honest life, but Maxine, who has a love for finery, is able to drag him down again.

W. E. Lawrence is the district attorney. Wilbur Higby, the Reliance-Majestic character actor, is Brant's father, and Eleanor Washington has the part of a woman detective. "Fate Takes a Hand" was made under the direction of F. J. Grandon.

FIRE IN THE FEUD PLAY.

World Film's current release, Wm. A. Brady's photoplay "The Cub," is remarkable for the savagery of much of its action. The Kentucky feudists shot each other on sight—as the Land Leaguers in Ireland did a generation ago—and the photoplay shows emphatically, as accredited history proves to have been the case, that they would not even stop at burning down a house in order to get an enemy who happens to have sought refuge.

When making part of the picture at Fort Lee, N. J., Director

House Wrecked for a Scene in "The Cub."

Tourneur found himself unable to burn down the particular house here shown; so he arranged to have it blown up in order to reveal the effects of a fire.

Surrounded by "feudists," Mr. Tourneur has on his right John Hines, who played the cub reporter, and on his left Miss Martha Hedman the star.

"SILVER THREADS AMONG THE GOLD" GOING BIG.

The K & R Company's six-reel photoplay, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," is breaking all records on the Poli Circuit. Richard J. Jose appears in person with the picture. Last week in Springfield, Mass., people were turned away unable to gain admittance to the theater. The same state of affairs happened in New Haven, Conn., and Worcester, Mass. Al Cross reports big returns from Western Pennsylvania and Pittsburgh, and the Exclusive Features, Inc. of Greater New York show heavy bookings.

INCE DIRECTS FOUR FEATURES AT ONCE.

Thomas H. Ince, production chief of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is at present engaged in supervising the screening of four new multiple-reel features. They are "The Conqueror," starring Willard Mack; "Matrimony," with Julia Dean in leading role; "The Last Act," featuring Bessie Barriscale, and "Redeemed from Bondage," starring Forrest Winant.

"The Conqueror" is a powerful financial drama in which Willard Mack plays the part of the "wolf of finance." In "Matrimony," featuring Julia Dean, the author has furnished this little star with numerous opportunities of demonstrating her many dramatic qualities.

"The Last Act" is a massive production of stage life, depicting a girl's rise to fame and fortune over seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

"Redeemed from Bondage" is based on a cleverly woven detective story. Forrest Winant is seen in a unique role.

BIG JIM'S HEART (Reliance).

Unique situations crowd one upon another in "Big Jim's Heart," a Majestic two-part westerner, screened under the direction of John B. O'Brien and scheduled for release Aug. 8. The cast of "The Outcast" was headed by Mae Marsh with such stellar screen players as Robert Harron, Ralph Lewis, Mary Alden, Jack Conway and Spottiswoode Aitken, supporting her. Lillian Gish, Jack Conway and Spottiswoode Aitken had the principal parts in "Captain Macklin," screened from Richard Harding Davis' stirring novel, while Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Spottiswoode Aitken and Elmo Lincoln comprised the chief players in "Her Shattered Idol."

Just before beginning work on "Big Jim's Heart," Director O'Brien completed the filmization of "Souls Triumphant," a four-part feature, abounding in human interest and heart beats, in which Lillian Gish is the featured player. Wilfred Lucas, Louise Hamilton and Spottiswoode Aitken are seen in her support.

PAULINE FREDERICK IN "SOLD."

Pauline Frederick, the famous stage favorite, who won a transcendent triumph in her initial screen characterization as Donna Roma in the Famous Players Film Company's superb production, "The Eternal City," and who, as a result of her sensational success, was induced by the Famous Players to devote her exclusive film services to that company, returns to the screen in a five-part adaptation of the celebrated emotional drama, "Sold."

Containing all the elements for vigorous emotional portrayal, "Sold," the great drama of woman's devotion, adapted from the Scene from "Sold" (Famous Players).

Russian of George Erastov, provides Miss Frederick with a role as fully adapted to her finely developed dramatic talents as was that of Donna Roma in her first engagement before the camera. In "Sold," Miss Frederick portrays the sacrificing young wife of a struggling artist who refuses to commercialize his art for his financial betterment. Through a series of powerful climaxes, the story reaches the point where the wife arranges to pose for her husband's successful rival in a sensational painting, in order to save him from the destitution which threatens him. The husband, hearing of her act, comes to the studio of the other artist, and in a mad fury shoots at the painting of his rival, striking his wife, who is hiding behind the easel.

Miss Frederick, who proved conclusively in her portrayal of Donna Roma that she is the screen's greatest dramatic actress, will undoubtedly strengthen this position through her powerful rendition of this role. Miss Frederick's methods of interpreting tense emotion are unsurpassable. She delineates all the broken-heartedness and despair of the crushed wife with appealing pantomime.

WERBA & LEUSCHER TO MAKE FEATURE FILMS.

The latest acquisition to the list of Broadway producers to present a series of high-class motion pictures is Werba and Luescher, who introduced D'Annunzio's masterwork, "Cabiria," to American audiences and who concluded arrangements yesterday to produce and release one de luxe feature each month beginning in August. This firm's intention is to present all-star casts with plays and productions of unusual value in a distinctive manner. All of their productions will be released exclusively through the World Film Corporation.

The director-general of the studios will be Lawrence Marston, who is considered one of the most expert picture directors in America, and, who, previous to directing motion picture productions, was known to the regular theater for such pretentious dramatic sensations as "Ben Hur," "The Prince of India," "Wildfire," "Sins of Society," "The Round Up," "Baby Mine," "Thais," etc., all of which he originally produced on Broadway for Klaw & Erlanger, and other leading managers.

"EYES THAT SEE NOT" (Essanay).

A pleasing photoplay and a wholesome comedy. Three reels of light-hearted love making with a pinch of simple and novel plot. The combination of comedy and drama is most harmonious. It is, principally, a story of a son raised to maturity in wealth who looks out upon the world through a haze of indolence. That is its serious "punch"—his earnest attempts to become a practical, hard-hearted business man, private secretary to the father of the girl he loves. He tries hard to become a whirlwind business man, but love interferes. And that is where the fun starts. He is sent by his employer to the brokers with orders to sell three thousand shares of stock, quickly. He meets the business man's daughter and the stock exchange closes. But it turns out that his employer saves $40,000 by not selling. And besides, the employer is in love too. His fiance, a widow, induces him to keep their engagement quiet until his daughter is provided for, and the youth readily promises to do that when the four of them meet in the office and confessions are made. This is released Aug. 7.

"THE DEACON'S WHISKERS" (Komic).

"The Deacon's Whiskers," featuring Fay Tincher, is another one of those rapid fire productions of Edward "Komic" Dillon and his comedians. The deacon is Max Davidson. He objects strenuously to the marriage of his daughter Fay to Edward (played by Edward "Komic" Dillon in person). The deacon is quite set upon having his daughter marry Steve (Chester Withey). However, the deacon's opposition leads to his being pinned by the whiskers to the door of a bathing pavilion. While he is in this humiliating position and is explaining to his wife just how it occurred, Edward and Fay have found a clergyman (Frank Darien). The clergyman at first cannot see his way to marry Fay and Edward, but Edward proves extremely resourceful. He captures the clergyman and with Fay paddles out to sea on a raft.

Scene from "The Deacon's Whiskers" (Komic).

As the clergyman cannot swim the threat to throw him overboard prevails upon him to perform the marriage ceremony. By the time the deacon is released and Fay and Edward have paddled the raft back to shore they are joined together so that only a divorce court can come between them.

"SEALED VALLEY" (Metro).

The Metro Pictures Corporation, which is also a producing company for its own Program, and has given certain individuality in name to its productions by calling them Metro DeLuxe Pictures, will release its first picture on August 2nd. Dorothy Donnelly, who is about as well known throughout the country as any other woman star, will be presented in "Sealed Valley," a much elaborated story of the book of the same name, by Hulbert Footner, which has had much vogue among readers of popular fiction.

Most of the scenes in this production will show exteriors, and beautful ones they will be, as the heroine is an Indian girl who lives in the open country, and it is well to say that Indian life, cowboys at gunplay and other melodramatic screams will have no part in this production.

The production has been directed by Lawrence B. McGill with W. C. Thompson at the camera. The stills of this photoplay are really beautiful, as wooded country and running streams with much action of dramatic purpose taking place in the open and in the water, abound to a degree that make for artistic and genuinely picturesque atmosphere.

The entire company was taken to Tinsbury, Canada, for most of the exteriors. For some special atmosphere that has been introduced, the company travelled as far south as Rome, Georgia, the interiors being taken at the Dyreda-Metro studio in New York.

"SAVED BY A SCENT" (Universal).

Right through a brick wall on a motorcycle! Max Asher does it in "Saved by a Scent," a Powers (Universal) comedy released August 5, while in pursuit of a large, evil smelling chunk of limburger cheese which he has reason to suspect is hiding just outside his mansion waiting to attack him at night.

Max takes his motorcycle to bed with him every night, as it is a new machine and he values it very highly. Even the veriest novice in the intricate science of mechanics can see that Max's car is a lollapaloosa. It has reversible gear which permits him to go backward or forward while a special device patented by Gale Henry, the inventor, makes it possible for Max to turn corners with the greatest ease.

When the national association of mechanical engineers held their convention recently in Universal City one of the members of the association bet Asher that he wouldn't dare to go through the brick wall, and that if he did attempt to do so his machine would be wrecked. Max took up the bet, guaranteed in advance the integrity of his machine after the collision and went ahead with the stunt.

Backing up in the set fifty feet Max got a flying start and two seconds later smashed head on into the wall. A cartload of bricks tumbled down on him and badly bruised his legs, but Max won his bet and contributed to making a screamingly funny film. The Saxofordblitzen stood the strain well and now Max says he is going out and knock over a Santa Fe engine.

"HAZARDS OF HELEN" SERIES.

Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series," is an example of what quality will do for a series. Motion picture series have come and gone since this form of motion picture story was introduced some years ago. Each ran its course and, with the issuance of the final episode, sank into oblivion.

The "Hazards of Helen Railroad Series," however, like Tennyson's brook, seems likely to run on forever. Although the first episode was released in November 1914, and the succeeding episodes released in weekly intervals, it is actually increasing in popularity.

As an instance of what the average exhibitor thinks of this Kalem railroad series, here is a letter which was written by Thomas M. Thatcher, of the Gem Theater, Somerset, Kentucky. As an exhibitor of fifteen years' experience, Mr. Thatcher is well qualified to pass upon the merits of a production. He wrote:

"Please permit me to add a testimonial to the excellence of the wonderful series you are giving to the public in the 'Hazards of Helen Railroad Series.' There has never been anything like them for genuine thrills and hairbreadth escapes. My patrons wait with keenest anticipation for the next episodes.

"Aside from Miss Holmes' daring, these films possess an educational value to the thousands of people who are unacquainted with the thrills of modern railroading. For the past fifteen years I have exhibited almost every class of picture that has been filmed, but your railroad series possesses a fascination for me that is simply indescribable."

According to Kalem, the same mail brought a letter from William Hilkemeier, of the Jefferson Photo Show Company, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Hilkemeier, who is just as enthusiastic as the Kentucky exhibitor, wrote:

"I want to congratulate you on the 'Hazards of Helen Railroad Series.' I think they have any so-called feature serial ever made, beaten a mile. We're not forced to pay a sandbag price on it either. I honestly believe the series could last for years. The episodes are short, sweet—and make the patrons come back for more."

All of which would prove that if a series possesses quality, it can run indefinitely. At any rate, this seems to be the experience of the Kalem series.

HARMON MACGREGOR IN "TIDES OF TIME."

"What is this all about" ask the many actors who are participating in the latest drama of Knickerbocker Star Features. Many dozen people are taking part in "The Tides of Time" and in reply to the queries of the inquisitive artists they are told it is about everything. In fact the "Tides of Time" gives us a peep into life before birth, when two souls are launched on the river of life, and it shows us two souls returning after eighty years of life, with a suggestion of heaven and a picture of hell. Harmon MacGregor is proving himself equal to a most difficult role in which he shows the final degradation of selfishness and greed and makes a strong hit in his fight with the fires of hell. Mary Nash, the charming Broadway favorite leads in the drama in a character which shows the inner rewards of character and truth whether in poverty or wealth.

A "THRILL" IN UNIVERSAL SUBJECT.

One perfectly good Overland car, value $1,500, was destroyed by the Universal in as realistic an automobile-train wreck as ever was staged by a motion picture company, during the production of Hobart Bosworths five-reel film version of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich."

Santa Fe engine 481 with a train of five coaches is seen tearing along a level stretch of right-of-way at sixty miles an hour. Approaching the tracks at an acute angle is a motor road. Along this road, according to the plot of the story, comes Muriel Evers (Maude George) and Jim Ellis (William Clark) in a six-cylinder car.

Mrs. Evers is trying to escape from her husband with the latest of the many paramours she has led to their ruin. Fearing that he will be delayed by the train, Ellis puts on top speed but fails to clear the tracks in time. Here follows a really sensational scene.

The automobile is lifted high in the air and smashed into a tangled mass of steel and wood. This one scene alone in "A Little Brother of the Rich" will lift photo fans right out of their seats in their efforts to stop that wreck.

"THE SCARLET LADY." (Selig.)

"The Scarlet Lady" released Thursday, August 5th, produced by George Nichols, from the story written by Will M. Hougn, features Anna Luther, Vivian Reed, Jean Pallette, Al Filson and others.

Doris Gray and Jim Courtney plight their troth during a ball. Howard Shaw, Jim's rival for the love of Doris, vows revenge. Judge Malone, a friend of the Graves, invites Doris and her mother to attend a session of the night court. There they meet Ethel Hayes, "The Scarlet Lady," whose story appeals to the sympathies of Judge Malone and the Grays and Ethel is taken by Doris Gray into her home. Ethel Hayes is introduced to society as a friend from abroad. She becomes a society favorite and Jim Courtney falls in love with her. She also loves Jim, but spurns him because of Doris.

Howard Shaw, through a plot, entices Ethel aboard Jim Courtney's yacht, where she is confronted by Doris and her mother. Jim Courtney is suddenly stricken with smallpox. Doris resolves to care for him, but her courage weakens. Then it is that Ethel Hayes nurses Jim back to health. Weeks later when Jim is convalescent, he receives a note from Doris saying that she rejoices in his recovery; that their engagment was a mistake and that she hopes to hear of his marriage to Ethel. Jim then tells Ethel that he has sent for a minister and wants her to marry him at once. Beautiful scenic backgrounds add to the beauty of this Diamond Special, in three reels.

HE'S IN AGAIN" (MinA).

An outstanding point in "He's In Again," a comedy in one reel to be released July 29 by MinA Films, on the General Film Program, is the great number of unusual comedy bits obtained by Director Milton H. Fahrney. For instance one of the characters, Sergeant Kelly, to escape detection by a superior officer while feasting in the kitchen presided over by Betty, secretes himself in a refrigerator. Throughout the remaining scenes flashes show Sergeant Kelly seated on a block of ice, each time nearer advanced to the freezing point than before. The effect of a frozen body, as conceived by Mr. Fahrney, is striking and extremely funny and is sure to cause many laughs.

Scene from "He's In Again" (MinA).

With this and other such scenes, "He's In Again" develops at the finish into a whirlwind of situations causing a riot of fun.

The comedy is excellently played by George Ovey, Louis Fitzroy, Jefferson Osborne, Arthur Mund, Joe Rickson, Goldie Colwell and Janet Sully.

FEDERAL FILMS ON ASSOCIATED PROGRAM.

The Federal Film Company have arranged to release one comedy a week on the Associated program, beginning August 16. The franchise was delivered to the Federals on Wednesday, and all arrangements were completed. The first release will be "Nothing But Love," followed by "The Tailor's Romance," "Love and Installments," and "His Jealous Wife."

INA CLAIRE IN "THE PUPPET CROWN" (Lasky).

Ina Claire makes her second appearance under the management of the Lasky Feature Play Company in a very elaborate production of Harold MacGrath's famous romance, "The Puppet Crown," with Carlyle Blackwell as the hero of the tale. It will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on July 29. Ina Claire's first picture, "The Wild Goose Chase," will be remembered as a particularly charming American love story.

Scene from "The Puppet Crown" (Lasky).

"The Puppet Crown" gives her a still more remarkable opportunity, and also serves to introduce as a Lasky artist Mr. Carlyle Blackwell, one of the most famous of photodramatic stars.

In addition to Miss Claire and Carlyle Blackwell, the cast of "The Puppet Crown" includes Cleo Ridgley, Christian Lynton, Horace Carpenter, John Abraham, George Gebhardt, Tom Forman and Marjorie Daw.

"BUSINESS RIVALS" (Essanay).

This is another of the charming "adventures of Dominica," the photoplays taken from the stories of Henry C. Rowland. Dominica, the girl thief, ever ready for an adventure, disguises herself in boy's garb as a street singer and offers her services in a home where a great reception is being given. Being an excellent musician her services are accepted. Braga, her accomplice, gains access to the house through making love to a maid. They plan to steal the valuable jewels locked in the safe while the guests are making merry. But Le Grand, an ex-police official and crook, foils their plot. He himself then tries to steal the gems from the man who is taking the jewels to a safety deposit vault. When the man puts up a game fight Dominica, ever a true "sport," goes to his aid, and while she is badly injured, saves the jewels. Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig portray the leading parts in this two-act play in their characteristically finished manner.

METRO DAY AT THE FRISCO CONVENTION.

Metro Moving Picture Day at the San Francisco convention, so designated by the exposition officials, with the cooperation of the league, was, as anticipated, the big event of the five days of the convocation of moving picture interests, and it was a huge success. Nothing so far, in the history of the moving picture industry achieved by a single firm, can approach in distinction the award of place of honor that was bestowed upon the Metro Pictures Corporation on this occasion.

All of San Francisco was emblazoned with billing, and placards announcing Thursday, July 15, as Metro Day were spread broadcast even to quarter sheet cards being placed in street cars. All newspapers carried advertisements featuring the day and what Metro was going to do for spectators and exhibitors alike. The result was that 70,000 people were drawn to the grounds and to the Tower of Jewels at the Court of the Universe where the ceremonies took place.

The Metro party, lead by Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, two of Metro's stars appearing exclusively in Quality Pictures productions, were met at the entrance to the exposition grounds. It seemed that 40,000 of the 70,000 spectators who later surrounded the Tower of Jewels and its approaches were all there to welcome them, so dense was the crowd. When the procession reached the Tower, the president of the exposition presented to the Metro officials present, a handsome bronze medal, in honor of the part Metro has taken. Mr. Bushman and Miss Snow presented the silent drama which was staged at the Tower. In the evening an official dinner was given to Mr. Bushman, Miss Snow and the representatives of Metro at Old Faithful Inn, where Bushman was proclaimed the greatest of all picture stars. The exposition officials present congratulated Metro for its progress and determination.

"ALIEN" RELEASED FOR EXHIBITION.

After five big weeks at the Astor theater, New York, it has now been released in the territories covered by the list of Paramount Exchanges given below, and is playing with great success at the largest and most important theaters throughout the country, where its powerful appeal is responsible for its ever growing popularity.

The exchanges through which "An Alien" may be booked are: Famous Players Film Co. of New England, 31 Beach street, Boston, Mass. and 19 Congress street, New Haven, Conn., Wm. L. Sherry Feature Film Co., 126 W. 46th street, New York, Famous Players Exchange, 71 West 23rd street, New York, and 1321 Vine street, Philadelphia, Pa., Famous Players Exchange, 2nd Nat. Bank Bldg., Washington, D. C., Famous Players Film Service, Inc., Paramount Pictures Bldg., Penn avenue at 12th street, Pittsburg, Pa., 37 S. Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill. and 532 Walnut street, Cincinnati, Ohio, Casino Feature Film Co., Dime Bank Bldg., Detroit, Mich., Kansas City Feature Film Co., Gayety Theater Bldg., 12th & Wyandotte streets, Kansas City, Mo., Famous Players Star Feature Film Service, Produce Exchange Bldg., 608 1st avenue, N., Minneapolis, Minn., Notable Feature Film Co., 133 E. 2nd South street, Salt Lake City, Utah, and 1749 Welton street, Denver, Colo., Progressive Motion Picture Co., 645 Pacific Bldg., San Francisco, Cal., Central Bldg., Seattle, Wash. and Marsh-Strong Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.

V-L-S-E FOR AUGUST.

For the month of August, the V-L-S-E program has ready for release, five features that are exceptionally well balanced in point of dramatic range and variety of subjects. There are three dramas, and two comedies, and a glance at these releases brings out a remarkable fact.

August is considered to be one of the poorest months in the year for feature film exhibitions, yet the V-L-S-E for this hot month, is offering what is probably the greatest bill in point of strength and magnitude that the Big Four has yet released. This strong bill should result in offsetting the usual decrease in business looked for during the hot spell. The summary of the V-L-S-E August releases is as follows:

August 2nd—Lubin—"The Climbers"—five reels with Gladys Hanson and George Soule Spencer

August 9th—Vitagraph—"The Chalice of Courage"—six reels with Myrtle Gonzalez and William Duncan.

August 16th—Essanay—"A Bunch of Keys"—Five reels with June Keith and Johnny Slavin.

August 23rd—Selig—"The House of a Thousand Candles"—six reels with Grace Darmond and Harry Mestayer.

August 30th—Lubin—"Tillie's Tomato Surprise"—five reels with Marie Dressler.

"THE GAME" (Thanhouser).

This story from the pen of Phil Lonergan, is a brilliant example of how much situation can be put into a single reel subject. There are not fifty feet in it during which the situation remains the same. Throughout it all the surprise is carried legitimately to the end, when the "crook" shows that he is a detective. Morris Foster plays the detective and covers himself with glory. Ethyle Cooke rises ably to a powerful climax and Helen Badgely does her baby work in good style. Ray Johnston plays a genteel crook convincingly.

CENSORS COMMEND "BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE."

The Los Angeles Board of Censors, after viewing "The Blindness of Virtue," pronounced it one of the best picture plays released, running far ahead of the ordinary releases and gave it their unqualified approval.

It is most unlikely that any censor board will find fault with this charming play, for, while dealing with the fundamental facts of physiology, a topic that has interested all of our better thinking people who have at heart the interests of the growing populace, it does so in a clear and forceful, yet delicate, manner. It illustrates the tremendous value of the motion picture to teach and lighten the burden of teaching, to the unsophisticated, the basic truths of life.

A Collection of Stars

The Majority of the Players in the Biograph Re-Issues Directed by D. W. Griffith, Are Stars or Directors To-day.

IN REVIEWING the Biograph subjects being released in the series of Biograph re-issues, it is interesting to note the rapid advance of the various players in the casts. Some who were playing just "bit" parts or acting as extras, are prominent players or directors to-day. To use the phrase "to-day they are extras, to-morrow they are stars," would be to illustrate their rapid rise.

Most of the prominent motion picture players of to-day, and some of the successful directors, can be seen in the casts of the Biograph Re-Issues; in fact, it seems, offhandedly, that all the prominent players and directors started with Biograph. Such players as Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Lionel Barrymore, Charles H. Mailes, Dorothy Gish, Claire McDowell, Harry Carey, Jenny Lee, W. Chrystie Miller, Edwin August, Eddie Dillon, Jack Dillon, W. C. Cabanne, Wilfred Lucas, Dorthy Barnard, Kate Bruce and other equally prominent players are included in the casts of these productions.

It is a pleasure to watch the manner in which the actors and actresses worked under the direction of D. W. Griffith. They were all stars, one equally as good as the other. In one picture they played leads, while in another they had small parts or acted as extras; but they all worked and worked hard.

With a director such as D. W. Griffith, a collection of stars such as he had at his disposal, and an organization such as the Biograph behind him, it may be a foregone conclusion that all the productions being released in the series of Biograph Re-Issues will be equal to the productions being produced at the present time.

STERLING'S NOVEL DISTRIBUTING METHOD.

The Sterling Camera & Film Company, in this issue, announce a rather novel and original method of distributing their productions which should attract the attention of every state-right exchangeman and film exploiter in the country. The first release, about August 15th, is a five-part New York detective story in which is featured Barney Gilmore and Miss Lillian Niederaur, two well-known stage stars, and a splendid company of experienced motion picture players, there being more than one hundred principals and extras in the production.

Standard Territory Going Fast

Contracts Closed in Every City Visited to Date by Al. Lichtman and H. M. Warner.

With the news that the Kriterion Film Exchange of Kansas City and St. Louis have secured the Standard Program for their territories, comes the announcement from the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., that Vice-President and General Manager Al. Lichtman and Secretary and Treasurer H. M. Warner of that company have closed contracts for every territory they have had time to visit in their sudden trip to the different exchange centers of the middle west.

The Boston Photoplay Company was quick to secure the regular weekly single and multiple releases of the Standard Program for New England, while Pittsburgh went to H. A. Lande, Philadelphia to Harry Schwalbe, Chicago to the General Feature Film Company of which William Hershberg is the moving spirit, Minneapolis to W. L. Merrill, and Cleveland, Cincinnati and Detroit to H. Charnas of the Standard Film Service Company.

NOVEL DEMONSTRATION BY SIMPLEX.

Of especial interest to exhibitors at the trade exposition in San Francisco was the demonstration of the Precision Machine Company, showing how the Simplex projector's shutter could be adjusted while the machine was in operation. The shutter was purposely put out of time before the film was started, and was quickly adjusted while the machine was in operation. This is the only moving picture machine which is equipped with this device.

The demonstration was accomplished in the small theater which was run in connection with the exposition salon, where a big Simplex was set up for showing the pictures to exhibitors. It was equipped with one of the latest Simplex motor-speed controllers and the automatic arc control, which is also a new device just placed upon the market.

PARAMOUNT FORECAST.

The releases of the Famous Players Film Company for the second year of the Paramount Programme's existence will include such masterpieces as "The Foundling," with Mary Pickford; "The Incorrigible Dukane," with John Barrymore; "The White Pearl," with Marie Doro; "The Fatal Card," with Hazel Dawn and John Mason; "Madam Butterfly," with Mary Pickford; "The Mummy and the Humming Bird," with Charles Cherry; "The Three Elks," with John Barrymore; "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," with Hazel Dawn; "The Prince and The Pauper," with Marguerite Clark; "Twisted Paths," with Mary Pickford;; "Poor Schmaltz," with Sam Bernard; "Zaza," with Pauline Frederick, and "Molly Make-Believe," with Marguerite Clark.

The Lasky Company will contribute Geraldine Farrar's production of "Carmen," in which the famous diva appears in the title role; "The Case of Becky," with Blanche Sweet; "Blackbirds," with Laura Hope Crews; "The Voice in the Fog," with Donald Brian; "The Cheat," with Blanche Sweet; "The Revelation," with Charlotte Walker, and "The Explorer," with Lou Tellegen.

From the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company will come "Peer Gynt," with Cyril Maude.

From the Bosworth Studio the great favorite, Dustin Farnum, in "Davy Crockett," and Elsie Janis in "'Twas Ever Thus."

These pictures are selected at random from the Paramount list and should indeed prove of interest not only to the general public, but to the exhibitors everywhere.

Notes of the Trade

CHESTER A. LYONS, cameraman who is in the past has been associated with the Dyreda Film Corporation has gone to Hollywood, California, with the National Film Corporation. Mr. Lyons dropped a line to the Moving Picture World from Chicago stating that they were already working on Norma Talmadge features en route.

Mme. Petrova is finishing her work with the Popular Plays and Players for their coming release on the Metro Program, featuring this famous dramatic and screen star in "The Vampire." Her role will show her in the character of a woman who has been deceived into a mock marriage and after being deserted, determines to avenge the wrong done her upon all men. The heart of the woman avenger relents when love enters again into her life.

John Cossar is one of Essanay's most versatile players. In the past month he has played the most contrasting parts, such as western ranch owner and Indian fighter, gentleman crook in an Eastern drama and mountaineer in a Tennessee picture.

Emmy Wehlen, the Viennese actress, who created so favorable an impression on her first visit to this country in Liebler and Company's production of "Marriage a la Carte," which ran an entire season at the New York Casino, is now a member of the happy family of Metro stars and she will appear under the banner of the B. A. Rolfe Producing Company in an original work from the pen of Frank Horan entitled, "When A Woman Loves."

CONGRATULATING BRANCH NO. 2

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TREASURER W. W. WATTS, Springfield, of Illinois State Branch No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A., is receiving many congratulations for the excellent work he and his associates did in having the Olson censorship bill defeated. Especially appreciative letters were received one day last week from the New York and St. Louis offices of the World Film Corporation.

MOLINE EXHIBITOR FAILS.

Harry Sodini, proprietor of the Family theater and airdome at Moline, has gone into bankruptcy. The liabilities are about $20,000, and it is said there are no assets above those exempted by law. Joseph Murphy has been appointed receiver. The Family, which is closed, has been operated at a loss for some time, Sodini says.

GOOD PROGRAMS FOR SPECIAL DAYS.

A noticeable feature of Illinois programs for Independence day was that the old policy of "give 'em anything," modeled after the street fair show, has vanished. Good features were the rule. The Majestic at Rushville showed Annette Kellerman in "Neptune's Daughter." "Atlantis" was the attraction at the A-Muse-U in Princeville. The Maywood theater at Maywood had "On the Fighting Line."

POPULARITY OF PICTURES.

That people are not "tired of motion pictures" is further shown by the number of Illinois towns that had open air shows, instead of fireworks. Capt. Hugh King of Quincy took his portable electric light plant and six reels of film to Lima at night. Another feature there was the filming of the events by the Mathes Film Company of Quincy. Pictures were also night attractions at Mason City, Evanston, Harvey and Edison Park.

ILLINOIS STATE NEWS.

Jack Milton and Thurlow Brewer of the Essanay Company at Chicago were recently at Bloomington and may take a producing company to that city for about two weeks.

The new La Petite theater at Kankakee was opened by W. H. Cadoret, proprietor, with the Vitagraph feature "The Sins of the Mother." The exterior is designed after a Greek temple. The interior is finished in old rose, pearl, gray and old ivory with mahogany woodwork. The equipment, which is completed in every sense of the word, includes a mirror screen and a $5,000 Wurlitzer organ. The house seats 533 persons.

Cunningham's picture and vaudeville shows have been playing week stands at Hull, Payson and other towns in the vicinity of Quincy.

Crystal Lake will not support two motion picture shows and F. E. Diffendafer, of Woodstock, has returned to that city and re-entered the cleaning and dyeing business. R. W. Gracey is again running a show at Crystal Lake.

The State Street Amusement Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are: Isador H. Herk, W. Irving Clark, B. H. Bisbee.

Peter McGrain has sold the Star theater at Waukegan to A. Polcyn and L. Hassberg of Joliet.

E. R. Rawlings, of Chicago, has leased the Orpheum theater on Chicago street in Freeport and re-opened it with "Evangeline" as the feature attraction. D. R. Riley of Freeport will be resident manager.

The firm of Yaeger & Burkett of Morrison, operating three photoplay houses, has been dissolved. Al Yaeger takes over the theater at Lyons, Ia., and Lawrence Burkett those in Morrison, Ill., and Mt. Carmel, Ill.

Do Local Pictures Pay?

Chippewa Falls Editorial Writer Says That Merchants Do Not Get Profitable Advertising in Special Local Films That Show Their Stores or Goods—These Films Are Not Always Financed by the Merchants.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest (Wisconsin) News Service.

IS the commercial motion picture taking money that went into the advertising columns of the local paper? The vogue of local films which, in many cases, are financed by assessing business men whose stores are exploited, has drawn few attacks from editors. However, the Herald at Chippewa Falls, is antagonistic to "the motion picture concerns to make money for the local business men," which it says, "are quite numerous."

"A solicitor has appeared here wanting to make moving pictures for the business men. He hands you out a lot of strong talk and is positive that he can increase your business. Just how he can do this by throwing a moving picture on the screen in a local playhouse, the said picture showing a combination of letters making the man and his business and a few other little frills, is hard to determine. He would show this picture at a night when your business is closed and by the next day the people who have seen have forgotten it."

Not all the men who make local films try to get the merchants to contribute and these are willingly supported by local papers, who aid in conducting contests to secure players. Such co-operation is now evident at Racine, where the Bijou theater and The Daily Times are seeking home talent for a two-reel film.

RACINE CENSORS ONLY "WILD-CAT" FILMS.

Pictures which have been passed by the National or the Chicago Board will not be censored under the purposed censorship ordinance at Racine. The measure is aimed at "wildcat" features.

The law gives the chief of police powers not authorized at present and any person who intends to exhibit a picture not passed by the boards referred to must file a written notice with the chief of police. That official may waive the right of waiting twenty-four hours before passing judgment and issuing a permit or he may waive the time stated in the ordinance on special occasions if he sees fit. In all cases where he believes the films should be witnessed by an official he may order it run off for his or any other offcial's inspection before it is exhibited publicly.

DIME OR JITNEY.

The small city managers in Wisconsin who stubbornly assert "You can't get more'n a nickel" are commended to an item from Berlin.

"How long ago it is that we considered anything by five cents as an exorbitant figure for moving picture performances? Here in Berlin we have gotten used to the ten cent price and we might as well prepare to accept even better things than that some time in the future, although as yet there is no thought of shoving up the price."

WISCONSIN BREVITIES.

The Lyric theater at Ft. Atkinson, now playing pictures, will open its dramatic season August 13.

Miss Alice Washburne appeared in person and with the Edison comedy "Martha's Rebellion" at the Grand theater in Wausau.

The Majestic at Milwaukee has returned to its policy of two separate features a week.

The Rex theater at Racine played a return date of "Tillie's Punctured Romance." It was played for five cents. The Rex recently admitted children free to a matiness if accompanied by parents.

Construction of the new Palace theater at Antigo has begun.

ARAB EXHIBITORS IN MICHIGAN

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

"A SIGN written on a blackboard in front of the Princess moving picture theatre, worded 'We have moved. The reason is our business,' tells a story which may have a different ending from what the writers of the sign intended," says the Albion Recorder.

"Snuggs and De Noylles, who advertised several weeks ago that they had purchased the theater from Burley Roberts, of Jackson, for the sum of $1,000, packed up the seats, piano and picture machine from the place late Sunday night, immediately after the evening performance, and a few hours afterward quietly absented themselves from the city. They stored the seats and piano in the Coliseum rink building and taking the picture machine with them, departed for parts unknown. It became known as soon as the news of their departure had been noised about that they left without the formality of paying several bills owed in this city, one which is said to be for rent for the theater.

"Many people had been induced to purchase tickets for the theater within the past few weeks to procure votes for friends who were attempting to win a contest put on by the management, the prize for which was to be theater itself. Whether the contestants are to take any action is unknown, but the fact is certain that an attempt will be made to bring the men to account.

"Attachment proceedings were started by Fred M. Norwood, one of the creditors, with the names of A. C. Hudnutt, August F. Berling and S. S. St. Amour and other creditors on the bond, and an effort will be made to sell the goods stored in the Coliseum and secure the money to settle the bills the departing managers left unpaid.

"Former Manager Roberts, in spite of an announcement some weeks ago that he still had an interest at the time the recent managers left the city, so that the story of the $1,000 sale is being discredited by many people.

"It is probable the two men are either in Detroit or in Jackson. Roberts, the erstwhile theater-owner, stated that they departed on an east-bound Michigan Central train early Monday morning.

LOCAL HISTORY ON SLIDES.

A novel show was given at both the Opera house and the Delft theater in Marquette at the recent celebration in that city. It was called "Marquette in Pioneer Days and Today." Slides showed the historic past and motion pictures the progressive little city of the present.

THEATER AND POWER PLANT.

There was no electric power in Rapid River when H. E. Pfeifer planned to build a motion picture theater. He went ahead with his plans and has practically completed a modern photoplay house and has installed a 25-horsepower engine to run an electric light plant, having secured a contract to light the streets of the town.

Chas. Ellison, formerly of the Grand theater, Newberry, Mich., has taken the management of the Colonial theater, Manistique, Mich.

The Chippewa Film Company is the style of a new organization in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Officers are: Fred D. Beardsley, president; George Cook, treasurer, and Kenneth R. Eddy, secretary. They expect to specialize in industrial and commercial films.

Fight Over a Film

Maquoketa, Iowa, Exhibitors Go to Law Over Picture of Chicago Auto Speedway Races—Electric and Pastime Theaters Book the Film for Same Day—Former Gets Offering by Writ of Replevin—Will Sue.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

A BATTLE over the films of the Chicago Auto Speedway races was carried into court at Maquoketa. George W. Christy, of the Electric theater, secured the picture from Weber & Sanders, of the Pastime theater, on a writ of replevin served by the sheriff. Christy claims to have contracted with H. A. Kyler, of Davenport, representative of the United Film Service, for the picture on June 24, while, at about the same time, it is claimed, Weber & Sanders secured the films for a theater which they operate at Lamotte, twenty miles from Maquoketa. The pictures were to be shown there July 3, but it is claimed, they were shown at Burt's Cave, near Maquoketa, instead. Under Christy's contract he was to show the pictures in Maquoketa, July 6, and after Kyler had been informed that the pictures were billed for July 6, at the other theater, he wired Christy to secure them from Weber & Sanders.

Christy retained Attorney Farr, and writ was secured and the pictures were turned over to him. He has instituted a suit for $25 against the management of the Pastime.

WILL REJUVENATE MARSHALLTOWN THEATER.

The Casino Theater company, composed principally of Des Moines men, has taken a ten-year lease on the new Orpheum theater at Marshalltown, and will operate as the Casino theater, an exclusive motion picture house. Bookings will be in conjunction with houses operated by the same company in Des Moines, Minneapolis and Omaha. The interior will be remodeled and redecorated. The stockholders are C. C. Taft, Joseph and Leo Muelhaupt and M. Frankell, of Des Moines, and H. A. Weisman, of Marshalltown.

OSKALOOSA LOCAL FILMS.

The Bullers-Dixon Photoplay company has been formed at Oskaloosa by William Bullers and Cecil Dixon to produce local pictures. The first local will be "The Mysterious What Is It?" featuring camera tricks.

GOSSIPY IOWA NOTES.

Roscoe Patch and Verne Charles have opened an airdome at Hartley.

M. V. Johnson, of Ft. Dodge, will be the manager of the Idle Hour theater at Griswold, which he and his brother, R. M. Johnson, also of Ft. Dodge, purchased from Boiler & Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Courtney, of Fredericksburg, has been contemplating opening a show at Frederika.

C. W. Hathaway, of Albia, has purchased the Kozy theater at Pella from G. Van Rees. Paul Hodgson will be local manager.

B. B. Wiley has taken over the Virginia theater at Boone from B. Arie, and will open that house about Sept. 1, playing pictures on open nights.

The Orpheum at Shenandoah has been rechristened The Jitney theater by Manager Morse. He will run four reels at that price.

A. C. Jones and C. C. Heezen, who operate a show at Reinbeck, have leased the Fairfield theater at Fairfield.

The Crystal at Cedar Rapids has been featuring Frank J. Naibert of that city in illustrated popular songs Saturday, Sunday and Monday of each week.

"A Fool There Was" played a return engagement at the Princess in Cedar Rapids.

The Empress at Sioux City has a new policy. Pictures are run 1 to 2:30, vaudeville 2.30 to 4:30, pictures 4:30 to 7:30, and vaudeville until 11:30 o'clock.

The Pastime theater at Maquoketa is having a new front installed.

The Columbia at Cedar Rapids gave a benefit for local Union No. 191 of the Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators.

Frank Sampson has opened a motion picture show at Shambaugh.

Grant Waddell of Logan has purchased the show at Shelby from Downs & Ellis.

The Empress at Harlan has been sold to Ralph T. and B. C. Morgan of Coon Rapids.

C. O. Larson, of Burt, has purchased a motion picture theater at Ceylon.

E. A. Hansen has opened the Princess theater at Titonka, giving three shows a week.

CENSORS GETTING EVIDENCE.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

The Pittsburgh exhibitors are greatly interested and some are greatly excited over the fact that they have received word that evidence was collected during the last week in 23 motion picture houses in Pittsburgh, Scranton and Wilkes-Barre and is being put into shape for bringing suit by the state board of censors.

Joseph A. Berrier, chief clerk to the board, who made a special inspection trip, says the offenses are of two distinct sorts. One is showing a picture bearing the approval of the board without sections being eliminated, as ordered. The other is showing pictures without the stamp of the board.

Mr. Berrier says that in Pittsburgh he examined 18 theaters and found the law being violated in 15, an unusually high percentage. In Scranton he listed six violations and in Wilkes-Barre two.

Most of the pictures concerned were made in New York.

THREE HOUSES CLOSE.

Three motion picture houses, the Union, Casino and Federal, all located within a square on Federal street, Northside, Pittsburgh, were closed last week. This still leaves three, the William Penn, Elite and Novelty, in the same square. The general opinion has prevailed for a long time that this section was too well supplied with theaters and that sooner or later some of them would drop out of the running.

NEW CASTLE NOW WANTS TO HAVE LICENSED OPERATORS.

Quite a little agitation has been started because of the fire in the booth of the Ciamond moving picture theater on West Washington street, New Castle, Pa., last week, which suggested public peril because of alleged inexperienced moving picture operators running machines in various theaters in this city.

The matter was presented to council, urging that an ordinance be enacted requiring that moving picture machine operators be licensed and that they pass an examination, before being permitted to operate a machine.

It was argued that such laws are in effect in every large city surrounding New Castle, which makes the requirements of the operators very strict. In the hands of an incompetent operator, a moving picture machine is a dangerous thing, but with an experienced operator, there can be no possibility of a fire it was said. In this city, there are 12-year-old boys who are allowed to operate the machines while the regular operators go to their meals, it is stated.

REMODELING OAKLAND ARCADE.

Plans have been drawn by G. H. Schwan for the remodeling of the Oakland Arcade building, on Forbes street, near Atwood street, Oakland, Pittsburgh, into a motion picture theater. The theater will be operated by Rowland & Clark, who take a long lease on the building. Alterations to be made in it are extensive and are expected to cost around $25,000. They will include a large and ornamental glass canopy the full width of the building, extending out to the curb; also a theater entrance and a theater with a seating capacity of about 800. It is meant to make the theater the finest motion picture house in Oakland, and only the finest features will be filmed.

SIDNEY ABEL RESIGNS.

The Pittsburgh territory has just lost a live, hustling, active exchange manager in Sidney E. Abel, who has resigned from active management of the Continental Feature Film Corporation to become associated with the V-L-S-E combination, in their Cleveland offices.

Mr. Abel has, during the year and a half that he has been in Pittsburgh, made a notable and creditable record for himself in not only producing a profitable business for employers, and building it with little material to work with to one of the most representative offices in Pittsburgh; but in making loyal friends who have nothing but good things to say about him, and he carries with him the best wishes and kindliest feelings from all quarters. The Cleveland territory is to be congratulated upon its acquisition and the V-L-S-E have obtained a man of sterling qualities and strong personality.

CHIPS FROM THE STEEL CITY.

Henry Poke, one of the best known exhibitors in this territory, who is having a motion picture theater built at a cost of $60,000 on Shiloh street, near Virginia avenue, Mount Washington, Pittsburgh, last week took over the Palace theater in Homestead, Pittsburgh. The Palace is an up-to-date house of 450 capacity, erected about 18 months ago by a company of Pittsburgh business men, but the theater apparently has not proven a big success. It is expected, however, that under Mr. Poke's capable management the house should prove a big success.

The Mullen theater in Vandegrift, Pa., which was recently taken over by Mr. Austraw, has had its name changed to the Lyric and is putting on vaudeville Fridays and Saturdays.

The moving picture theater located on Long Avenue, Mahonington, Pa., has changed hands. The theater, which has been in charge of Mr. Hume, will now be operated by J. Hetrick. The theater is now closed for repairs, and will be opened some time this week, it is anticipated.

Bosworth's production, "Hypocrites," which recently played a two-week engagement at the Alvin theater in Pittsburgh, has proven a sensational success. More return engagements have been booked for this production than any like attraction ever produced.

Many improvements are to be made to the Coliseum theater in New Castle, Pa., this month, and when the house opens in August it will be one of the prettiest and most modern in the state. Messrs. Hanitch and Robins, managers of the Coliseum, stated that the theater would be finished in white and gold both inside and out. The management will also re-seat the house so that it will be more comfortable to the patrons and accommodate larger audiences. It is the intention to open the Coliseum about the middle of August.

Mr. A. Blitz, of the Strand theater in Indiana, Pa., was a visitor in Pittsburgh last week. While here he purchased two Powers 6A operating machines.

John Kahler has secured title to the George H. Hobson holding, of 60 x 100 feet, in Beechview avenue, Pittsburgh, improved with a one-story brick building used as a motion picture theater. The consideration in the deed is $12,000, which does not represent the full value.

While Al W. Cross, manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company of Pittsburgh, was in New York last week, he secured the one-reel picture of Harry K. Thaw, showing interesting scenes before and during the present trial, his fight for jury trial in the supreme court room, the jury, Jerome K. Jerome, Thaw's mother and all vitally interested in the trial.

The Keystone theater, Garfield street, Natrona, Pa., has been sold by John Hafner to a company of Natrona peple. The sale was consummated last week and the new owners have already taken charge of the theater. The company is the same that owns Natrona's other popular theater, the Grand. Mr. Hafner has not as yet stated his intentions for the future but will not conduct a moving picture business in Natrona. It is said he has a similar venture in view in another town, however. He has been in the moving picture business in Natrona almost continuously for the past 8 years and in that time has made a host of friends in the town.

Steve King, who has charge of the Universal's Submarine pictures which were shown at the Lyceum theater, Pittsburgh, for two weeks with great success, reports that exhibitors are taking a lively interest in the production and that he is securing plenty of bookings.

M. J. Kornblum, formerly publicity man for the Clark & Rowland interests, which he resigned about two months ago, is again back on the job working in conjunction with Arthur J. Simmons, who filled the position after Mr. Kornblum resigned.

D. C. France, who is now in charge of the Broadway Features and Serials department of the Independent Film Exchange, but formerly manager of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, moved into his new office in the first-named exchange last week. Mr. France reports that he is already meeting with great success booking the Broadway Features released by the Universal.

Newton Williams, of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, was married Monday, June 28, to Miss Marion Hollis, daughter of Thomas Hollis, formerly of the General Film Company. Miss Marion is also a niece of Harry J. Smith, manager of the Calcium and Harry Hollis, of the same company. Congratulations from the film men.

R. D. Tristam, who was in Pittsburgh for 10 days, superintending the launching of the H. M. Blackwell exchange, left last week for New York. The exchange offices are up to date in every respect and Manager Fay is expected to do a big business from the Pittsburgh branch.

N. P. Stoughton, traveling auditor for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been in Pittsburgh during the past two weeks, installing new bookkeeping systems and completing the work of transferring accounts in the new Universal exchange.

F. W. Myers, of Glassport, Pa., is erecting a new motion picture theater in this town which will have a capacity of 300.

John L. Moore, of Northside, has secured the contract for the erecting of an $8,000 motion picture theater, to be built on Church avenue, Ben Avon, for J. S. Wagner.

Licenses were issued to two new moving picture theaters in Erie, Pa., last week. One is located at 2509 Peach street and will be operated by D. A. Billig. The other was at 1305 Parade street, owned by H. Mickalski.

Andrew P. Weschler, owner of the Colonial theater, in Peach street, Erie, Pa., announces that he will make alterations and put an addition on this house.

Kansas Sabbaths

Kansas Exhibitors Are Preparing to Fight for Sunday Opening—Wichita Picture Shows Unmolested on July 4—Played to Bigger Crowds Than Usual, But Charged No Admission—Managers to Test Law Covering Openings.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

BEING placed on the same plane as saloons and gambling houses and so forth has long dissatisfied and prejudiced the moving picture exhibitors and the film men against the Kansas administration. They are now making preparations in several cities to break into the Sunday show business. At the Fourth of July celebration at Wichita, Kan., business men informed the exhibitors that the mayor and other city officials would not be in town Sunday. The shows opened and showed to larger crowds than they are accustomed to on Saturdays, which is the largest day of the week with them.

As yet the officials on their return to the city have taken no action because the shows opened. No admission was charged at the theaters, although the committee of the city in charge of the celebration asked for a donation from the exhibitors they failed to get it because there was no charge to the shows.

There have been indignation meetings held at nearly all the churches in charge of ministers; however, they lack the moral support of the people in their meetings and they are scheduled to come to naught, according to the business men there. The managers of the shows are now making all preparations to hold another Sunday opening and test the administration on the point.

There are seven theaters in Wichita, all of the high class money making variety, and all have a big financial backing to fight the right to show on Sunday, which they intend to use if necessary. So far there has been nothing said about the film exchanges of Kansas City, which cater to this district entering into the fight, although it is barely possible that they will probably consider helping the exhibitors all that they can in this matter and it will probably be brought before the Exchange Men's Association of Kansas City in the near future.

EXHIBITOR ENTERTAINS TOTS.

George Seidhoff, owner of the Murray theater at Twenty-seventh and Walrond streets, was host to the children of the Institutional Church recently. Mr. Seidhoff was assisted in his work by Mrs. Walter Smith, president of the Parent-Teachers Association of the Greenwood School at Kansas City. The children of the Institutional Church are those that live in the tenement section of Kansas City, and many of them have seen very few picture shows and perhaps none had ever been inside of one of the high-class south-side theaters until Mr. Seidhoff made it possible for them to attend his show. A motor car ride over the boulevards was the first thing on the program for the afternoon, a trip through the Swope Park zoo came next, then ice cream, soda water and cake at the Walrond Gardens, and last of all the picture show, and if the noise of appreciation meant anything the picture show to them was the best of all.

UNCENSORED FILMS OUTLAWED.

August 15 will probably be set by W. D. Ross, superintendent of public instruction, as the date for the end of the uncensored moving pictures in Kansas. When Superintendent Ross, under authority from the courts that the law was constitutional, began enforcing the law last April, he ruled that for the first few months films already in the state could be shown without having been inspected by the state censors. Ross said he did not wish to work a hardship on the film exchanges. But now Ross has just about decided that three months and a half are enough in which to fill the state with censored films. The date for this change has not been officially announced, but it will probably be either August 15 or a bit later. Since April 12 the two inspectors have passed on 1,900 films and made the state richer by about $3,900 in fees.

GLEANED IN KANSAS.

The new policy of showing motion pictures at Garfield Park at Topeka, Kan., was recently inaugurated in the casino to large crowds. It has been customary for the last two summers for free pictures to be shown here, but higher grade films are now being shown at the charge of five cents admission. Good weather is helping the picture show at the park nicely.

Earl Alexander, owner of the Earl theater at Twelfth street and Brooklyn avenue, has closed his theater for the summer. Mr. Alexander will not open again until September.

LYNCHBURG, VA., NEWS LETTER.

By Julian T. Baber, Special Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Rotary Club of this city has placed Roanoke on the map by having Pell Mitchell, Gaumont (Mutual) cameraman film "The Big Lick Old Fiddlers' Convention" held here July 2 and 3.

Manager F. O. Webber, owner of the Comet theater, the progressive Mutual house of this city, has made arrangements to show the pictures in the near future.

Manager W. P. Henrietzie, of the Roanoke theater, obtained many good photographs of the Old Fiddler's parade and is using them for lobby display and slides. The Roanoke is a vaudeville and motion picture house, using two reels, General Film, daily.

The Paramount theater of this city has closed its doors. This theater was formerly the Jefferson and has been termed a lemon by the local showmen for a good many years; stock, vaudeville and pictures being tried with little success.

Manager Rockhill, of the Virginian, is using many novel advertising ideas with his Kalem railroad pictures. If he keeps up at the pace he is going now, the passers-by will find a N. & W. engine lined up in front of his house on Jefferson street some morning.

Chaplin comedies are very popular. The American, a large house booking big pictures, is using Essanay-Chaplin comedies, showing two and three times. The Virginian is using Chaplin-Keystone reissues to a good advantage. "Tillie's Punctured Romance," which played the Paramount some time ago, is playing a return date at the American.

The American Booking Co., controlling "The Christian" for Virginia, and several other states, reports it to be going unusually well.

Three men held up H. L. Rockhill, of the Virginian, July 3, and relieved him of his bank roll, which fortunately contained only about $20. They evidently intended to get the day's receipts, but Mr. Rockhill has a habit of leaving his receipts down town in a safe. (A good habit.)

Manager Jenkins, of the Bijou, is determined to keep the Universal Program before the people, from the looks of things.

A. Luther Chocklett, of Roanoke, forwarded the foregoing notes to the representative in this city of the Moving Picture World.

Sunday Men Confident

Tennessee Picture Managers Have Excellent Chances of Winning Test Case on Sabbath Observance Law—Old 1803 Measure Has Been Superseded and the New Law Does Not Discriminate Between Cigar Stores and Theaters.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE moving picture men of Chattanooga, Tenn., feel that they have an excellent chance to win in the Sunday showing test case which was recently filed. It is contended that the only possible law under which the picture shows could be closed would be one that was enacted about 1803, which has been superseded by later supreme court decisions. In order to close the picture shows on Sunday it would be necessary to close up the drug stores, cigar stands, and also to stop street cars on Sunday.

Some years ago a law was passed in the state which prohibited Sunday baseball, but this law was declared unconstitutional three years ago when the Nashville Base Ball Club tested it out. The men who were recently arrested on a charge of operating their theaters on Sunday were bound over to the Grand Jury from the magistrate's court. In a special charge to the Grand Jury Judge McReynolds, of the criminal court, said that it was unlawful for persons, firms, individuals or corporations to follow their vocations on Sunday, and that so doing for two or more Sundays constituted a nuisance. He said that it was the duty of the jury to indict operators of moving picture shows who were following their vocations on Sunday.

EXIT THE ALBERT THEATER.

The old legitimate houses of Chattanooga and other Tennessee cities are slowly but surely passing out of the ranks. One of the last of the old-timers is the Albert theater, formerly the Shubert. The chairs of the theater have just been sold to Silver & Ginsberb, who operate some colored moving picture shows, and the latter have been busy removing them. The sale was made by B. F. Lowry, cashier of the Citizens' National Bank, and receiver for the Albert. This will mark the end of the career of the Albert as a theater as the building will be converted into a business house and occupied by some jobbing house.

BETTERMENT CLUBS AND EDUCATIONAL FILMS.

The University of Tennessee is making rapid strides in its endeavor to use moving pictures throughout the state for educational purposes. A short time ago arrangements were made for furnishing commercial films for educational purposes in the schools throughout the state. Then the University made arrangements for showing pictures to the state institutions. The latest development is one whereby The Tennessee Manufacturers' Association will make an appropriation from its treasury for the purpose of starting clubs in all of the manufacturing districts. These clubs will be composed of high class workmen, journeymen of various kinds, and men who are interested in bettering their conditions.

A number of the leading members of the manufacturers' organization recently met the officials of the University of Knoxville, and laid plans for organizing clubs throughout the state. It is hoped that a total membership of 1,000 workmen can be gained by October 1. Any town which can make up a class of twenty men will be considered under the new proposition. Only men who are working, or who expect to go back to work shortly will be enrolled, and boys of scholastic age who have an opportunity of attending the free schools of the state will be encouraged to attend them.

ITEMS FROM TENNESSEE.

While moving pictures have often been produced in which old shows have been the subject it is a rather unusual stunt for a stock company or theater of any kind to reproduce a moving picture play in stage form. However, the Norman Field players, a stock company playing at the Orpheum theater, at Nashville, recently produced "Tess of the Storm Country," Mary Pickford's big screen success. Good attendances were present at the various performances, including the matinees. Miss Daniel had the leading role in the stock performances.

The Fourth avenue airdome, of Nashville has installed Mason & Williams Stock Company as a permanent or indefinite feature of the shows to be given at the new airdome. Vaudeville and moving pictures are shown between the acts of the stock performers, and the stock shows are changed twice a week.

The Belmont, of Nashville, Tenn., recently had a special attraction in the form of several hundred feet of film, showing pictures familiar to residents of the Belmont section of the city, and in which numerous patrons of the theater appeared. The local color pictures were accompanied by the three-reel Lubin production, "The Attorney for the Defense."

The big outdoor moving picture show at the Glendale Zoo, of Nashville, was opened on July 5. The pictures are free to the public and are attracting big crowds whenever the weather permits, which has not been very often, during the past few days. The pictures will be shown during July and August. A concert band in the park also adds to the attractiveness of the open-air pictures.

The Dixie Film Company, of Nashville, has completed plans whereby the company will shortly start manufacturing films at a plant near Biloxi, Miss. Competent actors have been secured and the first picture will be the "Infant Moses," portraying the life of the Biblical character. M. D. Morris, of Nashville, is author of the play, and a number of the scenes will be laid in and around Nashville. Capt. D. A. Boening, secretary and business manager for the new company, is one of the pioneer moving picture men of the country and was for several years connected with the business in Chicago, where he operated picture houses, and was also interested in supply concerns, both manufacturers and jobbers.

Considerable interest is being shown in a movement in Tennessee that proposes to use moving pictures as a form of amusement and education for all the penal and charitable institutions of the state. The movement is being fathered by the Tennessee Board of Control, which is installing machines in the various institutions, including the penitentiaries, the Tennessee Industrial School, State Reform School, the Deaf and Dumb School, the Central Hospital for the Insane and the Eastern and Western Hospitals for the Insane.

THE GEORGIA FILM STARTED.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ACTUAL work was commenced yesterday on the Georgia motion picture film, by the Scenic Film Company. Cameraman V. L. Walker crawled to the top of the water tank on the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose building, some 200 feet up, and took a picture of the New Fulton county courthouse.

He also took a picture of the Capitol from the top of the tower of the Fulton county jail, it being necessary to carry planks and build a temporary platform from which to operate.

In taking this film of the State of Georgia for the state chamber of commerce Mr. Walker will have to traverse all parts of the state

The picture will show the abundant resources in minerals, cereals, cotton, fruits and water power plants, manufactories and many other activities of which the great state of Georgia may well be proud.

Picturesque scenes will be taken in the mountains and on the seacoast, and views will be shown which will strikingly demonstrate that in the cities of Macon, Augusta, Savannah, Columbus and Atlanta, the state has possessions surpassed by no state in the south, and by few in the Union.

WANTS TRAFFIC OFFICER IN FRONT OF THEATER.

Hugh Cardoza has appealed to members of general council to aid him in securing a traffic officer to place on duty in front of the Grand theater, of which he is manager. He states that thousands of pedestrians are in danger from autos and vehicles of all kinds at that point since it is a "Little Five Points" with Peachtree, North Pryor, Carnegie Way, Forsyth and Ellis streets, all intersecting. The officer, Mr. Cordoza says, is particularly needed on Saturdays when more than 1,000 children attend the children's picture shows at the Grand.

DeBRULER TO MANAGE STRAND.

After an absence of several months from the city, Ralph De Bruler has returned to Atlanta, and assumed the management of the Strand. Mr. De Bruler was formerly manager of the popular Montgomery theater in this city. Known to every one in the South connected with the film business, and to the thousands of patrons of moving picture houses in Atlanta as genial, accommodating and ready to please all who come in contact with him, these acquaintances will welcome his return and connection with the Strand theater.

REGENT OPENS.

The "Regent," Frank Montgomery's new theater at Peachtree and North avenues, opened formerly to the public at 2 o'clock Monday. This handsome new theatre is one of a chain of neighborhood theaters being erected by Mr. Montgomery. The next to open will be at Peachtree and Tenth street and is nearing completion. Mr. Montgomery is well known as one of the foremost motion picture theater promotors in the South. He established the Montgomery theater here, and has built many successful theaters over the Southern states.

HEARD IN ATLANTA.

"Midnight at Maxims" and Theda Bara in "A Fool There Was" are at Alamo No. 2 this week. If Theda Bara continues to linger around in Atlanta theaters, it is said there will be many reformations.

Reports from the patrol of Yaarab Temple of the Mystic Shrine, who are now in Seattle, and who will later go to San Francisco and Los Angeles, and who are one of the finest drilled patrols in the country, is that they will bring back a most excellent film of their drills in the different cities they visit. Atlanta is justly proud of Yaarab patrol and the film will be an S R O in the theater which will exhibit the film.

Damon and Pythias is drawing great crowds at the Strand Monday and Tuesday.

The Apex Feature Film Co report a splendid business over the South at the present time.

The much-talked-of Moving Picture

Exposition, which was to have been held in August, seems to have gone where some expositions go; want of funds, and co-operation of manufacturers seems to have been the ailment.

The Montgomery theater played a full week to the "Eternal City" at advanced prices. Crowded house all week.

The V-L-S-E company furnishes the entire motion picture program at the Forsyth this week. Manager W. C. Brandon, of the local office of the V-L-S-E, is having great success in putting his films in many of the larger theaters in the eight Southern states which comprise his territory.

J. L. Merentette, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., is on a business trip to Chicago this week.

E. J. Sparks has taken the lease on the old Grand in Spartanburg, S. C., and after improvements will open it under the name of the Bijou. Only first class pictures will be run in this theater.

The Strand has again placed a new apparatus for pumping into that popular theater fresh and cool air; this time it is the installation of great exhaust fans and to prove to the public that such is a fact they have placed a large flag with the word "Strand" on it at the front of the building, which on the calmest day is standing straight out, caused by the power from the exhaust fans. Calm days in Atlanta, however, are few.

LOUISVILLE THEATER NOTES.

Lee Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, of Louisville, was one of the first theatrical men in the country to adopt the electric signs for advertising the various stars appearing in the photoplays shown at the theaters. Mr. Goldberg was the first to adopt this means of advertising in Louisville, but since that time others have tried out the plan, which is proving successful. "The Isle of Regeneration" and Viola Allen in the "White Sister" made big hits at the theater. In fact, the "Isle of Regeneration" was booked for the second time, it proved so popular.

For the second time inside of a few months the Grand, of Owensboro, Ky., was damaged by a cyclone. The heavy wind tore a portion of the roof from the building directly over the stage, and the following rains did considerable damage to the interior. The storm did a large amount of damage in Henderson, Ky., Evansville, Ind., and other neighboring towns.

The Crystal, of Hickman, Ky., has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $3,000. The incorporators are: J. O. West, J. R. Wright and Mitchell Wright.

At Wheeling, W. Va., Ambrose Habig is preparing to erect two motion picture theaters shortly. The houses will be located on Main street and on South Chapline street.

MACAULEY'S AGAIN CLOSED.

Mrs. W. H. Shelly, of Louisville, who recently opened Macauley's theater as a moving picture theater for the summer months, found that pictures did not go well at the old playhouse and has discontinued operations. Mrs. Shelly stated when she first opened the theater that she was willing to lose a thousand or so in finding out something about the business, and it is stated on expert testimony that she lost the better portion of the thousand in the few weeks in which the theater was operated. Mrs. Shelly is the wife of W. H. Shelly, one of the prominent racing officials on the Kentucky race tracks. This experience rather proved that the public is looking for up-to-date moving picture theaters and big attractions rather than mixed bills, and old houses designed for theatrical staging. This condition is especially noticeable in the summer when the poorly ventilated theaters are much of the same nature as a bake oven.

Lo, the Poor Airdome

Louisville Weather Clerk Cranky, But Besides That Everything Is All Right, Especially for the Cosy Indoor Theater—Garden Weather Expected for Rest of the Summer, and Breeze Managers Still Hope for the Best.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

JUST who made the weather man mad is a question of much interest to the airdome operators of Louisville. It is safe to say that they would be more than glad to make the guilty party shake hands and wind up the argument. If he refused, a coating of tar and feathers would hardly compensate the show men for the money they have lost during the past few weeks. The entire season has been cool, and copious rains have fallen several times each week. The weather has been so threatening almost constantly that very few patrons feel like taking a chance on an airdome which does not have a closed house in conjunction.

Such houses as operate combined establishments have been reaping a rich harvest, and the down-town moving picture houses have been doing the best summer business ever recorded. The parks in most cases have done very little, except in the dance halls, and on many nights the vaudeville show audiences have looked like a funeral procession. The consequence has been that the down-town theaters have been well filled every night.

Some of the airdomes, including one in Crescent Hill and one on West Broadway, have closed temporarily and have announced that operations will be resumed when the weather becomes settled.

COMIC ADVERTISING FILMS.

The recently incorporated Raymond Anderson Company, of Louisville, is now getting a number of the leading photoplay theaters of Louisville to put on the new comedy advertising films which the local concern is making. These films are made up in thirty-five foot sections, or ten advertisements to each 350 feet. The special reel is generally run at the end of each performance, and catches the crowds on every one but the last performance, and in many cases even this performance, since many of the films are full of local color and are interesting. Local boys and girls of the better circles have been used in making some of the films. One film, a local jeweler's advertisement, was a very interesting bit of romance which wound up with the girl selecting the diamond ring, which was placed on her hand just as the other lover came into the store. Comedy, or trick photography and cartoon stuff is used in many of the films.

BACK TO SUMMER VAUDEVILLE.

James L. Weed, manager of the Keith theater, of Louisville, has dropped photoplays and gone back to summer vaudeville and short motion pictures with a continuous performance, starting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. For several weeks the theater showed photoplays only, but many requests were received asking that summer vaudeville be re-established as it was earlier in the season, and it was also found that patrons preferred the Fourth street moving picture houses to walking the additional block to Fifth street.

SWITOW BUYS EVANSVILLE'S NEW MAJESTIC THEATER.

Announcement has just been made of the purchase of the New Majestic, of Evansville, Ind., by M. Switow, president of the Switow Amusement Company, of Louisville, the Fourth-Avenue Amusement Company, and the Phoenix Amusement Company, of Lexington. Associated with Mr. Switow in the new venture are James H. Button, of Louisville, and Louis Zoeller, of Chicago. These men, accompanied by Philip Skora, who sold the Evansville theater, recently made a trip to the Indiana city. They were accompanied by Oscar Joseph, of the architectural firm of Joseph & Joseph, who have designed most of the leading moving picture theaters of this district. The new owners are contemplating a number of changes in the theater, and improvements to cost about $20,000.

A company will be incorporated to handle the new property, which has been leased for a term of twenty years, with the privilege of buying at the end of that time. The name of the new company will be The Majestic Amusement Company, it is understood. The same men are interested in the Phoenix Amusement Company, of Lexington, and, it is understood, have deals pending for several other theaters. The Majestic will be used as a moving picture and vaudeville house, after the improvements are completed. This theater was built a few years ago by August Ropke, of Louisville, who is now serving a term in the penitentiary at Frankfort on a charge of embezzling $1,490,000 from the Fidelity Trust Company, of Louisville, in 1910. At the time it was discovered that he was short over a million dollars in his accounts, the company attached the theater at Evansville, but later sold it.

NEW PHOENIX HOUSE BUILDING.

The Congleton Lumber Company, of Lexington, Ky., has been awarded the contract for completing the new theater of the Phoenix Amusement Company, work on which was stopped a few weeks ago when the Whitton-Wheeler Construction Company, of Louisville, failed. The new contract for completing the work calls for an outlay of $30,000 and the theater will be completed about October 1. The bonding company will push the work as much as possible so as to save a large bonus which accrued during the time the theater work was held up.

AND BINGHAM IS ABOUT RIGHT.

George Bingham, of Paducah, Ky., recently stated in the Hogwallow Kentuckian, a small magazine printed at Paducah, that he felt the Paducah theaters deserved censure for the numerous advertisements on the screens. In part Mr. Bingham said: "Advertisements on the screens bore people who pay money to be amused, and they should not be forced to have themselves informed, instructed and advised about the merits of various articles of merchandise, etc. To my mind, dead hair, corns and infallible remedies therefore should be barred from the screens, to which we look for amusement only."

RIDDER TO LECTURE.

It has been announced in Louisville that Herman Ridder, editor of the New York Staats-Zeitung, will shortly deliver a lecture at Macauley's theater. The lecture will be a plea for American neutrality and moving pictures will be used to show what the war really has been in Europe. Mr. Ridder claims to be badly misunderstood by American people, and he is anxious to show himself up in a better light by means of his talk. The lately received European pictures are said to be similar to Dante's Inferno as far as realism is concerned. Accompanying Mr. Ritter will be Karl Nickerson Llewellyn, Yale, 1915, who won the emblem of the Iron Cross while fighting under the German flag in Belgium and France. He will talk on "Life in the German Army as an American Volunteer."

Wanamaker Indian Films

On Crow Reservation in Wyoming Director Dixon Is at Work on Twelve Reels—Picture Planned by Rodman Wanamaker—Memorial to American Indians—Will Perpetuate Knowledge of Primitive Customs—What It Will Show.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE most comprehensive historical Indian pictures yet attempted in the United States are being made on the Crow Indian reservation near Sheridan, Wyo. The films are a part of the plan of Rodman Wanamaker to raise a suitable memorial to the American Indian and to perpetuate the knowledge of the primitive Indian customs.

When complete there will be twelve reels of pictures. This work is being done under the direction of Rollin S. Dixon. Director Dixon was on the reservation with the Wanamaker expedition in 1913 and his acquaintance with the tribal leaders enabled him to get their consent to depict rites and ceremonies more graphically than by the aboriginal method of handing down records from generation to generation by work of mouth in the tribal councils. The Indians were more than willing. Inasmuch as the customs are not being maintained they evidenced as much dramatic enthusiasm as was consistent with their stoic natures over the idea of restoring some of the ancient and weird rites. In two weeks, while on Shoulder Blade Creek, near Lodge Grass, Mr. Dixon made six reels, all dealing with the primitive. Among the half forgotten ceremonials outlined by the oldest warriors and medicine men were the mysteries of the medicine stick, the ceremonial steam bath and battle scenes, the features of which are the infinite pains to secure accurate detail.

In direct contrast to this will be six reels showing the present day Indian. The big ID roundup will show the Indians riding the range and branding cattle. The camera men will visit the grain and stock fields and the homes of Uncle Sam's charges.

These pictures will first be exhibited at the Panama Pacific Exposition in connection with a lecture on the American Indian given by Dr. Joseph K. Dixon, secretary of the National American Indian Memorial Association.

PICTURES IN LIBERIA.

The President of Liberia attends motion picture shows twice a week, according to Rev. Emory Ross, a missionary who has just returned from that country. At a meeting in North Yakima, Wash., he said that Monrovia, the capital of Liberia, has no hotel or restaurant, but has a motion picture theater.

The French films are used and they are shown in the Hall of Representatives two nights a week. The admission is 36 cents. In the center of the hall there is a raised office chair—just an ordinary chair—which is reserved for the president of the black republic, and he graces the chair regularly, every night the films are shown.

NORTHWESTERN NOTES.

H. L. Newton has sold a half interest in the Princess theater at Sterling, Col., to J. E. Dahlberg, of St. Edwards, Neb., and will devote much of his time to Pacific Coast interests. Dahlberg formerly operated a photoplay house in Corydon, Ia.

Fire, believed to have originated in the Concrete theater, at Concrete, Wash., destroyed the building and half the business section of the town.

The Commercial club of Tacoma, Wash., is preparing a welcome for a party of Ohioans to be brought to that place Aug. 12 by the American Art Film Company, of Columbus, O. The party will include the designated "six most beautiful women of Ohio." The camera men will be accorded the freedom of the city.

Donald Fullan, of San Francisco, directed the making of a picture, "The Seven Wonders and the Modern Ichabod," at Everett, Wash., during the Kea-How-Yah held by the Commercial Club.

The Weir theater, at Aberdeen, Wash., has been giving a series of free Friday matinees to the children of that city.

The Gem theater, at Sheridan, Wyo., is taking part in a Shetland pony contest, giving 50 votes with each admission. The Gem gave carnations to its female patrons on July 4th.

W. B. Reed sold the Pastime theater, at Sheridan, Wyo., to Ote Hon, and has gone to California. The new proprietor has had the house redecorated.

The Masonic Temple theater, at Wallace, Ida., was destroyed by fire.

IN MONTANA.

Inmates of the Montana State Prison, at Deer Lodge, prefer the dungeon to missing the weekly motion picture show, Dr. Marie Hyde, inspector of state institutions said at the recent meeting of the Montana Federation of Woman's Clubs in Missoula: "The greatest punishment that could be meted out to them was to deprive them of the picture show."

Rev. Lee Tomme, former chaplain of the Arkansas State Penitentiary, said last week in an address at Little Rock:

"In the Colorado penitentiary there is a picture show, a baseball ground for the prisoners and other features of interest or amusement for the convicts. If one violates the rules he cannot go to the picture show, play ball or see it played, nor have any of the privileges enjoyed by his fellow convicts. This is punishment, not brutal, but as effective in most instances."

Thomas Bastian, who was manager of the Princess theater, at Butte, is booking the pictures and acting as publicity manager for the New Palace theater at Great Falls.

John Eger, who bought the Princess theater, at Helena, from W. B. Thompson, will maintain the 10-cent standard.

DAKOTA ITEMS.

Otto Rahen, of Lake Andes, S. Dak., has purchased the Gem theater at Armour, S. Dak., from Mrs. Samuelson.

A. A. Axtell has sold a half interest in the Star theater, at Lemmon, S. Dak., to Elmer Dreshbach.

B. L. Pierce, of Alton, Ia., has purchased the interest of Harry Ronald in the Opera house motion picture show at Clear Lake, S. Dak.

CINCINNATI TO BE STUDIO CITY.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

ON the authority of the well known proverb to the effect that where there is seen a considerable amount of smoke there is also likely to be found more or less fire, it may confidently be said that there will shortly be something doing in the way of real, regular, permanent moving picture production in Cincinnati. That is, dramas and comedies will be produced by one or more companies, with competent and skilled direction and with other accompaniments which go with first class pictures.

Of course there are at present at least two concerns producing various kinds of commercial and current events pictures, and doing it with conspicuous success, but so far there has been little in the way of dramatic production. The acquisition recently of about 300 acres of land near the city, on a car line, is one of the traces of "smoke" which has been discovered. For a time the deal mystified real estate men, who could not satisfactorily explain to themselves the purposes of the purchaser of the Indian View property, as it is known; now, however, it is rumored that the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, incorporated recently in Virginia with a capital stock of $3,000,000, and backed by Chicago capitalists, will use the property in its operations. It is ideal for the purpose, both as to location with reference to the city and topographically. Just when the company proposes to start operations is not known, but that it is interested and will use the property sooner or later is very definitely stated.

Besides the prospect of the work of this company, it is also understood, on good authority that an experienced actor-director who has been doing some good work in the Southwest proposes organizing and directing a company for the production of comedies exclusively, and that he has already completed tentative arrangements with a leading releasing concern for the use of his material. When these new projects are considered in connection with the ambitious plans of the Highland Film Corporation, the work of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Co., and other local concerns, it may very well be said that the Queen City will ultimately be as conspicuous as a producing center in the Middle West as it is now as a film distributing market.

LIVE PUBLICITY AT THE LUBIN.

The Lubin, whose intelligent and effective use of publicity in securing public attention to its big productions, which has been referred to before, is at it again, as it were. The picture on which it centered a recent striking effort in this line was the Lubin production of the Charles Klein play, "The District Attorney."

Attractive circular matter featuring the production, and inclosed in a red envelope bearing the arresting legend, "A Message from the District Attorney," were distributed through the mail to the select list which the Lubin uses, and thus got the coming of the play before the kind of people whom the management desires to cater to. The Lubin makes an especial effort to call to the attention of lawyers, doctors and other professional men the exhibition of plays of this sort, as being of direct interest to them, and is usually successful in drawing crowded houses during every engagement.

Blotters bearing the program for several weeks to come have also been sent out with other circular matter, and as they are good ones, the kind that really "blot," they are kept by their recipients in a sufficiently large number of cases to make them first-rate reminders of good things coming.

REFERENDUM ON CENSORSHIP.

Cincinnati exhibitors, as well as those elsewhere in Ohio, are deeply interested in the movement which has been started to secure a referendum vote on the moving picture censorship law as it now stands. Attorney General Turner has formally approved the form of petition drafted by those behind the movement, on its presentation to him, and work to secure a sufficient number of signatures to comply with the law and enable a vote on the moving picture statute as revised will begin at once.

One of the objectionable features of the statute is its application to film producers and exchanges, a provision inserted for the purpose of removing part of the responsibility for exhibiting unauthorized films from the exhibitor. Opinion is somewhat divided on the matter, as it has been during the whole fight on the State Board, and the result of the canvass for signatures will be watched with interest.

TALKED OF IN CINCINNATI.

Prospects for the usual summer run of feature pictures at the Walnut seem to be dwindling, inasmuch as no arrangements to that end have been announced, despite the lateness of the season, and, on the other hand, a new deal for that popular house is involved in the reported acquisition of the Anderson & Ziegler theaters by the United Booking Offices. It is stated that the booking concern is to place the Anderson & Ziegler, as well as other houses, on a small-time vaudeville circuit, although the Walnut will play the Stair & Havlin bookings until next March. At the same time it is said that the High Street theater, of Columbus, will continue as a high grade picture house. However, inasmuch as a few reels of pictures, especially, of course, cemedies, are always an essential part of the program at a small-time vaudeville house, patrons of the Walnut will continue to see pictures there to a limited extent, regardless of the kind of attractions which may ultimately hold the boards there.

It is becoming a recognized fact that moving pictures are among the prime necessaries of life, which seems to place the business of making and exhibiting them on about as solid a basis as could be asked. In fact, the makers of other necessaries, even of the staff of life itself, find it expedient to lure people to buy their goods by offering picture tickets with them, as recently reported in these columns with reference to a large bakery, and now a Sandusky, O., concern handling canned goods of all kinds, has adopted the same idea. The Star, Alhambra, Gem and Royal theaters, of that city, co-operate in the plan, honoring labels from the cans for admission, and are not only deriving substantial benefit therefrom, but have the distinct satisfaction of knowing they are at the same time giving real assistance to the development of a worthy home industry.

A "profit-sharing" plan whereby patrons of the theater will receive back a substantial part of their admission fees has been placed in operation by Mrs. Reifsnider, of the Orpheum theater, Urbana, O. The application of the profit-sharing idea has been so successful in other lines that Mrs. Reifsnider sees no reason why it should not be equally so in moving pictures.

IN ST. LOUIS EXCHANGES.

J. W. Cotter, manager of the Kriterion Exchange, 3217 Locust street, has taken on a new assistant in the person of Roy Dickson, who was formerly employed as booker in the Mutual Exchange. The St. Louis office of the Kriterion has just completed arrangements to handle the Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch releases for Missouri. The first feature, called "The Exposition's First Romance," has just been received.

J. J. Jones, with Martin and Estes, of Kansas City, has been in St. Louis for the past few weeks booking "The Spoilers" and "The Christian."

Sam Werner, manager of the United Exchange, in Film Row, on Olive street, says it looks to him as if the weather man had a deliberate grudge against airdomes. "Along about 4 o'clock the rain stops and the benches dry off and the exhibitor's heart begins to swell with hope, and he gets things ready. Then just as soon as it is time to open the show clouds and rumblings of thunder are heard and flashes of lightning are seen. When a prospective airdomer sticks his head out to see how the weather looks a rumble of thunder will growl at him and a streak of lightning dart its fiery forked tongue at him, and he slams the door and stays at home. And then an hour later, when there is no chance of a crowd, a gentle wind blows the clouds away, the moon comes out and shines in peaceful splendor on the empty benches and the lonesome airdome manager and three or four brave souls trying to occupy five or six hundred seats all at once."

Why Free Films Here?

St. Louis City Fathers Providing Free Shows for People Who Ought to Pay—City Charges Round Sum as License Fee for Airdomes, Then Puts Pictures in Park of Same Neighborhood for Well-to-Do Citizens—A Great Injustice.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BELOW is a copy of one of many letters from dissatisfied exhibitors that appear in the People's Columns of the daily papers of St. Louis:

"Our 'City Fathers' compel airdomes to pay a license of $150 for the 'privilege' of giving to the public the 'best and cheapest' form of amusement for 5 and 10 cents. In order to do this it means an investment of from $3,000 to $10,000, and running expenses of from $25 to $200 per day. The officials of this city are permitted to give free pictures, dances and band concerts within two or three blocks of these same airdomes, sometimes twice a week."

The free pictures were primarily meant for the poor people in the congested districts who hardly ever stirred out of their houses, and who were supposed to need recreation. The free pictures naturally draw big crowds, but the remarkable part of it is that the larger crowds do not come from the poorer districts. In Lafayette Park on Sunday, July 11, there were 17,000 spectators of the free pictures. This park is in the midst of a prosperous neighborhood, and airdomes in the immediate vicinity usually add vaudeville or some other attraction to their programs on free "movie" night in Lafayette Park, in order to compete with the free show.

BETTER THAN CENSORSHIP.

A letter from another writer to the St. Louis papers advises a boycott of all shows "implicated" in running "indecent films, these insidious and deadly lures to crime and perdition," as he calls them. He adds: "A raid anyhow, on pocketbooks, is oftentimes far more effective than scores of letters in the public prints, and even than admonitions on the subject from the pulpit, which, by the way, are painfully few and far between."

PRINCESS OPENS AS FEATURE PICTURE HOUSE.

The Princess theater, on Grand and Olive, which has been dark for several months, will reopen on Saturday, July 24, under the management of Charles B. Bellknap, as an exclusive moving picture feature house. Four performances will be given daily, two matinees in the afternoon at 1.45 and 3.15, and two evening shows at 7 and 9. The price of admission for the entire lower floor will be 10 cents, and the balcony 5 cents.

The Princess is one of the most beautiful and expensive theaters in St. Louis, and was the first large legitimate theater to be built out of the downtown district and was intended for a straight drama house. Immediately after its completion the wave of moving pictures struck the city and its dramatic program had to be abandoned. The Princess has had a varied career as a purveyor of straight drama, musical comedy, vaudeville and pictures, straight vaudeville, and now it will be straight picture features. The opening bill will be Nance O'Neill in "Princess Romanoff."

MRS. SNAWDER A SUCCESSFUL SHOWWOMAN.

The Criterion, at 2644 Franklin avenue, is a little theater that has had remarkably good business this summer, for all that it seats only 500 persons. The Criterion was opened eight years ago by Mr. and Mrs. Snawder, who managed the theater in partnership. Two years ago Mr. Snawder died, leaving the business in the hands of his wife, Mrs. Nellie Snawder, who has been successfully playing to packed houses.

SHOW FOR MILK AND ICE FUND.

The Echo skydome, Lillian and Arlington avenues, was acquired for a mammoth entertainment given on Friday, July 16, by the Harney Heights School Patrons' Association. The school district was divided up into sections, and each section has a score of children selling tickets for the special program, which consisted of seven reels of pictures. The proceeds were given to the Pure Milk and Free Ice Fund, an organization started several years ago by the Post Dispatch, which is still under the management of the paper, and has become a permanent institution.

ST. LOUIS EXCHANGE NOTES.

Edward Abeles, manager of the Pathe Exchange, 3210 Locust street, attended a meeting of Pathe Exchange managers in New York on July 12. The meeting was called to talk over office management and to discuss plans for the future. Mr. M. J. Dunne, cashier of the St. Louis Exchange, acted as manager of the office during Mr. Abeles' absence. Pathe's are arranging to make many plays from American subjects and those of them that are good enough will be sent to Paris to be hand-colored.

E. W. Dustin has succeeded R. L. White as manager of the World Film Corporation Exchange at 3610 Olive street. Mr. Dustin is one of the best known film and theatrical men in the middle west. He has had experience all along the amusement line, as resident manager, road man, advance agent, stage director and motion picture producer, and was at one time a member of the Evans Honey Boy Minstrels. Mr. Dustin was also one of the first managers to convert a regular theater to moving pictures and make a success of it. He turned the Hopkins theater, in Louisville, Ky., into an all film house in the early days and changed it from a fair proposition to a veritable mint for its owners. Mr. Dustin is a native of St. Louis, and opened the first Pathe Exchange in the city at 3210 Locust street, when it was known as the Eclectic.

J. A. Noehrn, who comes here from the Kansas City office of the V-L-S-E, has been appointed assistant manager of the Big 4 Exchange here, which has been established at 3630 Olive street, in the building formerly occupied by the Alco Exchange.

ST. LOUIS ITEMS.

Wm. McDonald, proprietor of the Compton theater, at Compton and Easton avenues, has completed the airdome he was building a block and a half away from the theater. Mr. McDonald went to great expense in fitting up his out-door theater. Only first grade material was used, all posts and supporting timber being of red cedar, while the benches, a new wrinkle in airdome seating, are made of hard maple, with curved backs, but his patrons find them as comfortable as most theater chairs.

J. W. Price, treasurer of the Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, is taking a two months' vacation trip to the west coast. He will visit the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and after that will go to Los Angeles and give Universal City the twice or three times over. Mr. Price's duties as treasurer of the association will be assumed by Miss Tillie Schwartz, financial secretary.

The Usher and His Work

Manager Schoenherr of Detroit's Columbia Theater Makes a Few Wise Observations on the Usher—Good and Ill He Can Do—Incident of One Crowded Day—They Should Be Carefully Guided.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

TALK all you will about how to run a theater properly, but in my estimation one of the most important things a manager or owner should do is to keep a watchful eye on his ushers," says M. W. Schoenherr, manager of the Columbia theater, Detroit, which is operated by John H. Kunsky. "An usher can either make friends for a house or can make fifty enemies in a few minutes. To make friends of your patrons the usher should be courteous at all times, accommodating and pleasant, and be on the job to give people seats when there are any to be had. On the other hand he must not be saucy or impertinent; he must never argue with a patron nor be the least discourteous.

"I remember one day in our theater we had gone to a great deal of extra expense to put on a good show. It brought us a lot of extra business. The space in the rear was crowded and there were probably a hundred people standing there, thus blocking the two aisles. The usher in a very gruff manner yelled out 'You got to keep this aisle open. Get back there.' What happened? Every person within the hearing of his voice felt insulted. The idea of having an usher talk that way to them. He could have just as well asked the people in a nice tone of voice to stand away from the aisle.

"So I say theater ushers need watching every minute. Most of them are inclined to sleep on the job, to fool around when the boss isn't there, to give preference to their personal friends in the matter of seating, and to become too familiar with young girls who come unescorted."

TO CELEBRATE ITS NEW ORGAN.

From July 18 to July 25 was a banner week for the Broadway-Strand Theater Company, Detroit, operated by Harry I. Garson. It served to introduce to the theatergoing public the new $40,000 Wurlitzer Hope-Jones organ, said to be the largest between New York and Denver. A special recital was given for the press and prominent men of the city by Edward Benedict, who has been engaged as the organist. Free recitals for the general public were given from 12 to 12.30 during the entire week. The regular orchestra was retained, as it is Mr. Garson's intention to have both the organ and the orchestra.

The regular attraction for the week was Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot." In addition, there were vocal solos by Eddie McGrath, Detroit's favorite singer, and souvenir photographs on leather of Mr. Whiteside, the first of a series of 52 pictures of Broadway-Strand stars, suitable for pillow covers, table spreads, etc. Each week from now on photos of the star of the feature will be given free as souvenirs. These are just a few of the innovations which Mr. Garson has in mind. By fall he expects to see the Broadway-Strand the most popular photoplay house in Detroit if money and brains count for anything. Prices remain the same—10 and 15 cents for matinees, and 10, 15 and 25 at night. Performances are continuous from 12.30 noon until 11 at night.

MAY LOWER LICENSE FEES.

Alderman Edward Barnett of the Detroit Common Council, has introduced an ordinance reducing the license of minor theaters—those seating less than 400—to $25. The reason he gives for the ordinance is his anxiety that fire alarm boxes be installed in all the theaters. "Theater owners have pleaded poverty so strenuously that I believe the lightening of the license burden will enable them to install the fire protection system," said the alderman.

DETROIT KRITERION COMPANY REORGANIZED.

The Detroit Kriterion Film Company has practically been reoganized. The new officers are: Otto A. Seestedt, president; Charles D. Wesch, secretary and treasurer, and Ralph T. Peckham, vice-president and general manager. They have bought out all of the other stockholders and the company still remains a fifty thousand dollar corporation. The same officers have incorporated the Standard Film & Supply Co., with a capital stock of $2,500, to handle the new Standard Program. The new Associated Program will be handled. The business will continue at least temporarily under the name of the Detroit Kriterion Film Co., and there will be no change in locations. The present quarters of the firm are as large as any in the city, and can handle an immense amount of business.

There are three floors. The first is for the general offices and shipping; the second entirely for projecting and the third for mounting. The projecting room is the finest in the city, in fact it is the only real projection room Detroit has. The room has been decorated with artificial flowers, giving it a garden effect. A hundred people can comfortably be seated.

The Detroit office of the company is headquarters for all of Michigan and 28 counties in Northwestern Ohio. Branches are maintained in Grand Rapids and Toledo, O. There are two traveling representatives, Bert Graham and John Briggs.

PREVENTION OF FIRES.

During the month of June one theater in Michigan devoted to photoplays was completely destroyed. Hon. John T. Winship, Insurance Commissioner of Michigan, says it was pure carelessness on the part of the owner. For the first six months of this year a total of six moving picture theaters were destroyed by fire, which is "six too many," according to Mr. Winship, who says that all of them could have been avoided had there been the proper attention given by the owners. In talking with a leading exhibitor on this matter the commissioner said: "Because a few theater owners are careless and will not live up to the requirements of the law, the legislature is always trying to pass new and more stringent laws. The result is that the careful exhibitor has to pay the price for the careless ones. If exhibitors would take it upon themselves to do everything they can to prevent fires and make their buildings fireproof, there wouldn't be any occasion for rigid laws."

DECORATING THE NEW STRAND.

John H. Kunsky says that the new Strand theater, at Grand River and 14th streets, Detroit, will be unusual in its decorative features, and that it will even surpass the Alhambra theater, which so far is considered his most beautiful playhouse. His artists are working out the garden effect scheme of decorating in a most novel way. All of the scenic work will be done by the Kunsky Scenic Company, recently organized by Mr. Kunsky and George Trendle. The Strand will accommodate 1,500 people and will be ready to open by Sept. 1. It could open earlier if Mr. Kunsky wanted things rushed, but he prefers to take his time and have everything done right. The Strand will make Mr. Kunsky's eighth house. The manager will be Arthur Hoganson, formerly manager of the Garden theater, who resigned on account of ill health a few months ago, but who has recovered sufficiently to be back on the job again. He will take the place of the various Kunsky managers while on their vacations until the Strand opens.

OURS A GROWING CITY.

It might be interesting to our readers that the population of Detroit according to the very latest report is 678,746, although taking in the immediate suburbs, which are really a part of the city, the population would be 760,000. Work is now under way for the erection of the new tractor factory, blast furnace and tire factory in West Detroit which will ultimately mean the employment of 20,000 men. This will increase the city's population another 100,000.

MANAGES THE KLATT THEATERS

L. H. Gardner, general manager for William F. Klatt, who operates the Rosedale, Gratiot, Vendome and Jewell theaters in Detroit, makes his headquarters at the Rosedale, Mr. Klatt's most beautiful house. It is located in the North Woodward district, and according to Mr. Garner is showing an improvement in business every day. "Business was a little slow at the beginning, but we have kept up the standard of our shows and our list of patrons is constantly increasing," he said. The Rosedale seats 1,500 people on two floors. Only big features are shown.

H. N. NELSON WITH PYRAMID FILM COMPANY.

The many Detroit friends of H. N. Nelson will be interested to learn that he is now vice-president of the Pyramid Film Company, in Dayton, Ohio, which is specializing in commercial and cartoon service. The company is doing real well. Mr. Nelson was formerly in business for himself in Detroit; for a while he was manager for the moving picture department of the J. B. Ford Company, and later was camera man for the All-Red Feature Film Company.

DETROIT SINGLE BAGGERS.

The Detroit News has made an arrangement with the Orpheum theater, in Flint, Mich., whereby its carriers in that city can visit that playhouse every week for the next twelve months. The boys will be given tickets good for one performance each week. The Orpheum is the home of Famous Players films in Flint. There are about 125 carriers who will participate in this weekly entertainment.

The Bijou theater, Sault Ste Marie, Mich., owned by Charles DePaul, has recently undergone complete renovating. A new front was also installed, a new screen installed, and a canopy placed over the sidewalk.

H. W. Irons has been appointed permanent manager of the Liberty theater, owned by John H. Kunsky.

Manager Blankmeyer of the Grand Circus theater, has completed plans for the remodeling of his theater. A new tile front is one of the improvements to be made, but there will be many others. The remodeling will cost about $5,000. Work will start by Aug. 1.

Bert Deiner, of the Standard Film Service Co., Peter Smith building, Detroit, says the branch broke all records for the week ending July 4, business being $500 ahead of any previous week. Mr. Deiner reports good collections, and no complaint of dull business. He is having a big trade on Keystone Chaplins, having received some new prints.

The Victor Film Service, of Detroit, has been organized to buy, sell, lease, rent and deal in films for moving picture theaters. The capital stock is $1,500, of which amount $750 has been subscribed, and $500 paid in in cash.

CAPITAL CITY ITEMS.

Johnson Hoare is reported to have sold his interests in the Scenic theater, which he recently purchased from Milton Staub, to Marceron & Frain, who also operate the Dumbarton theater.

Although against their better judgment, but to meet the competition of the neighborhood, Davis Bros., of Georgetown, D. C., are introducing a number of novelties at the Georgetown airdome, said to be the only open-air theater in this section which is roofed over. Their latest novelty is a dancing contest held in connection with county store night. The country store is held every Tuesday evening and after the stage is cleared the couples are invited to come up and give exhibitions of the one-step, fox trot, hesitation and the old fashioned waltz. The stage is 24 feet square. At the initial try-out of the scheme last Tuesday evening fifteen couples entered, the winner receiving a $5 gold piece as a prize. No prize winner is allowed to enter a succeeding contest, but at the end of the season all of the prize winners will be allowed to compete among themselves for a handsome silver trophy that is to be offered by Davis Bros.

Leon J. Bamberger, manager of the local exchange of the World Film Corporation, is offering two prizes of $5 and $2 each month to the two employees of the exchange attaining the greatest efficiency in their work. Each time an employee makes an error, or uses bad judgment in the handling of the work assigned, a black mark is placed against the offender's name. Weekly meetings of the employees are held and at each of these the black marks are openly discussed, with a view to arriving at remedies therefor. Manager Bamberger states that the employees are very enthusiastic over this scheme, which is working to the betterment of the service as a whole.

Henry E. Friedman, traveling representative of the World Film Corporation, has been placed in charge of the business in the state of North Carolina and has taken headquarters at the Bland Hotel in Raleigh. It has been found by the Washington office that there is enough present and prospective business there to warrant keeping one man continually on the scene. A great deal more can be accomplished that way than by having several men covering a larger territory and merely making spasmodic visits.

Washington theaters generously responded to the call for aid in the so-called "Baby Fan" campaign carried on here last week to secure funds for the maintenance of summer camps by the Associated Charities. At Crandall's, the Camp Good Will pictures, giving a screen portrayal of the activities there, and later these same motion pictures were exhibited at the Columbia theater, Glen Echo, while at Keith's, the Olympic and the Princess theaters, numerous lantern slides were shown. As a result of this and similar advertising and the personal solicitation of a corps of Washington women more than ten thousand fans were sold on the streets and at booths in the department stores in one day. At Poli's theater, a number of the women were permitted to go among the audiences at the several matinees during intermissions to sell the fans. All of the newspapers have commented upon the charitable attitude of the Washington exhibitors.

Bernard Debkin is reported to be doing an exceptionally good business at the Federal League baseball park, in Baltimore, where he is showing a feature program each evening.

C. H. Serrin has taken over the interest of Will Bateman in the Rhode Island theater. F. C. Mattern is the operator at that house.

Rudolph Berger, booking representative of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., is a visitor in Washington. Mr. Berger will spend several weeks in this city following which he will go to Norfolk, Va., and other southern points.

Problem of Credits

Washington, D. C., Exchanges Sending to Many Out-of-Town Exhibitors Reels of Pictures C. O. D.—Has Excited Unfavorable Comment from Some—Reasons Why Cash on Delivery Is Requisite of Film Business Explained.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A NUMBER of out-of-town exhibitors are reported to have taken exception to exchange managers sending out films C.O.D., where previous collections have been slow. To protect themselves several of the exchange managers have had printed a letter in which they call attention to the trade:

"Film rental is essentially a cash proposition—all bills are due and payable upon issuance—remittance should be made during the week the films are used."

"This applies to all exhibitors and is not meant as a reflection upon any one's credit," continues the letter, "but to eliminate outstanding balances, disputes and the necessity for extra work on the part of the accounting and auditing departments. There is still another and more important reason for this. Everything entering into the manufacture and distribution of films is a cash-in-advance proposition. Scenarios, raw material, posters, film cases, etc., must be paid for when delivered. It takes a lot of money to run the film business and we cannot pay our bills unless you pay yours.

"From your standpoint as an exhibitor you are different from any merchant or manufacturer; you do not have to buy films and let them stay on your shelf for thirty, sixty or ninety days until you effect a sale, then possibly to wait the same length of time for your money. You get your money in advance, before your patrons see the show. Therefore, there is no reason why you should not pay promptly."

In explaining that the letter is being sent to all of the customers of the exchange, it is stated that it is not felt to be a hardship upon any one and that any exhibitor who has been lax in settling for his service will see the reasonableness of the rule and will comply. "Those who should fail to comply should not take any exceptions if shipments are made C.O.D. for full amount due according to our records."

The exchange managers dislike very much being forced to take drastic measures, but it seems that with collections as slow as they are and the fact that some exhibitors are taking advantage of the opportunity for securing an extension of credit by the giving of checks, sufficient money to cover the face of which is not on deposit in the bank against which the checks are drawn, they have been driven against a stone wall and must protect the interests of their employers.

Washington exchange managers have always evidenced a desire to more than meet half way all of the exhibitors with whom they come in contact. In giving a square deal, they have asked a return thereof and have seldom failed to receive it. It has been pointed out that in several of the nearby states there are laws which cover the giving of worthless checks which invoked will lead to the discomfort of any person so involved.

VALUATION OF FILMS BY EXPRESS.

The Metro Film Service Company, Inc., is issuing instructions to exhibitors, in shipping films back to the exchange by express, to value such shipments at the minimum sum of $50; packages of paper are to be valued at $5 only. Under the working of the Cummins Amendment to the Act to Regulate Commerce, the various film exchanges have been put to an enormous expense in meeting the additional charges placed upon the valuation of each shipment.

O. J. Allenbaugh, president and manager, and L. M. Day, secretary and treasurer, of the Metro Film Service Company, Inc., of this city have gone to Atlantic City, N. J., to participate in the convention of those connected with the Metro Pictures Corporation.

WILL MAKE PICTURES AT WELLSBURG, W. VA.

Moving pictures will be produced for the first time on the Vandergrift estate in Wellsburg, W. Va., next week. This estate has been leased by the Chateau de Luxe Film Company and will be used regularly for producing motion pictures, according to a report just received here. Some of the players who will arrive during the week to participate in the productions are Marguerite Bryant, Catherine Baker, Mae Marsh, who was formerly with Griffith; Catherine Mallery, who was formerly with the Lubin Company, and Charles Kramer, formerly a Keystone comedian.

ALAN J. BACHRACH.

Alan J. Bachrach, one of the most popular of the younger theater managers of the National Capital, is about to try the other side of the film business, for he has just been appointed a traveling representative of the Washington office of the World Film Corporation and has had assigned to him the Virginia territory.

Alan J. Bachrach.

Mr. Bachrach, although not yet thirty-four years of age, has had quite a varied experience in the theatrical and motion picture business. He was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1881, and graduated from the Polytechnic Institute in that city in 1898.

The many friends of Mr. Bachrach are congratulating him and expressing a hope that he will meet with much well deserved success in his new venture. He is a very energetic young man and one whose word is always good. He is very pleasant mannered and always willing to give a lift to the other fellow. His wide experience in the motion picture business should prove of great help to him in meeting exhibitors upon their own ground.

Films in Saloons

California Picture Men Making Determined Fight Against Motion Picture Licenses in Saloons—Urging Mayor James Rolph, Jr., Not to Grant the Application of San Francisco Saloon—Same Question in Other Coast Cities.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE recent application of a Greek saloonkeeper for a combined saloon and moving picture license for a South of Market street location has met with a storm of disapproval on the part of both exhibitors and film exchange owners and through their efforts a further postponement has been secured. A committee of exhibitors has been present at each session of the Board of Police Commissioners when this question was discussed and representatives of the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade have called upon Mayor James Rolph, Jr. and urged him to use his influence in having the application held up. The Mayor took a deep interest in the matter and asked if there would be any objection to the granting of a moving picture license without the saloon privileges. He was informed that there was absolutely no objection to this but that exhibitors felt that a combined license would reflect seriously upon the moral standing of their business.

Members of the local trade have been looking into this proposition of saloons showing moving pictures and it has been ascertained that in several other Coast cities the same question is being combatted. At Portland, Ore., several saloons have been showing pictures and reports recently reached Mayor Albee that films were being shown that had not been passed by the local board of censors. The matter is being investigated and a movement is under way to compel saloons to take out a motion picture theater license fee before they will be allowed to show pictures. At San Francisco it is planned to prohibit entirely the showing of moving pictures in saloons.

Another license question that is attracting the attention of film exchange men is the proposal of the Finance Committee to the Board of Supervisors to impose a special tax upon a number of lines of business, among which is that of renting moving picture films. The Committee has made an extended list of callings that are deemed subject to license taxes but it is not believed that the matter will be given serious attention until after the municipal election this fall. Exhibitors are also interested in this matter as it is proposed to impose a license tax upon advertising curtains.

NORTH BEACH PRICE WAR.

The fight that has been on in the North Beach District of San Francisco since the opening of the new Verdi theater by Ben Michaels is being waged without cessation and profits are being entirely lost sight of. Sam Gordon, who owns the Broadway theater, recently purchased the interests of his three partners in the Liberty theater and has announced a new policy for these houses. Each five cent ticket that is sold is to be good for two admissions at one house or one admission to each of these Broadway houses. As each house regularly shows not less than seven reels of pictures this will mean that patrons will see at least fourteen reels for five cents. One of these theaters has a seating capacity of about one thousand, while the other seats six hundred, so it will be seen that they are not small, unimportant houses.

DAHNKEN VISITS NORTHWEST.

Fred Dahnken, Jr., president of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit of this city, is making a tour of inspection of the Pacific Northwest in the interest of this firm. He will visit Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and other leading cities and will not only look for available sites for the expansion of the firm's business, but will examine some of the finest theaters there to secure ideas to be incorporated in houses to be erected soon.

OPERATORS HAVE A THREADING CONTEST.

About twenty local operators recently gathered at a leading supply house to investigate the merits of various makes of machines and a threading contest was arranged, with four machines in use. William W. Lewis, an operator at one of the Government exhibits at the Exposition, set a record with a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A by taking a reel from the table, placing it in the machine and framing it properly in fourteen seconds.

FIRE FIGHTERS GIVE A MOVING PICTURE SHOW.

Local fire fighters gave an interesting moving picture show in Festival Hall on the Exposition grounds a short time ago to raise funds for the entertainment of visiting fire fighters who are to meet here in annual convention in the fall. Sid. Grauman, of the Empress theater managed the affair and almost four thousand tickets were sold. The Nicholas Power Company furnished the projection machine and this was operated by R. W. Horn, the special representative of this concern at the Exposition. The City of New York furnished a picture, "The Locked Door" and there was also a picture of the fire department on the Exposition Zone.

JEWEL CITY FLASHES.

The Harter Motion Picture Company is now located at 165 Jessie street, in the quarters formerly occupied by the Ayer Motion Picture Company.

A. W. Atwater, sales manager of the Precision Machine Company, arrived here early in July for the Convention and a visit to the Exposition.

The Sunset theater on Irving street has been reopened by Charles J. Stanley.

A Charlie Chaplin contest was held recently at the Empress theater under the direction of Sid Grauman, prizes to the extent of $500 being distributed.

T. Lloyd Haines, manager of the Atlas Educational Film Company, Pacific Building, surprised his friends by arriving here from Los Angeles with his bride, who was Miss Velma Witt, of Pasadena.

The moving pictures of the Panama Canal taken from an aeroplane by Ray Duhem and Robert Fowler and which caused the arrest of these local men, together with two others, are to be shown shortly at Festival Hall on the Exposition grounds when Aerial Navagation Day is to be celebrated. The case against the aviator and the photographer has been dismissed and the films returned.

The Majestic theater in the Mission District is making a number of improvements and a new Powers Cameragraph No. 6A has been installed by Walter Preddey.

Charles Sweeney, the popular operator at the Imperial theater, was married recently to the surprise of many friends in the local exhibiting field.

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

Extensive alterations have been completed in the Elite theater at Merced, Cal., including the addition of boxes and the perfection of a ventilating system.

Mrs Cora Johnson is having plans prepared for the erection of a concrete theater building to replace the Wonderland theater, Turlock, Calif., which was recently destroyed by fire.

The Jitney theater at Fresno, Calif., has been remodeled and numerous air shafts made in the roof, giving it all of the advantages of an open air theater, with none of the drawbacks.

J. R. Cummoch, formerly well known in California, has become a member of the staff of the Peoples Amusement Company at Portland, Ore. At one time he had charge of the Paramount interests in the Northwest.

A disastrous fire at Oroville, Calif., recently destroyed the Atkins Theater Building and an adjoining stable, with a loss that approximates $35,000.

The handsome new moving picture theater being erected at Mill Valley, Calif. by C. L Mehrton, of Berkeley, will be ready for occupancy about the first of August. It will be conducted by A. C. Papst, an exhibitor of Mill Valley and Sausalito.

Under the direction of Manager Frank Hesse motion pictures were taken recently of the crowd at the Plaza airdome, Fresno, Calif. and later in the week these were shown at this house. It is planned to cut the film in pieces after the final performance and distribute small sections to participants as souvenirs.

Contracts have been awarded for the remodeling of the front of the Farragut theater building at Vallejo, Calif. at a cost of about $2,000.

The Empress Theater Company has opened the Empress theater at Bakersfield, Calif. Two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6A have been installed and the equipment of the house is of high order. C. A. Sears is secretary and manager for the company.

The Park theater, Ben Lomond, Calif., is to be reopened after having been dark for a long time. New projection equipment has been installed by the new proprietor, H. Wilson.

The theater recently opened at Atascadero, Calif. by Emil Clark has been taken over by the Atascadero Colony and Mr. Clark has been retained as the operator.

E. J. Arkush, who conducts the Bell theater at Redwood City, Calif., plans to erect a new house there.

E. K. Thomas has disposed of the Lyric theater at San Jose, Calif. to A. L. Morse.

The Reno Amusement Company has commenced the erection of a moving picture theater at Reno, Nev. to cost about $50,000.

The Clune Film Producing Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Calif., with a capital stock of $300,000 by Theodore M. Newman, Lloyd Brown, Anna G. Brown, Edith K. Beck and L. R. Steohm.

The Fiatte Feature Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles, Calif. with a capital of $500 by H. G. Sohn, O. B. Nair and O. R. Emerson.

MORE MICHIGAN TATTLE.

By Midwest News Service.

"The Littlest Rebel" made a hit in Benton Harbor, so when the Bijou theater offered a benefit for the G. A. R. and other patriotic societies, the requests for this feature were numerous.

The Gem theater at St. John's shows pictures of home people on Mondays, thus making a strong attraction on what is often a bad night.

Con. S. Sullivan has sold the Grand theater at Calumet to Foster & Abbey.

The Family at Jackson has installed a new gold fiber screen and another machine.

T. C. Whitehead has sold the Bijou theater at Albion to George W. McGuire.

George W. Phillips, for several years connected with the musical programs at the Royal theater in Holland, is dead.

Kalamazoo Knights of Pythias showed "Damon and Pythias" at the Elite for two days.

EXHIBITOR ENTERTAINS SHRINERS.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent for Moving Picture World

MORE than 5,000 members of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and their families were guests of the Liberty theater, Spokane, Washington, July 10, 11 and 12 during their short stay in Spokane while en route to the meeting of the Imperial Council at Seattle, Wash. Many special trains carrying eastern Shriners arrived over the various transcontinental lines and the Masonic Temple was a continuous open house for the visiting pilgrims.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty, proclaimed open house for all the Shriners and their families and during the three days he estimated that more than 5,000 visited the theater. All that was necessary for admission was a Shriner fez, ribbon or uniform, and this was announced in all the advertisements of the Liberty in the local newspapers and on a large bulletin in the lobby of the theater.

The Shriners who spent Saturday in the city viewed Robert Edeson in "The Absentee," and the show on Sunday and Monday was "The Flaming Sword," featuring Lionel Barrymore and Jane Gray in the title roles. Additional to this was travel pictures.

CRUZE AND BRACY NEAR SPOKANE.

Spokane theatergoers will see two prominent moving picture actors in the flesh, when James Cruze and Sidney Bracy, stars of the "Million Dollar Mystery" serial, and other Thanhouser productions, visit Spokane on their 5,000-mile automobile tour of the United States from Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, N. J. They are scheduled to be in Spokane for one day only, Thursday, July 22, and will make their headquarters at the Liberty theater. They left New Rochelle May 15.

The two film stars are touring the country and are appearing for one day in a leading theater in each city.

Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Liberty theater, was successful in booking them for the day for the Liberty, where they will appear personally on the stage as part of the program.

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

Samuel Glasgow, commissioner of public affairs and city amusement censor, has been constituted a member of the advisory committee of the National Board of Censorship. His commission arrived several days ago. The notification came from Orrin C. Cocks, executive secretary of the board in New York City.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater, announces that he will run "The Birth of A Nation," D. W. Griffith's magnificent production, in the new Clemmer theater for three weeks starting Aug. 2. The matinee prices will be 25, 50 and 75 cents and the night prices 50, 75 cents and $1.

A. H. McMillan, manager of the Majestic theater, announces that he has just completed the second run of the "Exploits of Elaine," featuring Arnold Daly, Pearl White and Sheldon Lewis, and announces that it was a good drawing card for trade.

B. W. Copeland, manager of the Rex picture house, has just signed a contract with the Universal for their full program of first-run pictures. The first feature under this program will be "The Garden of Lies," featuring Jane Cowl in the leading role. It will be shown early in August. Pictures will be changed daily except that Thursdays and Fridays there will be a two days' program.

The serial feature, "The Broken Coin," will be run at the Rex starting July 27.

Mae Marsh in the Mutual masterpicture, "The Victim," was a box office favorite at the Lyric July 14 and 15.

Posters Cause Comment

Objectionable Lithographs Displease Censor Board—Glaring Displays Often Mislead Theater Patrons—Children Always Attracted by Posters Depicting Crime—True Photographs of Scenes from Films Recommended for Lobby Displays.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WITH the June report of the Portland censorship board, Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary, to the City Commissioners, the censor board calls attention to the practice of exhibitors of displaying in their lobbies criminal and exciting scenes often not found in the films they purport to advertise. The board decries this practice and hopes to soon have a recommendation to put before the council whereby persons who follow it will be punished.

"About the first thing an exhibitor calls for at the exchange," declares Mrs. Colwell, "is the 'paper' that goes with the picture, and too often the character of the film is lost sight of in the search for striking lithographs." The result is plenty of color in front of the house and very little inside.

It is not, however, the misleading of the public by lobby displays that is causing the comment by the censor board but rather the character of those displays. Violent and exciting scenes are very often the ones selected by the producers to advertise their pictures. Posters of these scenes are placed in the lobby where they attract the attention of children who pass by.

"Children are always attracted by lithographs depicting exciting scenes," says Mrs. Colwell, "and one often sees groups of youngsters standing in theater lobbies examining posters in minute detail." The censor board's report intimates therefore, that the film "paper" as well as the film itself should be subjected to official scrutiny before being presented to public gaze.

Mrs. Colwell suggests that lobby displays of actual photographs of scenes from the film would be a fairer way of lobby advertising than the lithographed posters.

CARL RAY VISITS.

Carl Ray, owner of a zoo in Los Angeles, and producer of feature pictures, among which is the "Vengeance of the Wild," stopped a few days in Portland on his way to Denver. Being on pleasure bent, Mr. Ray's comments appertained to Portland's wonderful scenery rather than to the picture business.

NEW FEATURE COMPANY.

F. M. and E. M. Simonton have incorporated their business under the name of the Standard Feature Film Company and to the Sawyer and Apex films for which they are the Pacific Northwest distributors, they will add feature films of merit and state right attractions.

Their first state right feature will be "Prohibition," recently acquired by them for Oregon, Washington and Idaho. This picture was privately exhibited to the press, representative ministers of Portland churches, theatrical managers, city officials and prohibition party leaders at the Globe theater Friday July 16. Mr. Simonton advises that he is receiving the support of the churches throughout his territory and of the anti-liquor people in his efforts to place the picture advantageously, and in the face of the prohibition amendments to the constitutions of Oregon and Washington which will go into effect on the first of next year, Mr. Simonton predicts big business for the feature.

ENGENE THEATER ENLARGED.

The Folly theater, Eugene, Oregon, has enlarged its building and remodelled its interior and now seats 750 people. This theater, formerly equipped with a vaudeville stage and booking pictures and vaudeville combined, has replaced the large stage with a smaller one and a screen, adding forty feet to the seating space. Pictures only will now hold the boards and the program will be distributed between Paramount, Metro and General. The improvements cost $5,000.

PATHE WEEKLY REPRESENTATIVE.

W. A. Van Scoy has been engaged by the Pathe Company as its official representative in Oregon and Southern Washington to photograph its news for the Pacific Coast edition of the Pathe News Weekly.

OREGON NOTES.

Willard Jones opened a picture house at Flavel, Oregon, at the mouth of the Columbia River and the northern terminus of the Great Northern Pacific S. S. Company's steamers, the projecting machine for the enterprise being furnished him by the Service Film Company of Portland. While Flavel itself does not have a sufficient population to support a picture house, Mr. Jones is of the opinion that the 250 men on the crew of each of the big liners together with the passengers who lay over will make the undertaking profitable.

The Bungalow theater, Seaside, Oregon, has changed its name to the National.

The Hawthorne and Gem theaters in the Portland suburbs have closed for the summer.

The Woodlawn theater, Portland, formerly conducted by W. E. Stevens, has been reopened by G. B. Metzger.

Mr. Vining, owner of the Vining theater, Ashland, Oregon, recently returned from New York City. Mr. Vining is contemplating extensive changes in his theater.

Charles Beals, manager of the Rex, Cottage Grove, Oregon, reports good business in his town. Mr. Beals is running General program.

PORTLAND PERSONALS.

As a surprise to the local film fraternity comes the announcement of the engagement of Miss Mary Damain, the charming stenographer of the General Film Company's Portland office, to Leonard Clark, also with that company. The wedding is set for some time in August. While the other bachelors in the office are grieved to lose Miss Damain and will miss Mr. Clark from the stag affairs, they are nevertheless profuse in showering their felicitations upon the engaged couple.

J. R. Cummock, the new manager of the Peoples Amusement Company's theaters, is firmly anchored in Portland now and inasmuch as he was recently joined by his wife and baby who recently came down from Seattle, the former home of the Cummocks, the indications are that Mr. Cummock will stay in Portland for a while at least.

Manager Jensen, of the Columbia theater, recently acquired by Jensen and Von Herberg, reports good business with "Scandal" as the drawing card.

C. M. Hill, road man for the World Film Corporation with headquarters in Seattle was a recent visitor in Portland. Mr. Hill reports prosperous conditions in the picture business and generally throughout the wheat belt of Eastern Oregon and Washington.

Special Programs for Free Outdoor Shows at the Hub—Bring the City with Its Political and Commercial Activities Home to Thousands Every Night—What the People Have Been Seeing—Immense Attendance Recorded.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE citizens of Boston have taken to the free outdoor moving picture shows with great vim, as is indicated by the attendance statistics of the shows during the past two weeks. The program committee directing the shows for the ten civic organizations, under whose auspices they are being run, arranged a program of special attractions during the past week This program was inaugurated on Tuesday evening at the Parkman band stand on Boston Common with "Seeing Boston Night."

The pictures which were shown at this entertainment included a look at Governor David I. Walsh at the State House, Mayor James M. Curley at City Hall, officials of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and a view of the Pilgrim Publicity Association, one of the leading advertising organizations of the country, giving its famous skyrocket cheer.

Various activities in the city, along the waterfront, a bird's eye view from the tower of the new Customshouse, park scenes, an aeroplane flight at Revere Beach and other spectacular incidents to the daily life of the metropolis were also shown.

Secretary Seymour Stone has stated that the average attendance at these shows has been between 8,000 and 10,000 nightly. He also emphasizes the fact in his report that the committee on park shows designs its program for the entertainment of adults. Other shows were given during the week at Charlestown Heights, Franklin Field, Charlesbank Playground and the First Street Playground, South Boston.

CORT MAY BE PICTURE HOUSE.

It is quite probable that the Cort theater in Park square, Boston, will pass from the legitimate to the moving picture at the opening of the coming season. This house, which has only been opened two years, will be sold at public auction at eleven o'clock on the morning of August 9, by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, as mortgagee, to satisfy a mortgage of $50,000.

It has been rumored in Boston picture circles that a combination is being formed to purchase this beautiful playhouse and convert it into a picture theater. Since the house opened the only successful show to be played there was "Peg o' My Heart." Because of Mayor Curley's censorship, the production of "Maternity" was prevented and "The Natural Law," which had opened here was ordered cut to such an extent that it was withdrawn. Now that legitimate dramas have proven not to be a financial success, it is thought that this rumored new combination will try their luck with pictures.

W. I. Nottage, counsel for the New Haven railroad, has explained that this sale follows a breach of condition of the mortgage given by the Park Square Theater Company, Inc., which owns the Cort. The mortgage was given April 20, 1914, for one year to the Exchange Trust Company and assigned by the latter to the New Haven Road. The year has expired and the principal is overdue.

The sale will be for the benefit of the railroad, but it will be subject to two other mortgages, one for $125,000 given to the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company under date of October 1, 1912, and another for $320,000 held by the Old Colony Trust Company, as trustee, on bonds issued by the theater company.

Mr. Nottage said that it is anybody's guess what will take place at the sale. If the property should be bid in for the railroad, it could be held only until a lessee could be secured, if the building was to continue as a theater, because of the law which prevents a railroad from running a theater.

The property is assessed for $450,000, of which $294,500 is on the 10,519 square feet of land and $155,500 on the building. The house was planned by John Cort, who owns and manages a chain of 70 theaters throughout the country.

OPPOSED TO SHOWS IN WEST MEDFORD, MASS.

Heated opposition to the granting of a moving picture show license in the residential section of West Medford to Robert H. Brown and William Cliggett was offered by about 125 residents of the section, at a special public hearing on the matter before Mayor Benjamin Haines.

The remonstrants were headed by former Mayor Lewis H. Lovering and his son, Frank W. Lovering, a former Boston newspaperman. Rev. Eben F. Francis, pastor of the West Medford Baptist Church, said that the project was working against the object for which the schools and the religious elements were working. Other remonstrants were the Rev. J. J. Lyons of St. Raphael's Catholic Church and Mrs. Mary T. O'Brien, president of the Medford Women's Club. The hearing continued for over three hours and after it, petitions opposed to the theater, signed by 150 persons, were submitted by the West Medford Baptist Church and by the Lyman Class to the Mayor.

Mayor Haines rendered no decision on the matter, stating that he felt unwilling to force on the residents of any section conditions to which they were opposed. It was decided to hear further from the remonstrants at a future date.

NEW FENWAY COMING ALONG.

The work on construction of the new Fenway theater at the corner of Boylston street and Massachusetts avenue, Back Bay, is progressing rapidly. If the present plans work out successfully, the house will be opened to the public on October 15.

This house is being erected by the Colonial Realty Company at a cost of $400,000. In addition to the theater there will be bowling alleys, two stores and two floors of offices. The theater will be run by the Fenway Amusement Company, of which A. Abrams is the preseident and M. F. Eisenberg is the secretary. Mr. Eisenberg will personally manage the playhouse.

The lobby of the theater will be of marble and mosaic. Every modern equipment will be used. The installation of a $15,000 organ is planned. The company operating the theater intends to operate a chain of picture houses throughout New England. They have already secured control of the Webster theater at Webster, Mass.

When the house is completed, it will have a seating capacity of 1,700 persons, with one balcony. High class features and select songs are to be used. The house is fully equipped and should the management desire to use vaudeville, it can easily be done.

TO REMODEL THE OLYMPIA AT LYNN.

The Olympia theater at Lynn, Mass., which was the first large photoplay theater in New England, has been closed in order that extensive alterations might be made. The house will reopen in September.

The remodelling plans call for a front of 160 feet long, four stories high containing six stories on the ground floor and a hotel of 37 rooms with baths on the upper floors. Italian marble columns will be placed in front of the entrance to the theater, and the six stores will be uniform in appearance, the entire front being of ornamental tapestry brick. The entire lobby will be of Italian marble. The construction of the interior of the theater itself will not be changed, but extensive redecorations will be made. The scheme of these decorations will be pale gray and gold, with high lights of red. Adjoining the lobby on the first floor will be retiring rooms for men and women and a checking room. Directly over these will be the offices of the Olympia management. A 30-ton organ will be installed over the boxes.

NEW ENGLAND JOTTINGS.

The Gloucester theater has been opened by the Olympia Theaters, Inc., with a picture program. The company also controls the Olympia theater, the vaudeville and picture house at Gloucester. The house is managed by J. P. Kincaid. S. Grant is in charge of the publicity.

Frank J. Howard, of the Olympia theaters, Inc. and family are bound for the Panama Pacific Exposition by automobile. It is expected that they will remain away for three months.

Manager Samuel Bernfield of the New England Pathe Exchange has returned from New York City, where he attended the convention of the Pathe branch managers. He announces that he will hold a monster runoff of the Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy" and "The Beloved Vagabond" featuring Edwin Arden, in Tremont Temple during the first part of August.

Manager Joseph Mack of the New Onset theater at Onset, Mass. gratuitously gave the use of his house during the past week to "The Campfire" a local social welfare organization. The proceeds of the entertainment are to be used in maintaining playgrounds for children.

Many exhibitors throughout New England will be glad to hear that Ray and Roy Townley, who have been connected with the Church Booking Agency for some time, have purchased the business, which is now being operated under the name of Townley Brothers Booking Office.

Poli's theater, at Worcester, has been closed. The management has opened the Grand theater in that city with a picture program. Fox productions are being featured.

Chandos St. John Brenon, a widely known newspaper man, and a brother of Herbert Brenon, well known director of Fox productions, spent several days of last week in Boston, as the guest of Manager Harry F. Campbell of the New England office of the Fox Film Corporation.

Manager Fred. B. Murphy of the New England United Film Service spent several days of last week in New York City on business.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Correspondent of Moving Picture World, Buffalo (229 Oxford, Av.)

JUDGE Keeler of Buffalo City Court recently sentenced a man to one year in the penetentiary for annoying a woman in a Main street moving picture theater in that city. The complainant said the man sat next to her and tried to flirt. She resented his affront and struck him a slap in the face. She then had Patrolman Tobin place the fellow under arrest. The prisoner pleaded guilty to the charge of assault in the third degree.

The Alhambra moving picture theater of Utica, N. Y., is being remodeled and will reopen in a few weeks. Patrons will be given much higher grade of pictures than before. The interior of the playhouse will be one of the most attractive and comfortable in the city.

Rowland Blaisdell, secretary and treasurer of the Empire Kriterion Film Exchange of Buffalo, is spending his vacation in New York City. Mr. Blaisdell's father is a special writer on the staff of the Moving Picture World.

Manager Byrne of the Bijou theater, Buffalo, has installed a soda fountain in the lobby of that house.

New seats are being placed in the Lyric theater, Buffalo.

The interior of the Fisher theater at Waterloo, N. Y., is being embellished. It is said the house will be one of the finest in the State.

Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, enlisted the interest of hundreds of children in a "fly-swatting" campaign. To every child who attended a show there during the week was given a swatter, and he or she became an Academy "fly cop." Five hundred flies slain with the official swatter admitted the "fly cop" to any performance. Films showing the dangers from the flies were shown.

According to a report from Perry, N. Y., A. F. Davis has gone to Erie, Pa., to install two moving picture machines in a new theater there. The report concludes as follows: "Mr. Davis is a licensed motion picture operator, having passed the examination recently held in Rochester, in which only six passed out of twenty candidates."

The tenth anniversary of Shea's theater, Buffalo, was recently celebrated with a double bill of vaudeville and moving pictures. Henry Carr, manager, and Miss Philomena Cavanaugh, press agent, were successful in attracting capacity houses during the week.

"The Heart of Maryland," a moving picture feature, with Mrs. Leslie Carter as the star, was shown to good advantage last week by Manager Marcus of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The spirit of patriotism was reflected in special decorations in the lobby and interior of the house. The Hippodrome symphony orchestra, under Mr. Marcus' general direction, played national airs during the shows. Many members of the G. A. R. and other patriotic societies witnessed the film.

Manager Moon of the Happy Hour theater, Buffalo, has resumed the General programmes, having been without that service a few weeks.

The Buffalo Enquirer had an editorial on the pleasing feature of having moving picture cars on transcontinental expresses.

Eugene Whitman, Irvin A. Whitman and the latter's three sons, Vincent, Stewart and Bernard Whitman, have formed a company that will manufacture moving picture films in Lyons, N. Y.

M. D. Gregory has opened a new moving picture theater in Highland, N. Y. "Quo Vadis" was the opening production.

George Martin, a moving picture theater manager of Yonkers, N. Y., charged with violating the new city ordinance on Sunday shows in that city, was recently discharged by Judge Beall in the Court of Special Sessions, Yonkers.

Several proprietors of moving picture theaters were included in a rush of those who paid their half yearly taxes to Vincent H. Riordan, internal revenue collector of the Buffalo district.

CENSORS IN NEW JERSEY.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CENSORS have been quite busy recently in New Jersey. The film "The Nigger" has created the most attention.

The Carlton theater wished to show the picture in Newark, and agreed to hold a private exhibition before attempting any public show. Although several changes had been made, Chief of Police Long declared he would not allow the film to be shown. The picture is now known as the "New Governor," and another modification is the scene showing the burning of the negro at the stake. The preliminaries are entirely eliminated.

On the other hand the same film has been approved in the nearby city of Bloomfield. There Mayor Frederick Sadler, several councilmen, clergymen and a number of private citizens witnessed a special performance of the picture at the Lincoln theater, on Bloomfield avenue. Several of the clergymen had objections to the film, but nevertheless permission was granted to Mr. Bratter.

Still another case of New Jersey censorship is in Madison. Harold S. Buttenheim, a member of the executive committee of the Board of Public Improvement, suggested to the board that a motion picture show be given on Friday afternoon for the children. He furthermore suggested that the pictures be first censored by a committee of the Thursday Morning Club and members of the board. In this way, Mr. Buttenheim believes that the children will see nothing but the very best educational and scenic pictures. It is proposed to give these performances for the benefit of the little ones in the town theater. The idea is receiving the attention and consideration of the board members, and whether or not it will be adopted will be known at the next meeting of the board next month.

SPIEGEL BUYS PROPERTY.

Edward Spiegel, the well-known New York theatrical man, and owner of the Strand theater in New York and the playhouse of the same name in Newark, has purchased the property at 195 Market street, next to the Newark theater. Title to the property will not pass until October. The purchase price is said to be approximately $120,000. The newly-acquired site is in the heart of the city, and consists of three stories, the second floor of which is rented by the Newark Film Exchange.

Mr. Spiegel is also owner of the Newark theater, and his purchase of the adjoining property is taken to indicate either that he will enlarge his present house or will improve the lobby entrance.

The Newark theater was, until the advent of Shubert's, the highest-classed legitimate playhouse in the city. Mr. Spiegel bought the property from the H. C. Miner estate early this year. The theatrical man would not discuss the purchase yesterday.

SUNDAY SHOWS RAIDED.

Two moving picture proprietors were arrested in Jersey City for running Sunday shows. The arrested men are: Edward Dougherty, of 52 Newark avenue, and Lewis Calitri, who owns a playhouse at 131 Brunswick street. The latter was arrested in the crusade a week previous for the same offense.

The thirty moving picture owners in Jersey City have formed the Jersey City Amusement Company, under which they will carry the fight into the courts. They threaten, unless they are allowed to remain open on Sunday, to enforce the "blue laws" to all stores in Jersey City.

CENSORS WILL BEGIN WHOLESALE PROSECUTIONS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

JOSEPH BERRIER, chief clerk of the State Board of Censors for Moving Picture Films, recently returned to Harrisburg, following an extended trip throughout western Pennsylvania and the vicinity of Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, etc., during which trip he endeavored to ascertain if the law relating to uncensored pictures is being violated.

He said that he found that in every city he visited there were scores of cases in violation of the law and that pictures that had been censored and parts ordered to be removed were being exhibited with the censored parts undisturbed.

He claims that the original picture is duplicated before objectionable parts are cut out by the censors and five duplicates are sold. The parts ordered to be removed are then cut out from the original and the emasculated film is shown in Philadelphia and other cities, where it comes under the eye of the censors when on exhibition and is found to conform with the law. The other or duplicate films, with the objectionable features still in, are sold throughout the State and placed on exhibition. Evidence is being gathered and wholesale prosecutions will be started in a short time, according to the authorities at the Capitol.

NO THAW FILMS WANTED.

Any exhibition or display of pictures portraying the features of Harry K. Thaw are strictly forbidden in the state of Pennsylvania, according to the State Board of Censors located in Philadelphia. Chief Censor Louis Breitinger is of the opinion that to exhibit his likeness would be very improper and would unduly influence the public opinion.

Local film men are greatly perturbed over this announcement, as they declare that there was absolutely nothing improper in the pictures, that they merely depicted Thaw eating a meal in his cell, talking to a friend and leaving prison. It is being planned to personally call on Mr. Breitinger and learn just why he considers the pictures of such an improper character.

H. B. KERLIN VISITS.

H. B. Kerlin, proprietor of the Family theater and the Dreamland theater, Columbia, Pa., and manager of the Kerlin Amusement Company, was recently in Philadelphia and paid a visit to the respective film supply houses in this vicinity. Mr. Kerlin announced that he is about to open a moving picture theater in Chester, Pa., and that he is of the opinion that this particular territory offers a wide field for the theatrical man.

LUBIN STUDIO ELOPEMENT.

Joseph Boyle, assistant director at the Lubin studio, 20th street and Indiana avenue, recently married Maud Douglas of the Lubin Company. In the pursuit of his daily tasks, Mr. Boyle was frequently obliged to rehearse Miss Douglas in love scenes and became so enamored in his work that he finally proposed in "reel" to her and, upon being accepted, proposed that they elope, in romantic fashion, to Elkton, Md. Miss Douglas was perfectly satisfied, so they decided on immediate action, and, with the aid of Mr. and Mrs. Crane Wilbur, who helped out the plot by conveying them to Elkton in their machine, were soon made one. Although the greatest secrecy was employed the story finally leaked out. Mr. Boyle's home address is at 2727 North 19th street.

ARTHUR JACOBSON ON GULICK'S STAFF.

The good folks of Trenton, N. J., are greatly pleased over the recent report that Arthur Jacobson, who formerly lived in that city, has been appointed to the general publicity staff of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Although only nineteen years of age, he has been everything in the moving picture game from a regular actor with the old Reliance Company to head of the players' department with the Authors' Syndicate. Under the personal guidance of Paul Gulick his friends hope that he will steadily mount the ladder of fame.

POPULAR CARL HESS.

One of the best known celebrities in the moving picture field in this vicinity is Carl Hess, proprietor of the Lehigh Palace theater, Germantown and Lehigh avenues. Mr. Hess has endeared himself to the local industry by his charming personality and his optimistic smile, which smile he wears at all times of the day. Mr. Hess is made of the material of which great men are born and has already risen high in the ranks of his profession.

HARRISBURG THEATER CLOSES.

The Colonial theater, Harrisburg, Pa., prominent vaudeville and moving picture establishment, recently closed its doors to the public and will remain so for several months to come, according to announcement made by the management. No definite reasons were assigned for the temporary closing of the theater, but it is generally supposed that the closing is a matter of business policy decided upon to prevent operation at a loss, for at this season of the year the theatrical business is very poor. The coming to Harrisburg of an International League baseball team has had a decided effect upon the attendance of the afternoon matinees at the theaters.

PHILADELPHIA GOSSIP.

With them are Sam Harris and others.

DOCTORS WANTED "TWILIGHT SLEEP" FILM BARRED.

Special to Moving Picture World by Trades Press New Orleans Correspondent.

NEW ORLEANS has had its first censorship case before a regularly authorized censorship body, and there was no censoring done, which, say the men of the industry, is to the credit of New Orleans.

The picture in question was "Twilight Sleep," the educational being toured through the country with Dr. Kurt E. Schlossingk, of the Frieburg clinic, as lecturer. The objection came from the Orleans Parish Medical Society, representatives of which body called on Mayor Behrman and asked that the picture be banned, they saying that its exhibition at this time would create a demand for a treatment which it was not always practicable to administer and which had not as yet become a matter of general practice. It was stated as a general principle in this connection that it was contrary to medical policy to disseminate to the public information which would likely create a demand for a special treatment and so deprive the physician of a free hand in a special case.

After a conference with Superintendent of Police James W. Reynolds, the mayor said that the city government was not prepared to stop a picture on grounds of any professional policy, but that if it was desired he would appoint a commission to view the picture and rule as to whether it should be censored for any cause generally recognized as sufficient.

Pursuant to this the mayor appointed five leading club women of New Orleans, persons whose views on matters of censorship are likely to have some weight, and asked them to make a report. They did and the picture was shown to big houses, matinees for women only. This case is considered by Southern film men to be of especial importance, for it is taken to indicate the calibre of brains that will be brought to bear on censorship questions, which, they understand, means that New Orleans will supply a minimum of censorship trouble.

H. M. NEWSOME VISITS.

H. M. Newsome, owner of the Amuse-U and Trianon theaters, Montgomery, was in New Orleans last week in force. With him were his family and C. R. Hartzell, organist of the "Trianon," and Mr. Hartzell's family. They spent considerable time in talking things over with the exchange managers relative to bookings, the bulk of which, for Montgomery, are made through Atlanta, and in seeing New Orleans' bigger picture houses.

Mr. Newsome called it, in speaking to the World's correspondent, a pleasure trip, but from another source, ordinarily well informed on such matters, it was stated that Mr. Newsome would likely come into the New Orleans field and that it was chiefly with this in view that the trip had been made. Newsome's "Trianon" at Montgomery is in every way a first-class house, probably on a parity with any in the South.

NEW FEATURE FILM EXCHANGE.

Paul L. Ford, well known in the South as New Orleans manager for the United Film Service, and as an exhibitor, and E. B. Smith, Mutual manager at New Orleans and later at Dallas, have formed a new feature film exchange with headquarters at New Orleans to handle big productions on Southern and semi-Southern rights. "The Escape" and "The Avenging Conscience," as well as other big Griffith productions, are among the first on their list. "After the Ball" and "Cabiria" will also be handled by the new company.

It is addressed for the present in the name of the principals, either of them, at New Orleans, the name of the firm not yet having been announced. The company will handle a number of first-class three, four and five-reel pictures. Nothing further has as yet been announced officially, but it is understood that wherever there is a picture of the first magnitude on the market Ford and Smith will be found bidding strong for it. M. W. Lawrence, until recently handling special Thanhouser releases, will be on the road for the new company.

The principals of the new releasing organization, and Mr. Lawrence, are well known throughout Southern filmdom and have a great number of friends in both the exchange and exhibiting fields so that their progress is being watched with even more than business interest. It is understood that the new company will acquire Southern rights to the entire products of two of the better known producing organizations, but this is not yet decided and will be announced at an early date.

TRADE CONDITIONS IN SOUTH.

E. Auger, Southern manager for the World Film Corporation headquarters at New Orleans, was in town a few minutes last week, en route from Atlanta to Dallas. In discussing conditions in the Gulf States which he has been over pretty thoroughly during the last few weeks, he said that Atlanta and the north of Georgia were in fair shape, but that Southern Georgia and Florida were in a bad way. He attributed this condition to the southward to financial depression resulting from cotton prices, cotton being a chief product of that part of the Georgia territory.

Florida, he said, was even worse this summer than usual, the warm season never being a money-maker there. Albabama, he said, was in fair condition and Mississippi pretty good. Louisiana is in good shape while Texas and Oklahoma on the whole are fair though pretty bad in spots. Mr. Auger said that this survey was general for the industry and not from the World viewpoint, that on the other hand his company was holding up extremely well, both against financial depression and hot weather.

Mr. Auger announced the appointment of H. R. Mason as Atlanta manager for the World. Mr. Mason was until recently handling "Cabiria" through the South and is well known. In commenting on the work of his staff Mr. Auger made especial mention of one, T. W. Chatburn, World road man for Louisiana. His words were: "Chatburn is cleaning up."

Discussing the heated season Mr. Auger said that the turn was due for August and that it was already in evidence. He said that by that time the competing attractions would either be over with or shorn of their novelty, with a consequent return to normal business.

S. T. Stephens, New Orleans manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is back on the job after attending the convention of Fox managers in New York during the early part of the month. Mr. Stephens reported a most enjoyable time and a number of things of especial interest to the exhibitors.

Miss Juanne Olivier, assistant to Mr. Stephens, on her chief's return, departed on her vacation. Miss Olivier was in charge of the Fox office during Mr. Stephens' absence and is reported to have amply justified her organization's belief in her efficiency. She doesn't look the part of an assistant manager at all, but despite her looks, which, if this weren't a trade paper, might be called excessively good looks, knows her job backwards.

The Metro Pictures Corporation, K. A. Bugbee, New Orleans manager, has one of the prettiest offices in the city, located in the Nola Bldg., Carondelet street. It is light and airy and prettily finished, which, together with the tasteful and by no means inexpensive decorations of the interior, oil paintings of stars, etcetera, is altogether pleasing.

Birmingham, from recent reports, is just about to have an exhibitors' trust. The recent combination of the Hix and Gravely and Walton Hill interests brought this about. The new company is operating the "Strand," "Alcazar" and "Plaza." The "Strand" is the newest house, one of the finest in the South, with everything up to the latest minute. Farley's "Empire" alone remains free from the combination. All the houses are showing A No. 1 pictures and getting the money.

Tax in Effect August 2

Montreal Charity Tax on Theater and Entertainment Tickets Ordered Imposed by Board of Control—Tax Boxes to Be Installed at Doors of Theaters—Picture Men Wait to See How Public Like It.

By Gerald Gallagher, Montreal Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE much-talked-of Montreal charity tax will be in effect from August 2. This was the decision arrived at at a recent meeting of the Board of Control. At the same meeting the Board voted an initial sum of $1,300 for 200 boxes, one of which will be placed at the door of each place where the tax is to be collected. The boxes will cost $5 each, will be of wood, about three feet high and of a fairly ornamental design. The rest of the appropriation will be required for incidental expenses. It was stated that no new employees will be taken on in connection with the tax.

During the meeting, the mayor remarked that the city should station a constable at each box to see that no one went in without paying the tax. The mayor, after some discussion, decided that it would not require a small amount of a policeman's time to attend to the boxes.

Apparently there will be no concerted action, either among the "legitimate" houses or picture theaters. So far as the larger theaters are concerned, it is stated that they will do nothing, but simply let the tax go into effect and watch it work itself out. Mr. Conover, manager of the Imperial, is quoted in a local paper as follows:

"I don't know whether it will go into effect—they seem at sixes and sevens at the City Hall over it. So far as I can see, the proposition could be upset, since it tries to make the theater managements collect the taxes without pay, which would be unconstitutional. I propose to just sit still. But the moving picture people are all dead against it. Why should we be singled out for this tax above any other business interests? Already we are more highly taxed than similar enterprises in any city of the size on the Continent. In any event, it is the public who will pay this tax and suffer the inconvenience of it, and it will be for the public to make their protest."

The Sunday show question now comes into this discussion, indirectly though. The city authorities know that the people want moving pictures on Sundays, and they are doing nothing to prevent them. The picture people know that the city needs money, and consequently should not seek to antagonize the authorities, provided the tax law is thoroughly constitutional and their patronage does not complain or decrease. The law is said to be unconstitutional in one respect, as Mr. Conover said above, and besides it is said that permission to make such a law should have been obtained not at Quebec, but at Ottawa. Alderman Lavergne stated recently that he and others interested in moving picture shows would apply for an injunction against the imposition of the tax. He considered the whole proposition a ridiculous one, which would not hold water if taken into court. Alderman Lavergne stated that the picture interests were organizing and would fight to the limit. As yet officials of the Exhibitors' Association do not wish to make a statement, as a decision has not been reached.

MONTREAL BREVITIES.

Mrs. Paxton, formerly local manager for the Picture Playhouse, is now connected with the Montreal branch of the Famous Players Film Service.

Geo. Tabah, of the World Film, got back in town last week from the Maritime district. He reports very good business down there.

A. Lea is temporary manager of the local Picture Playhouse office. Announcement of the permanent manager will be made later.

The local Pathe people have undertaken to go down to historic Valcartier Camp and take some film depicting military life. The scenes will be used in a local campaign to stimulate recruiting.

Allfeatures, Ltd., released a six-reel feature last week entitled "A Modern Mephisto." This is interesting inasmuch as, we are given to understand, it is unusual to release a European feature at this season.

The World man recently treated himself to a Mary Pickford week. First run in Montreal of "The Dawn of a To-Morrow" was at the New Grand. The Canada showed three of Mary's past releases, viz., "Tess of the Storm Country," "Fanchon the Cricket," and "A Good Little Devil." At both houses Miss Pickford's art was appreciated. The mother with her baby on her lap at the Canada in the North-end enjoyed herself as much as the fashionable Westmount lady at the Grand, who had her limousine waiting around the corner. Such is Mary Pickford's art, and likewise moving pictures in general.

Recent features at local houses were: World Film's, "The Moonstone," Scala; World Film's "The Face in the Moonlight," Strand; Paramount's "The Arab," Midway; Vitagraph's "Mr. Barnes of New York," Mt Royal; Paramount's "Clarissa," New Grand; Mutual's "Enoch Arden," Tivoli; Universal's "The Marble Heart," London.

Mr. McBrien, formerly manager of the Midway, is now managing the Scala theater, one of the local Mark-Brock houses.

PALACE AT ONATONNA OPENED.

By Frank H. Madison, Minnesota Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

MANAGER JONES did not have a formal opening of his new Palace theater at Onatonna, but moved in so that work of remodeling the Gem could proceed. The new building is 31 by 90 feet and is of solid concrete construction, with steel ceiling, and with the picture machine housed in a separate building at the rear. The pictures are projected upon a new gold fibre screen hung at the rear of the stage, which is twelve feet deep. The sides of the stage are artistically arranged with vines and artificial grape clusters in which electric lights are cleverly arranged, giving the stage the appearance of an immense arbor.

The ceiling is finished in flat white with a gold relief border. The main floor has a capacity of about four hundred and the gallery about a hundred.

THROUGHOUT MINNESOTA.

Since people got the motion picture habit they do not buy second-hand musical instruments, a pawn-shop man told the reporter for a Minneapolis paper.

L. G. Roesner, of the Colonial Amusement company at Winona, went on the Selig special to California. His chief purpose in going was to look over some of the leading Pacific Coast houses to get ideas for the new theater on Center street for which the location already has been selected. One objective point is the much praised Clune's house in Los Angeles.

O'Neal Brothers, of Stillwater, will erect a new motion picture theater, 50x75, at West Churchill and Fourth streets in that city. A. M. Hellweg, of Hayward, Wis., has taken a five-year lease on the house.

Peter Scholtes has given up his railroad position at Sioux City, Ia., and will devote all his time to managing his Palace theater at Ellsworth.

E. N. Hagen sold the American theater at New Ulm to S. K. Leen, who recently sold his photoplay house at Madison, S. Dak. Leen has overhauled the theater and added a five-piece orchestra.

Manager W. E. Mick, of the Lyric theater at Minneapolis, has had all his seats covered with light duck, easily removed for washing. It cost him about $400 to thus protect the summer garments of his patrons.

The Rex at Hutchinson has cut its program of three nights a week and those are devoted to serials.

Adolph and Oscar Steinbach are erecting a motion picture theater at Elk River.

The Grand at Faribault, owned by the American Amusement company, was damaged by fire.

Circus tickets, ice cream sodas, glass tumblers, coffee and tickets to its own shows are some of the premiums used by the Crystal theater at Glencoe to attract business.

An Onatonna paper seeks the most popular young lady and the Gem theater gives 100 votes with each ticket on Monday and Tuesday night, 50 at matinees and 25 at all other night shows.

Local pictures of a big wreck were featured on the Independence Day program of the Grand theater at Lake City. Other worthy holiday bills were "Othello" by the New Lyric at Northfield, and the "Battle of Gettysburg" at the Majestic in Willmar, where all old soldiers were the guests of the management.

The Norwood Amusement company has closed its picture show at Peters Hall in Norwood until fall.

As an appropriate musical feature for "The Island of Regeneration" the Strand theater at Minneapolis had Robert Hall Russell sing Hawaaian love songs in native costume. Also there were special electrical effects.

"The Christian" was a good Sunday feature at the Rex in Chisholm.

Raths & Seavolt of St. Paul are being praised by the Commercial club of that city for the excellent camera work done at the club's Fourth of July celebration.

"Prohibition" was shown at the Auditorium in Minneapolis the week of July 11 under the auspices of the Minneapolis Young People's Citizenship committee.

The Strand theater in Minneapolis has a new policy, changing programs but twice a week. The first bill begins Monday and runs five days. The last change runs only Saturday and Sunday.

The New Prague Amusement company, of New Prague, has purchased a site and will erect a new theater to be occupied by the present Savoy.

NEBRASKA NOTES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

BEN. JOHNSON, manager and part owner of the Empress theater at Fremont, has taken over the management of the Lyric theater, the pioneer motion picture house in Beatrice. The Lyric has been under the management of Hogate & McLaughlin, with whom was associated H. N. Schroeder.

Louis Wina has sold his motion picture show at Lynch to Anton Wasatko, who has moved it to the I. O. O. F. building, where he will give three shows a week.

Elmer Parks has sold his interest in the Star theater at Wynot and returned to Hartington.

C. W. Cole has purchased a half interest in the Star theater at Broken Bow.

The Empress at Omaha had the showing of the films of the Omaha Elks' Flag Day parade.

The Elite Amusement company, of Omaha, has been incorporated with capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are Ezra B. Ferris and Chester L. Mitchell.

C. P. Dummick sold the Crystal theater at Winnebago to Ed. Colligan.

George Develin, of O'Neill, has purchased the motion picture theater at Plainview from Manager Chamberlain.

Lee Hardy has purchased a motion picture show at Stratton.

Manager Carlin has opened his motion picture airdome at Spalding.

The New theater at Alliance will add 200 seats.

Charles Hoyt Laughed and the World Is Still Laughing With Him

Laugh and the world laughs with you. Charles Hoyt laughed and the whole world held its sides and shook with mirth.

Laughter is the most contagious of all human emotions. Charles Hoyt saw everything in a humorous vein. And he had that rare faculty of making others see things through his eyes.

This is what made him the greatest writer of comedies. When he wrote "A Bunch of Keys" the world roared. This comedy had a tremendous success on the speaking stage. But Essanay has created a 5-act photo-comedy that surpasses the stage production.

And there is an all-star cast. Everyone has laughed with John Slavin, June Keith and William Burress on the stage. You know what kind of fun makers they are. This will prepare you in a small measure for the photo-comedy. But not fully. For it is impossible to get a clear conception of all the riot of fun there is in it until you see it.

Book it through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE

to exhibitors is the arrangement, just perfected, whereby the Mutual Film Corporation will offer through its branches the entire output of

DAVID HORSLEY,

to include a one reel comedy release each Friday, beginning the middle of August; a two reel animal picture to be released each Saturday, beginning early in September, and a series of Mutual Masterpictures. In these productions will be used the wonderful new capable of accomplishing photographic illusions of the most startling and mystifying nature. In the animal pictures, which are absolutely new in conception, will appear the incomparable famed as the largest and most magnificent collection of performing animals extant, together with the original Bostock trainers, including Capt. Jack Bonavita. These productions will be made at the remarkably equipped new Horsley studio in Los Angeles and the Centaur Studio in Bayonne, N. J.

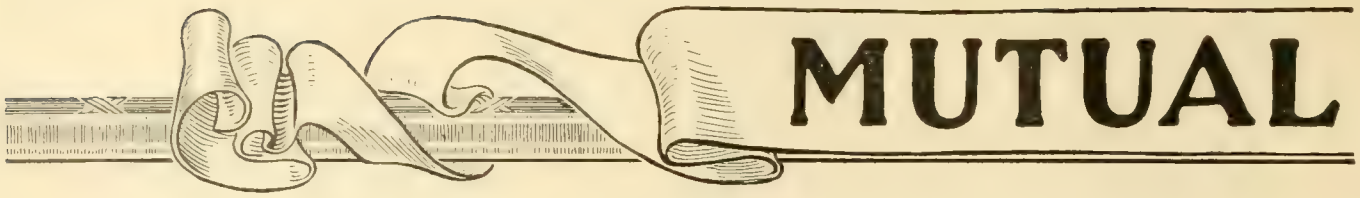
The brand names under which the Horsley productions are to be released will be announced shortly.

MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION



Announcing the Release of All David Horsley Productions on the Mutual Program

THIS announces the completion of an arrangement that brings into the Mutual Program a new brand of Mutual Movies—the productions of David Horsley. These productions will be controlled exclusively by the Mutual Film Corporation and will consist of a two reel animal feature and a one reel comedy release each week as well as Mutual Masterpictures.

Mr. Horsley is one of the best known producers in filmdom. He is the first independent film manufacturer and the inventor of numerous patented photographic devices that have marked the advancement of motion picture manufacture. With the largest and most complete studios in the East, at Bayonne, N. J., and a large, new studio at Los Angeles, the Horsley producing facilities are probably the best in America.

PROGRAM

Recently Mr. Horsley acquired the Frank C. Bostock collection of animals—the largest collection of trained animals in the world—consisting of 130 specimens of boxing kangaroos, trained ostriches, elephants, lions, tigers, leopards, pumas, dancing, skating and plunging bears, monkeys, startlingly intelligent chimpanzees, parrots and many birds of gaudy plumage, etc., etc. These animals have been trained for years by a staff of expert trainers—men and women. The entire Bostock organization has been held intact and is now owned by David Horsley.

It is planned to release a two reel animal feature every week. The releases will show feats of daring never before attempted—jungle scenes that will be entirely new to the film world. Many scenes will be made by trick photography through the use of David Horsley inventions and these will be found only on the Mutual Program. The Horsley comedy productions will include many famous comedians and will undoubtedly prove most popular.

To exhibitors this announcement indicates the sincere endeavor of the Mutual Film Corporation to provide in the Mutual Program only the best film productions—an endeavor to furnish a program so diversified and so well balanced as to assure biggest box office receipts. Announcement of release dates of the David Horsley Productions on the Mutual Program will appear soon. If you are not now using Mutual Service see your nearest Mutual Exchange at once.

An Epochal Drama in Four Acts, Entitled

"Milestones of Life"

A Tale of the Seasons

With MIGNON ANDERSON and a Star Cast including LOUISE RUTTER, the celebrated emotional actress of the speaking stage

¶ No more enthralling story has ever been told than this; of the sunshine and shadow that now enraptures, now saddens the heart of man! Of the SUMMER of life, when each bird-song is of gladsome years to come, and tomorrow is but a ripple of laughter. Of the WINTER of life, when the bird-song is hushed and the pall of the grave descends silently on the fading panorama of bitter years. ¶ Together with its symbolic beauty, this picture carries a dramatic force that fairly stuns the senses in its over-whelming truth and realism. ¶ A consistently competent cast contributes to an offering of distinctive quality.

ESSANAY.

"DREAMY DUD," HE GOES BEAR HUNTING (July 28).—(This cartoon picture is released in place of the one announced on page 707 of last week's issue. The supplanted "Dreamy Dud" picture is now scheduled for release on Aug. 4.—"Dreamy Dud" is fingering his rifle and telling Wag what a great shot he is. He aims over his shoulder and shoots his initials in the board fence. He aims at a crow in a tree but cannot kill it because the crow ducks each time he shoots and then eats the bullets as they are shot. Finally Dud gives up and determines to kill a bear. He and Wag tramp off and discover a Teddy bear which Dud chases and is about to kill when the mother bear runs out and chases Dud. He is frightened and runs into a tree. Down below the mother bear is raging and shaking the tree. Dud drops the gun and the bear picks it up, squinting into the muzzle and, pulling the trigger, killing herself. Then the old father bear hurries out and, seeing the dead mother bear, becomes wrathful and questions Dud, who is terrified in the tree still. Dud won't say much and the bear shakes him out to the ground. Dud runs away and is caught in a fence when the bear catches up to him. The bear shakes him and then he wakes up to find his mother bending over his bed telling him to wake up.

SNAKEVILLE'S TWINS (July 29).—Slippery Slim, Mustang Pete and the Henpecked Husband all buy a bottle of hair restorer from Sophie Clutts, demonstrating its marvels in the village store. The Husband fills Pete's and Slim's bottles with turpentine. It grows hair on Mustang Pete's head and makes Slippery Slim bald. The Husband returns home and his twins drink his hair restorer. He rushes them frantically back to the store to get an antidote, but is chased by the enraged Slim and Pete. They chase him up a telephone pole and are ready to grab him, when the twins throw eggs at them and scares them off.

A MAN AFRAID (Three Parts—July 31).—Ted Barham, eleven years old, is injured while playing in a barn. A blow on the head when he falls from a trapeze stuns him and deranges certain nerve centers which makes him a coward. As a man he is engaged to Austen Martin. Bayard Schnell, his rival, discovers this weakness of Ted's and induces the girl to break her engagement from "a coward." He is struck by a baseball and his mental faculties return. He saves an old man from being struck by an auto. Austen wants him to renew the engagement on learning this, but he declares he will not until he has premeditatedly performed some test of nerve. He enters an auto race. Schnell gives Ted's mechanician $500 to become ill during the race and thus incapacitate Ted. The plans work out and Ted vainly tries to locate a mechanician. Austen agrees to take the job and they are off. He is struck by a stone on the head and again experiences the crippling fear, but fights it and wins the race. Schnell's treachery is discovered and Austen again takes Ted's ring.

THE KISS (Aug. 2).—Reluctantly, Lady Joyce consents to allow Simeon Kenley to paint her portrait. And then on meeting and posing for the artist, accompanied by the Duchess, she is pleased with him and snubs the Duke of Rosemont, to the horror of the Duchess. She and the Duchess have a "squabble" over the Duke, she leaves, goes to the artist's suite and asks him to marry her. He does. Two years pass and Lady Joyce has become sick of the poverty of a struggling artist. She leaves him with Arthur Kane, and five years pass. The Duchess is about to die and craves a sight of her daughter before she passes away. Believing she and Simeon are still together, she advises him to bring her. He makes an appeal to Lady Joyce and together they go to the Duchess where her death brings them together again.

BUSINESS RIVALS (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 3).—Upon learning that the wealthy Primrose McFarland is to give a birthday party and display the famous family jewels, assisted by her two old maid sisters, Braga, an international crook, plans to attend the affair and discover the identity of the rival crook who has been spoiling all his thieving plans. Dominica pledges to assist him and succeeds in engaging herself as a singer for the event. The night of the party Braga enters the house, disguised as a maitre d'hotel, having made love to the maid in order to get this chance. He hides in a chest in the lower hall while Dominica is singing at the piano. Dominica discovers their rival thief, LeGrand, an ex-police official, acting as a table assistant. The party is over, Braga is still hiding in the chest and LeGrand has not succeeded in procuring the jewels yet. Young McFarland, nephew of the rich spinster, takes the jewels under his arm, planning to deposit them in the safe deposit vault in the morning. LeGrand follows. In the meantime Dominica has disguised as an Italian street singer boy and waits for Braga. McFarland is attacked by LeGrand, but Dominica warns him in time. After a fierce struggle McFarland breaks loose and LeGrand flees, with Dominica lying wounded on the ground. McFarland takes her home in a taxicab. The next morning Braga, defeated and fearful of the police, advises that the two break up for a while for safety's sake. Dominica renounces him as a coward and orders him from her suite. He goes.

EYES THAT SEE NOT (Special—Three Parts—Aug. 7).—Ralph Morgan secures a position as private secretary to Adam Bell. Mrs. Venn, a rich widow, and Bell are in love, but desire to keep their engagement secret until Bell's daughter is married. Dorothy and father quarrel when he demands that she attend a week-end party at Mrs. Venn's home. In the meantime Bell gives Ralph a letter to deliver which advises Bell's agents to sell three thousand shares of a certain stock. He meets with Dorothy and forgets his important errand until the stock exchange has closed. Later Ralph confesses that he neglected to reach the stock exchange in time and expects to be discharged. Bell laughingly tells him that the failure to deliver the note netted him $40,000, as the stock had gone up. Bell explodes when Ralph says that he wants to marry the daughter—and raves until Mrs. Venn walks in and gives their own love affair away. Dorothy is with her and congratulations follow.

BIOGRAPH.

LOVE'S RESCUE (Aug. 2).—Roberta Winthrop and her father are at their country residence when Mr. Winthrop decides to advertise for a secretary. A gang of crooks see the advertisement, know Winthrop has money, and determine to take advantage of the opening. One of the gang is detailed to apply for the position, and Winthrop appoints him secretary. But he falls in love with Roberta, and he puts off the robbery until a sharp letter from the gang reminds him that he had better get busy. That afternoon Mr. Winthrop goes to the country club, and the crook robs the safe. He is surprised by the housekeeper. He locks her in a closet and makes his escape from the house. Roberta has gone to her favorite spot—the top of a cliff. From this lookout she espies him hurrying to town. He hears her calling him and looks up in time to see her lose her balance and fall from the cliff. Forgetting his original purpose, he picks her up and carries her home, releases the housekeeper, and runs for a doctor. During his absence the housekeeper finds the wallet containing the money he has stolen and replaces the money in the safe. Roberta recovers, and the crook, regenerated by love, is accepted as her lover.

JANE EYRE (Special—Three Parts—Aug. 4).—Rochester, a young Englishman touring the West Indies, meets Bertha Mason, a beautiful girl, in Spanish Town, Jamaica. The courtship ends speedily in marriage. After the wedding Rochester makes the horrible discovery that his bride's mother is demented; and later, by chance, her brother learns that she has inherited the taint. Rochester, crushed by the realization, brings his unfortunate wife to England and establishes her in his ancestral home, under care of a nurse who secretly indulges in drink. He has a young ward, Adele, for whom he engages a governess—Jane Eyre. Rochester falls in love with Jane and asks her to be his wife. Learning from his lawyer that English law does not recognize his wife's lunacy as ground for divorce, he resolves to keep her existence a secret and to marry Jane, trusting to the future for justification. But fate, in the person of Jane's cousin, intervenes and the ceremony is interrupted. Rochester endeavors to justify himself, but Jane will not hear him and determines to go out of his life. Shortly after she has left the house, Bertha contrives to bind the nurse and, with a candle, sets fire to the house. Rochester saves Adele and the nurse, but is himself overcome and rescued by his groom. The fire blinds him Bertha with a maniacal scream plunges from the roof of the blazing building and is killed. Jane learns of the tragedy and, returning filled with pity for Rochester, brings him the consolation he needs.

THE FIXER (Aug. 5).—The lonely girl had no beau and it seemed as though her life was dedicated to patching up the quarrels and little differences between her friends. Did the maid quarrel with her sweetheart, the Fixer soon smoothed the way to reconciliation. Little children would fall out at play, refusing their nurse's good offices as mediator; but the Fixer knew how to adjust matters. Then Marie Hill wrote asking Edith to mend the quarrel with her sweetheart, Jack. The Fixer, however, thought this a bit too much. In a polite note she informed Marie that she was done with mending other people's affairs, and would somehow find a sweetheart of her own to quarrel with. Romance fluttered his wings as Edith walked down the street. A footpad snatched her purse; enter a brave cavalier who duly rescued the lady, then offered to escort her home. At last she had a beau! But when they came to the house Marie Hill was waiting. The maid had forgotten to give her the note. The handsome stranger and Marie looked at each other and rushed into each other's arms. Edith was too good-looking for Marie to take undue risks of losing Jack merely on account of a little tiff. So the Fixer did not get a sweetheart after all. But later who knows?

HER MOTHER'S OATH (Aug. 6—Biograph Re-issue No. 90).—"May God strike my mother blind if I ever speak to that man again!" This relentless prayer the girl repeated when the infuriated woman bade her choose between home and lover. All her life the girl had been dominated, her only consolation the rigid teachings of the church. Then love had come in the guise of a handsome actor traveling with a medicine show. She obeyed her mother then, but finally love triumphed, and she ran away with her sweetheart. Her mother, refusing fanatically to hear the letter which the girl sent back to the preacher, dropped a kerosene lamp and was blinded by the explosion. Later she felt the clutch of poverty. By accident she came near falling into an open well. The freak of chance suggested a way out of her misery of body and soul. Just as she was about to execute her grim purpose, the runaways reached her side. Perhaps because she had been so close to death, she suddenly saw, with inward eyes, life in its true colors. Love had triumphed.

FREDERICK HOLMES' WARD (Aug. 7).—Ready to start on a yachting trip, Frederick Holmes, a wealthy bachelor, is perturbed by the receipt of a letter informing him that Alice Down, a young girl whom he has never seen, has been entrusted to his care. Unwilling to postpone his trip, he arranges for the housekeeper to take care of Alice during his absence, and joins his friends. Alice, becoming lonely in her guardian's big home, accepts the invitation of school friends to spend a week at the beach. Holmes' yacht puts in at the same place, and he meets his ward unconventionally. Following her to the house, he overhears her playing a delightful melody on the piano. At a second meeting, on the beach, he introduces himself. She flees in panic, and, abruptly terminating her visit, returns home. Holmes, oppressed by loneliness, now that she is gone, cuts short his cruise and returns home. Alice, hearing him arrive, sits down to the piano and plays the air he knows. In the flood of recollection thus aroused, their meeting is charmingly effected; and Holmes realizes that he has found, not a ward, but a wife.

THE SMOULDERING (Special—Two Parts—July 12).—Rachel St. John, aged and haggard, is the victim of drugs. Gerald Strathmore, who does not know that he is the adopted son of Dr. and Mrs. Strathmore, is happy in his luxurious home. He loves Dorothy Vincent. Dorothy's mother, however, favors Homer, as her daughter's suitor. Mrs. Vincent receives an anonymous note, stating: "Before the wedding of your daughter Dorothy to Gerald Strathmore, would it not be well to discover the social status of this adopted son—a little secret that has been well guarded?" The crafty Homer is pleased at the reception which this note receives at the hands of Mrs. Vincent.

Mrs. Vincent informs Mrs. Strathmore that it will be necessary that Gerald's real mother reveal herself and meet his fiancee and friends at Dorothy's pre-nuptial party. In the tenement room Rachel's mind reverts back to the time when she told Mrs. Strathmore that she was going away alone to fight the battle, and that if she failed Gerald must never know. As the memory of her little boy returns, she is unable to stand the loneliness longer and she calls at Dr. Strathmore's office demanding to see her son again. The doctor hides Rachel behind a screen and there she views her son who is ignorant of her presence. Dr. and Mrs. Strathmore tell Rachel that she must not sacrifice her boy's future and they urge her to leave the city before Mrs. Vincent knows of her identity.

When Gerald calls at the Vincent home, Mrs. Vincent speaks to him coldly. She says: "It is my duty to tell you that you are only an adopted son. We must know the real parentage of the man whom Dorothy marries." When Gerald appeals to Dr. Strathmore he is told that he is not the Doctor's son. When Mrs. Strathmore calls upon Mrs. Vincent, she is handed a note, which reads: "Gerald's mother accepts your kind invitation to be present at the pre-nuptial fete." Mrs. Strathmore starts in surprise, but recovers herself and hands back the note. When Dr. Strathmore seeks Rachel in her tenement, he discovers that she has disappeared. On the night of Dorothy's party, Rachel appears in a splendid evening gown. Again she is the lady of affairs. She passes through the ordeal of the evening with sheer will power and intense desire to save Gerald's name and position. Every hour without the drug is swiftly shortening Rachel's life, but she makes the sacrifice. Rachel returns to her tenement. Weak and frantic for the drug, yet she dashes the bottle from her, and as crazed fancies seize her brain, she again sees Gerald. Then the spirits of Dorothy and Gerald appear and gaze at her with love.

LIVES OF THE JUNGLE (Jungle Zoo—Wild Animal Picture—July 17).—John McLean, an African farmer, unconscious on his sick bed, is cared for by Annie, his daughter, who also cares for Jean, her little brother. Kaffirs say that McLean is afflicted with the Blackwater fever, and they desert him. While Jean is playing with a leopard cub, his sister tells him that she is going to the Mission to get medicine.

Charles Holden is hunting near the McLean home. Annie penetrates the jungle enroute to the Mission, where she encounters a lion, but escapes. She becomes lost and is captured by natives. Lodja, the chief, is struck by Annie's beauty. Holden and his hunters enter the McLean home and find that McLean's fever has broken and that he has improved. Jean tells the hunters of his sister leaving for the Mission. They start in search for her, track her to the native village where she is rescued just in time from the clutches of the native chief.

THE HEART OF PARO (Jungle Zoo Wild Animal Picture—July 24).—Paro, a half-breed Indian, overcome with liquor, encounters Grace, the pretty daughter of James Lathrop, a mine owner. She is sorry for his condition and gives him a cross of black jet. Dick Graham is a ne'er-do-well, who has been sheep raising in the Dick and Grace escape, and Lathrop and his men shoot Paro, believing that he is the guilty man. They find a jet cross in Paro's clutched hand.

VITAGRAPH.

THE SERPENT'S TOOTH (Aug. 2).—Amateur dental operations, anaesthetics and the "Society of the Serpent's Tooth" all help Cutey to win his bride and effectually silence her Pa's objections to the match.

THE SCAR (Aug. 3).—In spite of the terrifying accumulation of evidence against him, John Morton, found guilty of murder in the first degree, was saved from the chair by a witness recognizing on the victim's hand a peculiar scar. This, in brief, is the story of Vitagraph's coming three-part feature, "The Scar." A remarkable tale is unfolded of how the cocaine-crazed assassin had tried to cover up his crime and fasten it on another. After a wonderfully emotional scene in the court room, the murderer is landed in a cell to await the time when he shall walk through the little green door, while the prisoner is freed and reunited with his loved ones.

THE REPENTANCE OF DR. BLINN (Aug. 4).—A doctor's first law is to save life. The disregarding of this law results in the mother's death, but the child lives to claim a full and terrible retribution.

A DISCIPLE OF PLATO (Aug. 5).—The starving poet flirts with the chef's wife and is heartily sorry for it. After some startling funny adventures, a tragedy is avoided by the poet confessing he was in love with the chef's cooking and not his wife.

DIMPLES AND THE RING (Aug. 6).—Hugh steals the cup Lillian worked so hard to win, but his ring gives him away. She steals the cup back again and her dimples betray her. Both exclaim: "You burglar!" then they go and get married.

PAT HOGAN, DECEASED (Aug. 7). Wouldn't it make you sore if you were shipwrecked, had suffered innumerable hardships, and returned to the old home, only to find your "widow" counting the insurance money and preparing to marry your faithless friend, who had faked up a report of your death. Pat busts up the show right then and there, proving he is anything but a dead one. Before he gets through, the plate looks as though a 42-centimeter had hit it. Faithless Mike gets left altogether, for Kate, who saved him from a beating, scorns his love.

THE UNFINISHED PORTRAIT (Special—Two Parts—July 26).—Wiliam Evans, a business man, and his wife, Rose, live in happiness. In order to surprise and please her husband, Rose sits for a portrait by Guy D'Arcy, a well-known artist. The firm which employs Evans, is annoyed because of trouble in the European branch office and Evans is ordered to leave at once for London, England. He returns to his home at an unexpected hour. He calls for his wife but she cannot be found. He mounts the stairs. Mrs. Evans, sitting for the artist, hears the call and the approaching footsteps of her husband. She resolves to keep the fact that her portrait is being painted a secret, and is loath to spoil the surprise planned for her husband.

When Evans enters the room he finds his wife in the company of a strange man. He demands an explanation and it is not forthcoming. Jealousy seizes the husband and the happy home is broken up. Evans goes to Europe, and his wife endeavors to earn her own living. She lives in poverty. A country girl, coming to the city, finds its obstacles too great for her to surmount and she takes her life. Her dead body is mistaken for that of Rose Evans. When Evans returns from Europe he is told his wife is dead. Too late he realizes what he has lost. He again encounters the artist, and is shown his wife's unfinished portrait. He orders the artist to seek a prototype of his wife. The artist encounters Rose Evans. He takes her to the studio to pose for the unfinished portrait. As she sits there her husband comes. He recognizes his wife and as he rushes to her side he is horrified to find that she has died. Privations have caused her life to suddenly end.

THE CHILD, THE DOG AND THE VILLAIN (July 27).—John Temple, owner of the Eagle Mining Company, decides to close down the mine and posts a notification to that effect. Pedro Alvarez, foreman of the mine, kicks a tramp named Burns out of the saloon. He has noticed the notification posted by Temple and incites the miners to riot. Temple refuses to negotiate with them. Burnes, the tramp, weak from hunger, falls exhausted in front of Temple's home, and is cared for by Mrs. Temple.

Alvarez and his gang overpower Temple in his office and leave to blow up the mine. Burnes finds Temple bound and frees him. Temple's little girl has wandered away in search of her dog. Alvarez encounters the child and decides to kidnap her, but the dog saves the child. Temple telephones for the sheriff, who arrives just in time to capture the outlaws. The tramp is given a good position in the mines by Temple.

JIMMY (July 28). Jimmy Hennessy, a keen witted lad of the slums, is trying manfully to fend the wolf from the door of his bed-ridden mother on the meagre wage of a messenger boy. Rose Hargreaves and Jack Peabody, a very likeable young couple, have had a sweetheart's quarrel. Rose decides to break her engagement to Jack. She summons a messenger to return Jack her ring. Jimmy, as a messenger boy, responds to the summons. His precocious nature readily discerns the trouble existing between the estranged pair, and in his boyish frank manner and slang laden expressions, proceeds to re-unite the alienated couple. His methods of effecting this result are ingenious. He is successful, but not until a flying ambulance has made a life cripple of the little messenger of peace.

THE ISLE OF CONTENT (Special—Three Parts—July 29).—Captain Spragot, blown out of his course, sights an unchartered island. He goes ashore and the island is so beautiful that he marks it on his chart. The Captain has promised his wife that this is to be his last voyage, but on his return the ship owners make him such a tempting offer that he signs a contract to make just one more trip. He so informs his wife and his little daughter Jane, aged five years, and there is a stormy scene between husband and wife. As the Captain leaves the house, John Western, a friend, enters. He is secretly in love with the Captain's wife and she tells him that she will give her answer to his plea the day the Captain sails. On the day of sailing Captain Spragot's wife pleads with him to remain home. He refuses. Then it is that the wife agrees to leave with Western.

Remorse overtakes the Captain on the deck of his ship and he returns home. Just as he arrives he meets his wife leaving with Western. Seizing his little daughter, Captain Spragot drives Western and the woman away. With his little daughter the Captain sets sail for his island. There he sends the boat on to her destination and decides to remain on the island forever. Jane, in the years that pass, becomes a beautiful girl. She discovers some diamonds buried in blue clay, but her father orders her to destroy them telling her they will bring her nothing but unhappiness. Ralph Ashton, a young society man, loses his inheritance and ships on a vessel as steward. He is a victim of shipwreck and is washed ashore on the island of Content. Jane, whose father has died, discovers the body and drags it ashore. They live alone on the island for a year and learn to love each other.

One day in looking for an old coat, Ralph discovers the bag of diamonds. Until this time he has been contented, but from now on his one desire is to escape with the wealth. He spends hours watching for ships, and trying to polish the diamonds. Too late, Jane realizes that her father's words were partly true. Ralph neglects Jane. Then one day Ralph's signal is seen and they are rescued by a passing ship. While Ralph is overjoyed and mingles with the officers, Jane, unobserved, steals from the cabin and leaning over the stern, watches her beloved island disappear from view. The diamonds bring a small fortune to Jane and Ralph, who are now married. Jane cannot adjust herself to changed circumstances, and Ralph seeks for more congenial company. He becomes fascinated with Rosett Van Nott. Jane overhears the woman and her husband planning to elope. Jane is urged to secure a divorce, but refuses. Jane plots with a sea captain in an endeavor to save her husband. One night Ralph is overcome by assailants and chloroformed. He is taken aboard ship where Jane is anticipating his arrival. Ralph is kept drugged until the old Island is reached when he is carried ashore and placed in the old hut. When Ralph recovers consciousness he finds himself again on the Island of Content. He seeks Jane; his face softens and he holds out his arms to her.

THE QUEST (Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal Picture July 31). Chara, an East Indian boy, and his father, Dasa, a Rajah, mourn the loss of Sinda, Chara's mother. Chara is told that his mother has gone on a long journey and he is puzzled why she did not take him along. Kjast, an envoy, brings word to Dasa that the province is in a grip of famine and that the people are desperate. Chara secures a pet elephant and tells the elephant: "We are going to find my mother." Dasa, discovering the disappearance of his boy, institutes a search for him. Weeks later searchers tell Dasa that they could not find any trace of Chara.

John Hammond, American Consul and his wife, Rose, see Chara being flogged. Hammond offers to buy the boy. Months later Chara has learned enough English to tell the Hammonds of his home and he outlines his adventures. Khasi, and Rose gives Chara a ring, saying: "When you are safe in your father's home send me back this ring so that I will know all is well." Months later she receives a valuable silver box containing the ring and also a note written in a child's hand, which says: "With my heart's love—Chara."

MYSTERIES OF THE GRAND HOTEL (Installment No. 3, "The Secret Code" Two Parts—Aug. 4).—Who was Mrs. Holden's assailant, and why was she drugged? Who was the man found bound and gagged in her apartment at the Grand Hotel. Francis Ballou and Jack Hilton, house detectives, are utterly unable to solve the mystery. Later that day, Francis and Hilton enter Mrs. Holden's room during her absence, in search of clues. The two discover a push-button from which wires run to the floor above. Mrs. Holden returns unexpectedly and surprises the detectives. In spite of her remonstrances, Francis presses the button. Three sharp knocks come from above in reply. A few minutes later Manning enters the room and is made captive by the two sleuths.

Francis and Hilton allow Mrs. Holden and Manning their freedom after the latter promise to explain everything by midnight. At 11 o'clock the detectives, waiting in Mrs. Holden's room, hear a shot upstairs. Hilton dashes out into the hall in time to capture a man of foreign appearance. Followed by Manning, Hilton brings his prisoner into Mrs. Holden's apartment. It appears that the foreigner is none other than Pasca, a foreign agent who has succeeded in stealing the U. S. Government's secret code, and topped this with an attempt to get the key to the code. Under the impression that Mrs. Holden had it, he drugged her and overpowered Clinton, who was with her at the time. The two were agents of the Secret Service. Failing to obtain the key, Pasca daringly attacked Manning, who was also an agent, and thus brought about his own capture by Hilton. Capt. Bradshaw, an official of the Secret Service, arrives and confirms his agents' story. Pasca is placed under arrest.

THE MAKER OF DREAMS (Special—Three Parts—Broadway Favorites—Aug. 2).—It is Mrs. Merwin's desire that her son, Harold, marry Rena, an heiress. To this end, she gives a week-end party in the heiress' honor. Harold, of a studious nature, finds himself unable to stand the the chatter of the guests and strikes out towards the woods. Attracted by the music, Lorna approaches the mansion. Harold is amazed to see the girl break into a dance, beautiful in its wildness. Discovering her audience, Lorna flees. Harold overtakes the girl of the woods just as she reaches her cabin. In the days which follow, the two fall deeply in love with each other.

Mrs. Merwin is horrified when she discovers what has occurred. Meeting Lorna, she succeeds in making the girl believe that Harold's future absolutely demands that he marry Rena. Unaware of her interview with his mother, Harold is thunderstruck when Lorna breaks their engagement. Filled with rage and pique, the boy makes Rena his bride. The shock drives Lorna insane. The ignorant settlers gradually come to regard her as a witch-woman. Neal, Harold's son, bears a remarkable resemblance to the father. The latter has never forgotten Lorna and when Neal announces his intention of marrying Josie, a poor girl, Harold endeavors to help the boy win Rena's consent.

Neal and Josie elope, going to the old Merwin mansion to spend their honeymoon. Lorna, a withered hag, sees Neal. Mistaking him for Harold, she frantically tells him that she has loved him all along. Neal, however, spurns her. Wild with rage, Lorna later captures Josie and is about to kill her when Neal saves his bride's life in the nick of time. Harold and Rena follow Neal to the mansion. Thus the old sweethearts again meet. It brings Lorna to sanity. The shock of all she had endured is too great for the old woman and she dies in the arms of the man she loves.

THE HYPNOTIC MONKEY (Ham and Bud Comedy—Aug. 5).—After being chased all over the park by a policeman Ham and Bud finally find a quiet spot and drop into slumber. Bud, however, awakens when Pasquale, his daughter Rosa and their monkey pass the spot. While Pasquale sits down to rest himself, Bud and Rosa take a walk. Ham dreams that he and Bud see a hypnotist performing wonderful feats. At Ham's request, the hypnotist turns Bud into a monkey, and then back to his human form. Ham learns the trick and changes his pal into a monkey, but finds himself unable to bring him back to his normal self. Weeping bitter tears, Ham leads the monk away on a string.

Just at this time, Pasquale's monk escapes from its master and wanders over to Ham. Waking up, Ham sees the animal sitting where Bud had been. Sure that his dream has come true, Ham is heart broken. He vainly tries to turn the monkey into Bud. Pasquale wakes up and looks for his pet. Seeing the animal in Ham's possession, he tries to get it back. Ham, however, is willing to fight for "Bud" to the death. Just as the two men are about to engage in mortal combat, Rosa and Bud come tripping back. Ham takes a good look at Bud and then lets his eyes wander to the monk. His great grief melts into rage. Bud flees for his life, with Ham close behind. The former jumps into a rowboat and pulls from shore. Determined to catch Bud, Ham leaps into the lake and swims after his prey.

FOR HIGH STAKES (Special—Two Parts—Aug. 6).—Although Flint informs Lord Morey that his daughter Marguerite shall marry none other than a hard-working American, the Englishman determines to follow his sweetheart to the United States. "American" Joe, a crook who seeks to escape to this country, sees Lord Morey. The remarkable resemblance he bears to the Englishman gives him a daring idea. Simms, a Scotland Yard detective on the crook's trail, sees "American" Joe board the vessel and follows him. The crook stows himself away. Simms, seeing Lord Morey, mistakes him for his quarry. At the same time, the real crook, by bribing one of the stewards, obtains accommodations and succeeds in stealing some of the lord's clothes.

Upon the vessel's arrival at New York, "American" Joe, seeing a fortune within his grasp by kidnapping Marguerite, actually palms himself off as his titled double and entices the girl into a closed taxi. Not until she is in the rendezvous of the gang of international crooks, of which her captor is a member, does she realize her predicament. At the same time, the members of Joe's band meet Lord Morey at the pier. Mistaking him for the crook, they carry him away with them to their rendezvous. They learn of their error when confronted by the real crook and thrust the nobleman into the secret room in which Marguerite is confined.

Driven frantic by his daughter's disappearance, Flint endeavors to locate her. Simms and the city police help him. "American" Joe foolishly ventures into the room where his victims are confined and is overpowered by Lord Morey, who takes his pistol from him. A daring ruse enables the nobleman and Marguerite to capture the rest of the band, one by one. By this time Flint and the police have trailed their quarry to the rendezvous. Prepared for the worst, they break into the house—to find Lord Morey and Marguerite calmly guarding their prisoners. Convinced that the Englishman is made of the right metal, Flint consents to his marriage to Marguerite.

THE SUBSTITUTE FIREMAN (Episode No. 20, "Hazards of Helen" Aug. 7).—A warm friendship springs up between Quirkly and Helen, when the fireman saves the girl's life. In his desire to be near Helen, Quirkly obtains a room in the house where the girl telegrapher boards. Badger, a crook, stopping in the same house, learns that Quirkly is in the habit of carrying his savings in a bag suspended from his neck. Entering the room with a confederate, Badger chloroforms the fireman and steals the money. Helen hears the noise of the struggle, but comes too late to apprehend the crooks.

A callboy appears bearing a message which orders Quirkly to take Freight No. 8 out at once. Knowing that it would mean the fireman's dismissal if he fails to report, Helen daringly determines to take his place. Donning a suit of overalls and a cap, the girl reports to the engine of No. 8. Badger and his pal climb aboard the freight in their effort to escape with their ill-gotten loot. Helen sees the men peering over the top of the tender. Determined to bring about their capture, the girl waits until she is unobserved and then climbs, hand-over-hand, along the side of the tender until she confronts the crooks. The men promptly endeavor to throw the brave girl off the speeding train. Her shouts are heard, however, then the train crew comes to the rescue. Badger and his pal are subdued and placed under arrest.

the friend of the force. The attention of the officers distracted, Jerry escapes. Sergeant Kelly calls on Betty, who as kitchen mistress prepares an inviting repast. In the midst of her preparations Lieut. Kirby, another admirer, calls. The Sergeant secretes himself in a refrigerator and when Betty's mistress enters, Lieut. Kelly also hastily seeks shelter—but in the pantry which contains the water heater.

Mrs. Goodrich, taking note of the spread, instructs her husband to reprove Betty, who bursts into tears. Sympathetically, Goodrich takes Betty into his arms just as his wife enters. A tiff follows, ending with Betty being sent to her room, while husband and wife adjourn to another room to continue their argument. Jerry, fleeing from an officer, enters the kitchen. He discovers Kelly in the refrigerator, now frozen, and the Lieutenant, now afire. The butler enters, sizes up the situation, then hastily exits to inform his master, while Jerry, fearful of being caught, rushes away into Betty's room where Mrs. Goodrich finds him with the bewildered girl. Betty then faints. Jerry carries her to the most convenient room, which happens to be Mr. Goodrich's, and has had just time enough to deposit his burden and to hide when Mr. Goodrich enters, followed by his wife. Betty's presence again causes trouble, but this time not for long, for Jerry is captured and taken off to jail, while Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich patch up their differences.

LUBIN.

THE TAUNT (August 2).—William Kelcey, ex-bank cashier, who has served three years for burglary and is down and out, comes begging to the house of Fred Mack, a broker. He is greatly startled when he sees Florence, Mack's wife. She gives him a coat of her husband's, after admonishing the maid never to admit beggars to the house again. Kelcey finds an important paper in the coat pocket proving that Mack was a former workman in the factory which made the safe Kelcey was accused of robbing, and that Mack knew a combination to open the safe at all times. Kelcey goes to Mack and tells him he can prove that he (Mack) was the real criminal, and demands $100,000 for silence. Mack pleads that he hasn't that much money, but Kelcey tells him he can get it by robbing the safe, as he did before. Kelcey then fixes a meeting place for that night, and leaves.

Mack's mind goes back to the past. As Alfred McCormack, a skilful workman, he longed for riches, and so he fixed the safe, and went to the town where it was installed. He met Florence, who was then Kelcey's sweetheart, and fell in love with her. After he robbed the safe, he carefully placed evidence against Kelcey, and the latter was convicted. Afterward Mack courted her ardently, and they were married. Mack comes back to the present. He takes a revolver, ready to kill Kelcey that night in some dark place. But this plan is disposed of when Kelcey shows him a copy of a letter he mailed to a friend that afternoon. The letter reads: "I have good reason to believe that an attempt will be made upon my life, so if I do not appear within three days to claim the enclosed sealed envelope, kindly turn it over to the proper authorities. It contains the name and history of the man I fear." Mack, chagrined, can do nothing but carry out Kelcey's plan. He overcomes the watchman at the bank, and with Kelcey standing by, opens the safe. Then he turns to face the bank officials and detectives. Kelcey says: "You see, gentlemen, who robbed the safe three years ago!" Mack has fallen very neatly into the trap laid by Kelcey, for the latter has never forgotten how Florence denounced him when he (Kelcey) was convicted, and this is his revenge. And when Florence apologizes or her hasty action in the past, Kelcey is fully satisfied.

THE RAKOON HOSE COMPANY (August 3).—Mattie, the belle of Ethiopia, is very much sought after, but she is loved by John, the fireman, and while John is an honest man and has a regular job, he hasn't the fine clothes and the smooth tongue that has Rastus, the town sport. But when Rastus attempts to steal her away from him, John gives chase and after locating them at the meeting house he gives Rastus the most exciting time of his life, finally chasing Rastus to an old abondoned hut, and with the aid of a bomb sets the hut on fire.

John's fire department answers the call of fire, but when John tells them the circumstances they walk away and let it burn. At this point, Mattie comes to the rescue of the unfortunate Rastus and pleads with John to release him. John finally succumbs and demands of Mattie to take her choice. She, of course, chooses John, and Rastus is given one long hour to leave town.

A ONE-REEL FEATURE (August 3).—A cartoon depicting the interior of a motion picture theater.

COUNTRY BLOOD (Special—Two Parts—August 4).—Sadie Tully, while not the belle of the village, is loved by honest Ben, who drives the village hack. Ben buys Sadie all the custard pie she wants and Sadie certainly loves it. Ben starts to build a home and everything is going nicely. Then along comes Rudolf, a rich art student from the city, who falls for Sadie's "wild beauty." Sadie's head is turned and she consents to go to the city with Rudolf, whose mother will educate her. Old man Tully, her father, who just sits and whittles all the time, no matter what's happening, says, "Ye can go—but ye'll come back." But Ben doesn't give up without a scrap. Rudy, though, proves himself some "bear cat," and it takes the police and fire departments to stop the fight. Sadie goes to the city, and Ben buys a mouth organ and plays sad tunes. After a while he gathers his savings and starts to the city himself. The society stunt is too much for Sadie and she leaves Rudolf's home to drift around the city, until a costumer discovers in her the makings of a wonderful model. Sadie develops into a real queen. Ben, too, progresses, but the two never meet. Soon both find that the city "ain't what it's cracked up to be" and each longs for the old town. Finally Ben goes back with an auto truck and establishes himself at the old stand, competing with Old Welch, the miser, who owns the hack. Ben is successful, but life ain't complete—until one day a real swell city lady gets off the "up train" and has Ben drive her to the hotel. In a few moments the swell lady comes out and—"Why, it's Sadie Tully!" And they settle down forever.

THE WITNESS (Special—Three Parts—August 5).—James Thorn, a defaulting bank cashier, alters the books of the head bookkeeper, Fred Carlisle, to cover his own crime, and Carlisle is arrested and bailed. Carlisle learns that Thorne is guilty and visits him. In the interview between the two men, Carlisle is shot dead, the tragedy is reported as a suicide, and a coroner's verdict is rendered to that effect. Previous to the entrance into the library of the two men on the fatal night, Thorne's son, Carl, a studious boy of seven, concealed himself behind the window draperies and is an unwilling witness. The boy tells his grandmother, who never from that moment for many years trusts him out of her sight lest he reveal the secret. To insure safety he is taken to Europe by his grandmother, educated in a monastery under her supervision and grows up to be a bitter misanthrope, with no companion but his horse. He has even forgotten Elise Carlisle, daughter of the dead man, and the sweetheart of their babyhood.

After the tragedy Elsie's mother dies, leaving her with her grandparents. On her nineteenth birthday her grandfather gives her a riding horse and she gallops into the woodland. A passing train frightens her horse, and she is rescued by Carl Thorne. A few words between them discloses the identity of the young people; at first sight Carl becomes deeply infatuated with Elsie, and they agree to revive the love affair of their childhood. But that night Elsie is handed by her grandfather a letter left by her mother, to be presented to her on her nineteenth birthday, and enjoining her to devote the rest of her life to the clearing of guilt from the memory of her father. Believing that this injunction imposes a duty upon her from which there is no escape, she writes Carl to the effect that a message from the dead renders it impossible for them to meet again. Thereupon his moroseness and hardness of nature return to him, and, added to these, he seeks relief in drink, which brings back to him visions of that night in the library that he must never reveal.

Elise secures a position in Thorne's office as stenographer. One day she hears an interview between Thorne and the old night watchman, in which Thorne tells him to do his worst, as his belief in Carlisle's innocence is of no consequence now. Thorne learns from Elise what she has heard, and invites her to his house in order to confer upon a compromise. It is arranged between Thorne and his old mother that the girl must be abducted to secure their own safety, but this plot is frustrated by Carl, who tells what he knows. Thorne commits suicide, and Carl promises to atone for the wrong his father has done, by the bestowal upon its innocent victim of his everlasting love and protection.

A DAY OF HAVOC (August 6).—Estelle Adair, daughter of a family of high social position but now in straitened circumstances, permits herself to be urged into a marriage with Brant Hudson, a self-made millionaire, who desires the alliance for the sake of the social advantages it will afford him. There is no pretense of love on either side. Immediately after the wedding, Hudson takes Estelle to his magnificent country house. The same day she learns that she has been the victim of a cowardly trick on the part of her father, he having induced Robert Dabney, the man with whom Estelle had been in love and who has been absent for a year, to go away and keep silent as a condition to receiving the father's approval of his marriage to Estelle. She also discovers that Robert still loves her, and that he has returned to the country. Robert sees into the plot and determines to see Estelle at once. He makes his way to the Hudson home and by chance gains access to the building without being observants by any of the servants. Hudson, who has been absent for a short time, returns and interrupts the interview between his wife and her former sweetheart. Estelle is in an agony of terror as to what may happen in the room where she has left Robert and Hudson, and is not unprepared for the shock when a footman bursts into her boudoir with the news that Hudson has been murdered, though by whom no one knows. Chance had again favored Robert, and he had left the house unobserved, Hudson and Estelle having been the only persons aware of his visit. Estelle is torn by conflicting emotions. She realizes that if she keeps silent, Robert may not even be suspected. On the other hand, her conscience demands that she give up one whom she thinks a murderer. Her conscience proves stronger than her passion, and she summons the police.

A few moments after she has telephoned she is terrified by the sudden entrance into her room of Antonio, Hudson's chauffeur, who declares his love for her. Antonio tells her how, since he first saw her, he has been mad with love and jealousy; that, himself being poor, he permitted her marriage to Hudson so that she might become wealthy, and that it was he who killed Hudson in order that she might be free again. Meanwhile, Robert is writing a letter to Estelle, telling her of his interview with her husband—how Hudson, no less than themselves, had been deceived by the girl's calculating father, and how, upon learning of her love for Robert, declared that he would assist in having the marriage annulled in order that Estelle and Robert might marry. As Antonio concludes his confession, the officers enter the room. Antonio makes a mad effort to escape, leaping through the window, pursued by the bullets from the officers' revolvers. A little later the chauffeur's dead body is found lying beneath the window.

A year later Robert and Estelle enter into their tragically delayed happiness.

BILLIE'S DEBUT (August 7).—Patsy only meant to have a little fun with Billy when she flashed him her best stage smile, but as Billy had just run from his wife the little soubrette looked particularly fascinating to him. She couldn't shake him, for he followed her to the theater and waited until after rehearsal, and her disdain only served to make him more eager. He came to be a regular pest, and Drake, the stage manager, decided that something needed to be done. They persuaded Billy that the best way to get a smile from Patsy was to become an actor himself, and he was enlisted in the force of supers. Then they sent a box ticket to his wife for his opening performance. She didn't know who sent the box ticket. For that matter she didn't care, but she was there early and audibly.

Billy didn't know she was coming, but he was afraid that someone might recognize him, and he insisted upon a disguising beard. Billy saw her as soon as he came on the stage, but he felt safe hiding behind his whiskers, and all might have been well had it not happened that the beard came off, and as luck would have it, it happened right in front of the box in which his wife was sitting. Billy had amused the audience before them, but what followed was funnier than anything that the show ever offered. It broke up the performance, but the audience certainly had its money's worth, and Billy, for once, was glad to go to jail to escape his better half.

"THE GREAT RUBY MYSTERY" (Gold Seal Two-Reel Detective Drama—Aug. 3).—Basil Romanoff plans to sell a celebrated heirloom. In his office is one Heinrich.

Ivan is chosen the agent to take the precious gem to America and deliver same to a Mr. Van Allen. Romanoff has a clever scheme to conceal the celebrated stone in the heel of one of Ivan's boots. The heel of the other one is filled with sugar only.

Ivan leaves upon the steamer Odessa for America. Romanoff cables Sanford Quest, the celebrated detective, to meet Ivan at the pier. Heinrich obtains a position aboard the Odessa as a steward and in his disguise is not recognized by Ivan.

Quest receives the message too late for him to meet the steamer Odessa, so Ivan proceeds to the house of Mr. Van Allen, whose daughter happens to be his sweetheart. Arriving there, he opens negotiations, being closely watched by Heinrich. Miss Van Allen is a somnambulist.

That night, Miss Van Allen, having worried a great deal over the secret of the ruby, rises from her bed and, still in her sleep, she secures the boot in which the ruby is hid, and secretes it.

Heinrich later stealthily enters Ivan's apartment, but Ivan is awakened and a terrific struggle follows, in which Ivan tears one of the buttons from Heinrich's coat. Heinrich deals Ivan a death blow and departs, taking the boot he finds with him to a low-class rooming house at which he is stopping.

My Dear Mr. Nielsen:

Well, the greatest picture ever produced, from the greatest story of its kind ever written, with the greatest cast of stars ever gathered together under one director, has been shown at our theatre, and we wish to congratulate you on "The Spoilers."

In all our experience in the motion picture game, we have never seen a picture which can compare with it both in artistic merit and as a business-getter. Our patrons are wild about it, and our telephone has been busy with calls as to where the picture can be seen again and when.

If possible, we will be glad to arrange an early return booking on the picture, as we will no doubt need something to get us the business as "THE SPOILERS" has done for us.

With best wishes for your success, we are

Yours very truly,

Sanford Quest, with his two female assistants, Lena and Mary, visits the scene of the crime. Miss Van Allen is broken-hearted over the death of her lover. Quest discovers a piece of lace from the gown of Miss Van Allen sticking in the buckle of one of Ivan's suitcases in the room.

He puts her in charge of one of his assistants, Lena, whom he instructs to closely watch her actions. Later a button with the name Odessa on it is discovered. He immediately details his other assistant, Mary, to disguise as a Bowery girl and visit the lower class lodging houses to secure some clue as to the identity of the owner of the button.

Mary secure the boot, but is followed from the lodging house by a gang of thugs, who are really the accomplices of Heinrich. The boot is turned over to Quest, but before anything further can be done they are attacked by the thugs and made prisoners.

Back at the Van Allen house Lena has been watching the young woman closely. The first night she watches the young lady get up in her sleep and go to Ivan's room, pick up an imaginary boot and then return to her bedroom. The second night the same thing occurs, but this time she reveals the hiding place of the boot.

Quest and his assistant, Mary, are still prisoners, bound hand and foot. Heinrich and his gang have departed with the boot which they believe to contain the ruby.

Suddenly Quest has an idea. He takes from his coat a small pocket wireless outfit, which is one of his latest inventions, and sends a message for help, which is caught at the Van Allen home. She rushes to his assistance with some policemen and the unlucky pair are rescued. Triumphantly she displays the boot, whose hiding place she had learned through Miss Van Allen, and explains the latter's actions.

IMP.

"HER WONDERFUL DAY" (Imp Drama—Aug. 3).—Frances is a little factory girl who lives in the slums. She gets a holiday from her work and decides to spend it in one of the public parks. Her book under her arm, she goes forth in search of romance and flowers. Jack Raymond, a rich young man, has tired of everything he owns. He leaves his country estate and comes to the city. Stopping near the park entrance while his chauffeur attends to some detail of his machine, he sees Frances standing there. He sees in her a pretty girl—and he has long accepted all pretty girls as his rightful prey. Noticing that her eager eyes take in every detail of his beautiful car, he approaches her and invites her to go for a ride. She raises great innocent eyes to his and something in his hard young heart melts and he realizes that this girl is merely a child. In his machine they go to his home. He sends her out among the flowers—to pick all she wishes—and she runs about happily gathering great armfuls of the fragrant blossoms.

He brings her into the immense dining-room and together they have luncheon. She is a little afraid of the imposing butler, but not a bit afraid of Dick. After luncheon he puts her into the machine and takes her back to town with her arms just filled with flowers of every kind. He leaves her at her corner.

POWERS.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Episode No. 5, "The Signal of the Three Socks"—July 22).—The mysterious Lady Baffles sees the postman deliver a package at Mr. Higgins' home. Neither Higgins nor his wife knew that she was spying on them when their package was being delivered. They rejoiced exceedingly over its contents. The curiosity of their butler, an accomplice of Lady Baffles, was also aroused.

The Higginses find their mysterious package a letter. After reading it they exhibit still more joy. The butler is piqued. Later, Mr. Higgins accidentally tears this letter. One half of it falls into the butler's hands. It reveals to him the fact that, without question, the package received at the house contains a great amount of money and valuable jewels. He is amazed and loses no time in communicating with Lady Baffles with the signal of the "Secret Code of the Sock." Lady Baffles comes. The house must be cleared of its occupants in preparation for the raid. The maid is captured and with a sheet is fixed up to represent a ghost. She is then turned loose. The maid scares Higgins and his wife out of their wits. They rush pell mell out of the house with the maid after them. Then Lady Baffles and her accomplice start.

Meanwhile, the famous Detective Duck, with his clever scientific appliances, becomes aware of the distress of his old friend, Higgins. He pulls his strings and works his buttons, determining to go to his friend's aid. He takes charge of the matter, allowing Higgins to keep into his wonderful "rubberscope," where the actions of Lady Baffles in wrecking their home, are revealed.

Detective Duck captures the butler and, disguising himself in the latter's place, reveals to Baffles the contents of the mysterious package.

She then finds the other half of the torn letter. She joins the two parts together and discovers to her disgust and chagrin that its contents are a simple reference to the little pie receipt book.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (Episode No. 6, "Saved by a Scent" Aug. 5). Lady Baffles learns over the 'phone that the retired capitalist will not let Tom marry his daughter, Lillian. Baffles further hears that the irritated father proposes to marry her to a member of the nobility.

Her accomplice, the crook, is induced to disguise himself as a member of the English nobility and offer himself as a candidate for Lillian's hand. The old gent falls at once for the impostor. Lillian rebels, but dad orders an immediate marriage.

Tom, broken hearted, gets wind of the situation. He goes to the famous detective, Duck, with his troubles. Duck sympathizes and gives Tom an instrument called the "smello-graph," the properties of which send out such a strong scent that messages by its means can be sent from distant points, even penetrating the thickest steel with its smell waves. Tom pockets the instrument. He is further advised to elope with Lillian. This strikes him as a great idea and he lays his plans.

But the eloping couple are caught and Tom is locked in a huge vault. Then the exasperated father sends for a minister to marry the supposed Lord to Lillian. Tom is, seemingly, up against it. While in this terrible stress he remembers the "smello-graph." He sends out S. O. S. calls for help.

Duck receives the desperate messages. He immediately disguises himself as a burglar and comes post-haste. He endeavors to open the safe. Baffles, in hiding, sees him. She thinks he is a burglar surely, and aids him in opening the safe. Tom dashes out just as the wedding is about to take place. The situation is saved.

"AROUND THE CORNER" (Powers Drama—Aug. 7). Montgomery Stagg, an adventurous and penniless young man, is in love with Margery Stone. He is preparing to call upon her one evening when her mother makes her break the engagement with him for the evening in favor of one Gibson, who makes a brilliant appearance in contrast with Stagg.

Stagg, angered at his sweetheart, decides to go in the direction the wind is blowing.

He turns the first corner and finds a girl huddled on the steps, weeping. This he thinks will prove an adventure, so he greets the girl and later he learns how she, a village belle, made the acquaintance of a traveling salesman, their subsequent meetings finally terminating in her agreeing to draw all her funds out of the bank and meet him in the city, where they would be married.

Arriving in the city, he got possession of her funds and left her alone in the hotel, and they, finding she was penniless, threw her out. She is just on the verge of committing suicide, when he comforts her and tells her he will take her to the hotel. Stagg is embarrassed when he finds he has no money, and as a last resort takes the girl to his rooms, making her comfortable, while he spends the night in the park.

Margery calls him up and finds a strange woman in his room. Next morning Stagg returns to his room in an angry mood. The girl meets him and comforts him, offering him a cup of coffee, which he refuses. Margery bursts in, sees them at the table and haughtily breaks her engagement with him, throwing Stagg's ring at him and leaving in a huff.

Stagg is in a quandary. He accuses the girl of being the cause of his troubles and she breaks down and shows him a picture of the man who has wronged her. Stagg determines to win Margery back, and, going to her house, finds her engaged with Gibson, just having agreed to his proposal of marriage. He recognizes Gibson as the man who has wronged the girl in his room and, getting the girl, denounces him for what he is, forcing him to return the money.

VICTOR.

"MY TOMBOY GIRL" (Victor Two-Reel Comedy Aug. 4). The Curate of the boarding school is in love with the madcap, much to the displeasure of the principal. While the girls are out playing ball, Harry, the madcap's real lover, climbs over the wall, and whistles to Rose, who makes a dive for the wall. The ball which is being thrown to her strikes the principal, knocking her to the ground. She is furious and throws the ball out of the picture, striking the curate who happens to be reading nearby. He picks up the ball, throws it and strikes Harry, who falls off the wall. In the meantime the principal has seen Harry on the wall, and Rose beneath it and goes after her, sending her back to the class room. The girls all rush into the room. Rose tells them to close the door and hold it, while she draws the teacher's picture.

The principal takes her out and locks her in the cellar. The girls that night try to free Rose. She writes a note and throws it out of the window. It is found by the iceman, but, not knowing how to read, he gives it to the Curate, who immediately sees that the note is for Harry. The Curate decides to save Rose and marry her himself. The girls play numerous pranks on the teacher, and finally secure her and drag her to the room where she has locked Rose in. They leave the teacher bound and gagged, while they continue with the party. When they hear the usual whistle, Rose rushes out of the room. She and Harry see the Curate climbing up the ladder to the room where Rose is supposed to be. They get the girls, who are all in pajamas, into an automobile and drive off for the wedding. The Curate, in the meantime, has taken the bride, whom he thinks is Rose, to the sheriff's office. There he discovers it is the principal, and is about to be married, when Rose, Harry and all the girls, clad in pajamas, enter, and a double wedding takes place.

L-KO.

"IN THE CLAW OF THE LAW" (L-Ko Comedy—Aug. 4). Mr. Rawsberry was a sufferer from chronic jealousy, and when he surprised his wife talking to the grocery boy, he went out to deliberately flirt with the girls. His first victim was a blonde young lady who was dining with her papa in a cafe. He made a hit all right, but decidedly did not with her papa.

In fact, he displeased papa so that the latter emptied several seltzer bottles into Mr. Rawsberry's map. Mr. Rawsberry followed them outside and knocked father's molars out with a brick. Meanwhile Mrs. Rawsberry decided to go out and flirt herself, and she was just tackling a coquettish cop when Mr. Rawsberry happened along.

He attempted to call his spouse to time for this, but she deliberately denied him and swore she had never seen him before in her life. The cop pinched him and he was brought before a Judge, whose front molars were strangely missing. The realization began to smite unpleasant spots on Mr. Rawsberry's spine that this self-same Judge was the very gentleman whose teeth he had involuntarily extracted. He also realized that his prospects for spending many years in the cooler were good.

The judge reached for the penalty book and started to hunt out the maximum bad news. Mr. Rawsberry's wife at this moment stepped up and let the Judge give her the once over. He recognized in her a lady with whom he had had a platonic friendship.

As platonic friendships are bad for Judge's reputations, and are also frequently frowned upon by unsympathetic citizens, the Judge thought it wiser to let Mr. Rawsberry off. The latter and his wife thereupon made a quick exit from the court room. The Judge likewise made a mental note not to form any further friendships, platonic or otherwise.

BISON.

"GENE OF THE NORTHLAND" (Bison Two-Reel Drama—Aug. 7). Jeanne La Roche lives alone with her brother in the great Northwestern country. Jacques is a ne'er do well and has fallen under the suspicion of the mounted police, two of whom are dispatched to arrest him for robbery. The stolen goods are found in his home. Jeanne is too young to be left in their lonely cabin, so she is taken to the Post, where the wife of the proprietor welcomes her and gives her a home.

Several years later, Donald McLean wins her for his wife. Meantime Jacques escapes from prison, eludes his pursuers and takes refuge in McLean's home. Recognizing him, Jeanne hides him until she has gotten rid of the police, then carries food and drink and an exchange of clothes to him and bids him an affectionate farewell.

McLean, upon returning, sees his wife in another man's arms. He shoots the stranger, leaving him for dead; locks his wife in the cabin and proceeds to the tavern to drown jealousy in drink. Meantime, Jacques, recovering consciousness, staggers off. Jeanne, angered by the unreasoning anger of her husband, disguises herself in an old suit of his, steals out through the window, discovers her brother has gone and follows his footprints.

McLean, returning, finds both gone, apparently together, and starts after them. Jacques is taken care of by a friendly Indian and Jeanne, footsore and weary, finds refuge in the home of Cox.

Mrs. Cox is touched by her story and has Jeanne in her arms when Cox enters. Cox, seeing the affection displayed by his wife toward a strange man, shoots and wounds the girl. Explanations follow and Jeanne is given a home with them.

Fully recovered, Jacques, with much money from a trapping trip, through the northern woods returns to see his sister, only to find her gone.

He makes his way to the tavern, where a poker game is in progress, flashes his money and is followed and murdered by a half-breed. Suspicion falls on McLean. He is arrested and taken to police headquarters. Meantime the half-breed, sorely wounded by the encounter which proved fatal to Jacques, staggers to the home of Cox, confesses his crime, and tells of the arrest of McLean.

She arrives in time to save him and all ends happily.

LAEMMLE.

"THE SOURCE OF HAPPINESS" (Laemmle Drama—Aug. 8). Jonathan Rodd, a wealthy old widower, has a son, Frederick, who has become entangled with an adventuress, Olga, who is forcing him to financial ruin. The old man strives to break up the infatuation, but for the time being fails to do so.

Ruth Margate resides on a small farm with her invalid mother and baby sister, and, needing more money, she advertises for an old gentleman or lady as lodger. Jonathan reads the advertisement and, as he desires peace in his old age, decides to visit the farm and take up his residence there.

He is so impressed with the virtue and charm of Ruth that he sends for his son in order to bring them together. After a heated interview with his inamorata, in which she tells him that if he cannot supply her with the money needed he needn't come around, he decides to take his father's advice and goes to the farm, where he meets Ruth.

The adventuress follows him and strives to win him back, but the old man is successful in separating them permanently, and, after a series of incidents, succeeds in uniting the boy with the girl of his choice and everything ends happily.

REX.

"THE PROOF" (Rex Comedy—Aug. 3).—Astorbilt, Jones, Drew and Smith are smoking together at the club. A discussion as to whether an amateur thief could rob a house and get away with it arises. Astorbilt says he could. Jones takes him up at once. Drew tells Smith of a private insane asylum near by and they agree to have Astorbilt rob it, he not knowing what manner of house he is to rob. It is agreed that he bring some proof to show he succeeded in his undertaking.

Astorbilt gains entrance to the asylum. He hears queer noises, and on investigating hears that Bella is in distress. His gallantry is aroused. He gains entrance to her room to save her. He is rather disappointed in Bella's appearance, but chivalrously put this aside and plans to rescue her. The lady's actions are not consistent, however, and her screams awaken the household. The doctor, Molly and O'Toole come quickly to her rescue. The doctor mistakes Astorbilt for one of his patients and after severely lecturing O'Toole for letting him escape, orders him to put Astorbilt in a cell.

Molly feels sorry for him. She thinks he looks hungry. She ransacks the ice-box and brings him up a tempting meal. She becomes interested in her handsome patient and soon sees a mistake has been made. Astorbilt tells her his story and she agrees to help him escape. She is afraid of what the doctor will say when he finds him gone, so Astorbilt persuades her to fly with him and so escape blame. The conspirators are waiting at the place agreed demanding proof. Astorbilt brings in Molly, saying "she is the dearest treasure of the asylum." The others agree and so Astorbilt wins his bet. They all take glasses and toast Molly and Astorbilt.

"BETTY'S BONDAGE" (Rex Two-Reel Drama —Aug. 8). Betty and Molly, sisters, are employed at the railroad station as waitresses. Molly has been married by her step-father to a brutal drunkard, Steve Moran, while the mother of the two girls is married to Dan Morgan, who is also a slave to drink.

A theatrical troupe visits the eating house and Betty meets Burton Howard, a theater magnate. He is taken with her appearance, and, giving her his card, invites her to visit him should she ever find herself on Broadway, in New York.

Martin Dane, who has just arrived in town to take a job as foreman at the Morrison Steel Works, admires Betty. He saves the girl's stepfather from a drunken brawl and is invited to call that evening.

Betty, anticipating another marriage such as her sister's, does not encourage Dane. Molly's husband dies in a drunken stupor, and she, seeing that her sister is about to be forced into conditions like those under which she suffered, plans to use the money she had received from her husband's insurance policy to free her sister. Betty is thus enabled to run away just before she is to be married to Dane.

She goes to New York where she calls on Burton Howard, who finally recognizes her and gives her a minor position in one of his companies. He enables her to rise in her new profession, but Betty soon finds that his interest has strings to it.

Meanwhile the brutal husband of Mrs. Morgan has also died, and Martin Dane has taken the poor woman to keep house for him in the cottage he had furnished in anticipation of his marriage to Betty. Molly shows him the letter she has received from Betty, realizing at last Martin's true worth and the mistake she and her sister have made in thinking otherwise.

Dane visits the city and locates Betty's boarding house. Betty has been endeavoring to stave off Howard's advances with the excuse of not having fitting gowns to accompany him to cafes. He has bought her a fine gown and now insists that she spend the evening with him. Dane gains admittance to Betty's room before she arrives home and conceals himself. When she arrives home she is surprised when confronted by the man she promised to marry and later deserted. She at first refuses to return with Dane as his wife, repelled by the sordidness she imagines will follow.

Howard calls in his taxi to take her out. He is admitted to Betty's room and the two men come face to face.

BIG U.

"OUT OF THE FLAMES" (Big U Two-Reel Modern Drama—Aug. 5). Garry is a friend of the Justice family and is paying attention to Elaine. At the factory which he owns Garry is informed that the elevator is unsafe and is liable to fall unless new beams are placed to support the wheels and cables. Having no money, Garry notifies Justice and the latter comes to inspect the factory before he makes a loan. During his trip through the building Justice falls down a stair when the railing gives way and is badly hurt.

Arnold Becker, a student in his last year at medical college, is passing. He accompanies Justice home. Later a friendship springs up between him and Elaine. Justice partially recovers and sends Garry several thousand dollars to make repairs at the factory. About this time Justice receives word that wheat has slumped and left him bankrupt. The shock kills him. Elaine and Becker become engaged. His savings are running low and he plans to marry Elaine for her money to make his term at college easier. The day that they are married, Nash, the family lawyer, finds that Justice died insolvent. When Elaine and Becker return from the church wedding, Nash is waiting and tells them the news.

Becker is disappointed, but conceals it as best he can, and he and Elaine move to a small apartment. Time passes. Their funds run so low that Becker is unable to pay his tuition at the college. Elaine secretly secures work in the shirt factory, not even Garry knowing that she is working there. At night she barely gets home before Becker does and he upbraids her for not having the meal ready. Becker begins paying attention to Leona Page, a friend of Elaine's whom he met at the wedding. Leona, in love with him, urges him to leave Elaine and come with her. Finally Becker decides upon this course

A terrific fire has broken out in the factory. Elaine assists in quelling the panic, but in spite of this numbers of girls are injured and burned in jumping from the windows. Elaine is rescued, but is also badly injured. Garry, in trying to save Elaine, meets death when he attempts to slide down hand over hand on the elevator cable. The beams break under the fire and strain and he is crushed under their weight at the bottom of the shaft. Elaine begs to be taken home, and as Becker is packing to leave she is carried in by the ambulance attendants. During all this time, Becker has had no suspicion that Elaine was working.

Now, with almost her last strength, she tells him of the money that she has saved to pay his tuition in order that he may be eligible to take the examination to be admitted to practice. Becker, astounded, finds the money and learns that she has been working at the shirt factory. Her recovery is assured and they are united again.

NESTOR.

"LITTLE EGYPT MALONE" (Nestor Comedy Aug. 6). Lee and Eddie are college chums, and each is in love with the other's sister. Their fathers are business partners.

A college party winds up with a lively poker game. Lee loses all, and, borrowing as much as possible from Eddie, loses that also, so that in the end the boys are both dead broke. Eddie writes his father saying they had their pockets picked while at a revival meeting, but the fathers see through their excuses and wire back that in their younger days they could make up better stories than that if necessary, and for them either to go to work or walk. The two girls happening into the offices of their fathers, learn of the boys' plight and, feeling sorry for them, think up a scheme to raise the necessary money to enable them to return home.

The boys answer the ad. of an undertaker, but they are not satisfactory. They see where a show tent and banners are offered for sale, being formerly used by a dancer called "Little Egypt," who offered the "Shiver Dance" to the public. The boys scheme to buy the outfit. Eddie suggests that Lee make up as Little Egypt, and he himself will act as spieler in front of the tent. He finally persuades Lee to act the part and they get an old Turkish rug dealer to blow upon a reed instrument to make the deception more realistic and give the show the proper atmosphere.

Eddie has trouble handling the money which rolls in at the box office, and the boys see their way clear at last. The women in the neighborhood of the show, however, rise in righteous indignation and decide to run the show out of the place, so they can have their husbands to themselves. Peeking in at the dressing tent they discover Little Egypt is really a man, and, waiting until the next show, they unmask the unhappy dancer, and Lee and Eddie flee for safety from the angry crowd.

In the meantime, the girls have set out by train to take the money which they have gotten to the boys in the college town. The fathers, missing the train, follow them by automobile.

The girls learn from the janitor where the boys have gone and set out to find them. They are shocked to see Lee and Eddie running down the street pursued by the angry mob, Lee in the costume of an Egyptian dancer.

The boys tell the girls they cannot wait to talk to them and rush on. Later they pass their fathers, who have a hearty laugh when they learn the truth. The boys reach home safely.

JOKER.

"THEIR BEWITCHED ELOPEMENT" (Joker Comedy—Aug. 7). The pretty Queen of the Fairies comes to grief. She steps into an ugly bear trap in the woods.

On the old farm, Tom, the son of a neighboring farmer, is having his troubles in his wooing of Sally. Her father cannot "see" Tom.

Poor Tom wanders off into the woods. He hears the distressful cries of the Queen of the Fairies, who still is held by the trap. Tom effects her release and the grateful Fairy bestows on him the magic whistle. "In time of stress this whistle will bring me to your aid," she tells him.

Tom's longing for Sally takes him back to the farm. From a place of concealment he witnesses her father's attempts to make her accept the attentions of Silas, a rich old codger.

Sally, in a mighty indignant frame of mind, escapes and bumps into Tom. The young couple decide then and there to hurry to a minister and be married. But the chagrined Silas sees them going and calls the attention of Sally's father, who, infuriated, starts out in pursuit.

The frightened lovers are nearly caught when Tom thinks of his magic whistle. He loses no time in blowing it. The Queen of the Fairies hears the distress signal. In her magic pool she sees a vision of his predicament. She quickly transports herself to the scene of the trouble and arrives just in the nick of time.

She takes the lovers to her pool in the mountains and allows them to watch the visions in the pool which clearly reflect the dire distress of Dad and Silas. Finally they see the thoroughly frightened pair fall into the bear trap and become firmly caught.

Kitty, realizing the uselessness of trying to avoid giving up the coins, is about to hand them over when she feels something near her, and, turning her head, comes face to face with another hand holding another gun. Another masculine voice demands the coins, and Kitty, appreciating the situation, smiles and places into each hand a half of the coin.

Kitty watches with interest the proceedings, anxious to find out who the three gunmen are, and is much surprised to see the man Sachio has first sent there for the coin come from the curtains. He was the second voice to ask for the coin. The two men step forth and Kitty finds that the third man is her friend Roleau. They all three wait for the first voice to appear, but as he still stands with his hands showing through the curtains, they all make a start for him and are stopped by hearing some one enter through the door from the hall. Turning, comes face to face with Frederick, who smiles and asks in a very pleasant voice what they are doing there. Kitty stoops to pick up the coins as the men—Frederick, Roleau and Sachio—stand glaring at one another.

Returning to Kitty: She feels herself lifted bodily and carried. She awakes in a small, dingy room in a strange place.

Kitty tries to laugh, but finds herself too weak even for that. In the meantime, Roleau tries to find some traces of Kitty and her captor.

Kitty's abductor had half an hours' start on Roleau, which enabled him to get Kitty out of the way before Roleau could follow them. After some very hard work Roleau at last gets on the trail of Kitty's abductors.

In the meantime Kitty gets a little more strength and tries to get her bearings in this strange place. As she is wandering around the room she feels something strike her on the head. Turning and picking it up, she finds it is a note wrapped around a small stone. Reading it, Kitty finds it is not signed and reads as follows:

"Better write a fake story for your paper and return to America. Give up the coins and you will gain your freedom; refuse and you will fare badly. If you consent place something white in the window."

Kitty thinks it is only a ruse to get her coin, until she looks in her waist and finds it is gone.

On the roof, he has succeeded in getting Kitty's attention. He tells her he will drop her a rope and asks her to file the bars while he pulls upon the rope. Hearing the fight on the roof, Kitty realizes they must have caught Roleau. Thinking quickly, Kitty fastens the rope to a large screw in the floor, and, throwing the other end out the window, starts to slide down.

On the roof, Roleau throws one man off and is seized by Sachio and his man and taken below, just as Kitty is starting down from the roof.

Sachio's man hides in the street, watching Kitty climb down the rope, and when she reaches the street and starts away confidently, thinking herself safe, the man rushes upon her, and takes her back into the house.

Roleau, a prisoner in a small room, tries to loosen the ropes which bind him. Working hard, he succeeds in loosening them a bit. Kitty succeeds in picking the lock, and being sure there is no one listening in the room Sachio came from, thanks her stars she is about free and swings the door open, when she comes face to face with a lion and lioness. She gets the door closed just as the lion makes a spring for her. Leaning against the door, nearly dead with fright, she turns toward the other room as Sachio comes into the room, with a smile on his face.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

"THE SCARLET SIN" (Broadway Universal Feature—Aug. 2). The story opens in the interior of a fashionable New York church. In the pulpit stand Eric Norton. The congregation is bored. Among them are Cecelia, Eric's wife, a beautiful woman, and Richard Allen, their wealthy bachelor neighbor. In the farthest corner of the church sits an old white haired man, Doc White, once the boyhood chum of Eric's father. Eric later receives a letter from Bombay, India, telling him of the death of his old college friend and of the little girl, Eda, who has been left to his care.

He sends for Eda and she comes to his home, bringing sunshine with her. She becomes devoted to Eric's infant son. In the mining town a great burly miner is urging the men to stop their work on account of the fire-damp in the mines. To rouse them further he points to a fire-damp victim who is carried past.

Eric receives an appeal from Doc White to come and lead them out of their misery. Alone in his study, he fights the battle out. In the long mirror he sees three visions. One is of himself at the altar of a fashionable church. The other is the dirty road of a mining town, where he stands preaching. He is scoffed and jeered at. Eric turns from this vision with a shudder. Then it slowly fades into the figure of Christ guiding his lambs along the rocky mountain waste. Eric realizes his duty from these visions and decides to give up all his wealth and fame and go down into the mines.

Cecelia is infuriated at his decision. She tells Richard, and he consoles her, telling her that he will be always near her. Later we see them in their new home, a plain little cottage in the mining town. As Eric endeavors to preach to the miners and help them he is abused and scoffed at. He meets The Brute, who is drunk.

As time goes on, through Eric's influence with the mine owner, the mines are opened and prosperity reigns once more. The Brute, incensed and enraged by his defeat, determines upon revenge. Cecelia, unable to bear the life longer, writes to Richard to come for her Friday night at midnight, and she will fly with him. Friday night comes. The mines are aglow with lights, and in Eric's library he sits reading to Eda and Doc White, while upstairs Cecelia packs her grips and waits for the midnight hour.

Suddenly over the quiet of the village a deep rumbling sound is heard, and as the explosion of the mines occurs, The Brute, who had achieved his revenge, is caught in his own trap.

Returning home from the disaster, Eric is stunned at the sight of Cecelia ready for departure. Cecelia hysterically tells him that she can live in the mining village no longer, and that Richard is taking her away. Richard confesses his love for Cecelia and Eric faces him like an infuriated animal. "Take her. If you ever betray her trust then you shall answer to me with your life."

One night they visit Doc White's leaving the child in the care of the housekeeper. In the living room below the nursery the window curtains blow against the lighted gas jet, and catch the flame. Soon the room is a mass of flames, and the housekeeper, rushing down the stairs, upon seeing the flames, runs from the house hysterically. As Eric and Eda and Doc White come on the scene Cecelia staggers out with the child in her arms. She places it in Eda's arms and then falls senseless to the ground. She is dying, and faintly gasps out the story of her betrayal and Richard's desertion in Paris.

WHEN THE FLEET SAILED (Two Reels—Aug. 3).—The finest vessels of Uncle Sam's Navy were lying in the harbor of New York. Among the officers who welcomed the change was Lieut. Harry Barton of the flagship, for "the sweetest girl in the world" lived in Manhattan. They had been engaged for some time, and planned to get married soon.

At a reception one evening the officer and his fiancee met a young woman, and a few days later his fiancee came aboard accompanied by the other girl. While he was showing them about the lieutenant received a summons from

A REALLY ALL-STAR CAST

The cast includes the greatest ensemble of well known actors ever presented in a film, including Miss Kelly, Roy Applegate, E. T. Roseman, Sidney D'Albrook, Jerold Hevener, Frank DeVernon, Sue Balfour, E. G. Longman, Margaret Willard, Al Grady, Bert Tuey and Georgia Harvey. Miss Harvey is the popular comedienne from "The Pink Lady" and makes her film debut in this picture. The newspapers have commented as follows:

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Flawless photography makes every scene a delight to the eye. Audiences will like Rupert Hughes' wholesome story. Renee Kelly is the very fresh and engaging star, and she appears equally to advantage as the center of attraction at elaborate social functions, or in the simple garb of a rural maid. There is a charm and a spontaneity about the playing of Miss Kelly that is of particular value in a role of this type.

TELEGRAPH: The new company which made this picture should be congratulated upon achieving a degree of success not often obtained by more pretentious organizations. A cast of good comedians is a rare thing, and each actor in this picture has made his part stand out. The photography deserves special mention.

VARIETY: The Mirograph Corporation has every reason to feel mighty proud of this picture from an acting and photographic standpoint. Miss Kelly is a charming actress. The realism of the outdoor pastoral is so close to photographic perfection one would not think of comparisons.

DRAMATIC MIRROR: Too much commendation cannot be given for the able manner in which the first production of this new company has been handled, and if they live up to the standard of this picture they will rapidly attain an enviable position in filmdom. Throughout the offering was an example of what skillful direction can do in transferring the written word to the screen, and when this is backed up with photography so clear and distinct that it causes favorable comment, and able, consistent acting, a successful picture is bound to result.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: Photographically the subject is not to be criticized, as every scene is clear and well defined. In regard to the selection of correct and telling types they could hardly have done better. From the principals down to the various incidental characters the casting has been exceedingly well done. When the neglect of minor characters often mars it immeasurably one wonders why all producers do not take the care in such matters that the producers of this feature have done.

the admiral and went to his cabin. There he was told that the visitor was suspected of being a German spy. The Admiral closed the interview by warning his subordinate to be watchful, and sent him back to his friends. The lieutenant performed his duty so well that he aroused the jealousy of his fiancee.

The suggestion was made by one high in authority that the lieutenant ostensibly resign, as it was expected that the supposed spy would try to use him in her plot, whatever it might be. The lieutenant consented, and the other officers believed he had quit the navy under a cloud. It was a bitter time for the lieutenant, for he was unable to explain to his fiancee.

The sagacity of his superiors was soon manifest, however, for the woman under suspicion made much of the lieutenant and enrolled him in her band. The plot contemplated the destruction of several of the largest battleships, by launching floating mines against them as they lay in a harbor on the New England coast. These mines were to be taken upon a yacht, and the lieutenant had got so far into the confidence of the conspirators that they made him the captain of their craft. He sent full details to the admiral by wireless and sailed with the vessel, determined to guide her to the warships waiting to capture the boat and the conspirators.

Before he sailed he sent word to his sweetheart, asking her to reserve judgement for a few days. Just as she was reading this note one of the conspirators entered. He was a man who had been in love with the woman spy, but he had been made jealous. He gloatingly told her her faithless lover was doomed. The conspirators, determined upon revenge, had placed dynamite in the coal bunkers of the yacht, and she would blow up.

The girl rushed down to the landing, hoping to head off the yacht before she got away, but it was too late. Suddenly there was an explosion. Hoping to the last, she rushed to a launch nearby. In the water, clinging to a spar, she found her sweetheart.

THE GAME (Aug. 1).—Sickness had come to the young widow and deprived her of health and the position which meant support for herself and her little child. Despair gripped her as she realized that she would have to give up the little room in the boarding house which had been home to her and the child. She was penniless and did not know what to do. The door opened softly and a woman stepped into the room. She was showily dressed and lived with her husband in a handsome suite in the boarding house. None of the other boarders knew the husband's occupation, but he talked grandly of "winnings in the Street," so they classed him as "a Wall Street man," and envied him accordingly. The visitor took the despairing widow in her arms and soon had the whole story.

The well dressed woman gave the destitute woman a loan, which was gratefully accepted. When the woman and her husband asked if they could take the child out for short walks the widow gladly consented. The well dressed pair were in reality well dressed and skillful thieves, and their motive in befriending the widow was merely to secure possession of the child and use her in their schemes. A frequent caller upon the lawbreakers, a man whose reputation seemed as bad as their own, learned of their plan and told the widow of the peril of her child. At first she refused to believe that her benefactors could be guilty of such acts, but her new friend soon proved his charges and then surprised them all by revealing himself as a detective and placing the man and woman under arrest.

The detective decided that the widow was altogether too young and lacking in knowledge of the world to be unprotected, and, as the girl had grown to care for the man whom she once thought "a crook" in course of time the little child got a father well qualified in every way to see that never again should she be made a victim of unscrupulous people who were "playing the game."

THE GOLDEN TRAIL (Two reels—August 4).—Johnny Firth is a young prize fighter who, because of wine, woman and song, is knocked out. He leaves for the West with his manager, who is broke, because of Johnny's defeat. They arrive in Arizona and Johnny beats up a big bully there named Mason, because he has stolen from an old character called Nutty Ike, his bag of nuggets. Nutty Ike introduces the two men to his daughter and makes them his partners in a gold mine he has discovered in the desert. Mason trails them and there is a big fight at the mine, also in the interior. The girl rides for the sheriff and he arrives in the nick of time to subdue the claim jumpers. Later the young prize fighter and the girl are discovered in a love meeting by Nutty Ike and the prize promoter and Ike tells the promoter that with Johnny's money he will never have to fight again and that love has conquered him.

RELIANCE.

THE PRETENDER (Two Parts—July 24).—Jerry Livingstone, a wealthy recluse, dies, leaving his son, Henry, the sole heir, the mansion and a considerable fortune, with the provision of an additional larger sum if he marries the old man's ward, Winifred Gale. On hearing this, Winifred writes young Livingstone that she will not be a party to a marriage of convenience. Upon consultation with his lawyers, Livingstone finds that his late father's cattle business in Australia is on the verge of being ruined by unscrupulous managers. He decides to go to Australia at once. Bat Rogers, a scientific crook, reads the accounts of Livingstone's strange will and noting that the young heir intends to leave for Australia, formulates a daring plan.

Livingstone boards the steamer, also Rogers and his accomplice, Eric Eccles. Rogers represents himself as a doctor traveling for pleasure. He makes the acquaintance of Livingstone and when they reach the South Seas, pushes him overboard, having first stolen his keys. Rogers installs Eccles in Livingstone's cabin, pretending that Livingstone is ill and that he is attending him. Arrived at Australia, Rogers is successful in getting Eccles ashore in Livingstone's place. He has familiarized himself with Livingstone's mission from study of documents in his trunk. He presents himself to Livingstone's Australian manager as Livingstone, and his identity is never questioned. Meanwhile the real Livingstone was not drowned, but swam a long distance and was picked up by a couple of South Sea Islanders in their canoe. They tattooed him and made him a slave. Five years of this wild life among savages completely transforms Livingstone.

The impostor remains in Australia four years in order to adjust Livingstone's affairs. He raises a beard and otherwise alters himself through outdoor life. He disposes of the Australian interests and returns to America, where he establishes himself in Livingstone's home. Coveting the additional fortune which Livingstone was to receive if he married Winifred Gale, Rogers pays her a visit. She instinctively hates Rogers and rejects his proposal. Livingstone is rescued from the island by traders. He returns to America. When he learns that the impostor, Rogers, has taken possession of his property, the real Livingstone asserts himself but is thrown off the premises by Rogers. Drawn by curiosity, Livingstone goes to Winifred Gale's home. He arrives on the night when the impostor is pleading with her to marry him. When she refuses, the impostor attempts to force his attentions, but Livingstone, seeing this through the window, rushes in and overpowers Rogers. This awakens keen gratitude in Winifred, and she falls in love with Livingstone, not knowing his real identity.

Livingstone brings suit to displace the imposter, Eccles, Rogers' accomplice, sees in the trial an opportunity to blackmail Rogers and thus extracts considerable money. Livingstone is unable to present conclusive evidence to establish his identity and he loses the suit. Winifred, loving him for himself, becomes his wife. The impostor, annoyed by Eccles' demands for hush money, lays a trap to kill him, but the accomplice escapes and out of revenge goes to Livingstone with an agreement to expose the impostor. The court hears the new evidence and Rogers is convicted of criminal conspiracy and sent to prison. Livingstone at last comes into his inheritance and he and his wife acquire the additional fortune willed them by the father.

BILLIE'S RESCUE (July 28).—Jim and Elmer Worth are successful brokers. Jim advises Elmer to buy D. & Q. stock. The next day D. & Q. starts to go up and continues to advance. Jim sees that they have made a winning. He rushes into Elmer's office to tell him that they have cleared at least $10,000, only to discover that Elmer has neglected to buy the stock. Jim reproaches Elmer for his mistake, and Elmer flies into a rage and insists on dissolving partnership at once. Jim tries to reason with him but Elmer leaves and refuses to return. Elmer opens an office for himself and fails. Jim offers to help him financially and asks him to return to his old office, but Elmer refuses.

Jim takes his nephew, Billie, to the beach and while watching him swim in the surf, he plans with the life guard to make Billie think he (Jim) is about to drown. Jim enters the water and when Billie hears his call for help he tries to make the life guard rescue him. The guard refuses and says he cannot swim. Billie runs into the water and rescues his uncle. After Jim revives (?) he tells Billie that he is going to reward him. Elmer and his wife think that Billie has met with an accident and rush to Jim's office where they meet Jim and Billie. Jim tells of Billie's rescue, and pleads with Elmer to return for the sake of his wife and Billie, showing him that his name is still on the door and that his office is still the same. Elmer finally relents and enters his old office.

"'JUST OUT OF COLLEGE' is a real comedy. You are not obliged to look at the producer's announcement to discover the fact. Naturally one might suppose that a George Ade comedy could not help being a laugh-maker, but even his farcical efforts would be lost without skillful picturization."

"Nothing important was overlooked in this screen version of a well known stage hit. The cast is good, the settings are splendid, the photography leaves nothing to be desired. Altogether the feature is a creditable piece of work."

"There is a certain indescribable charm about a George Ade comedy, with its fresh, clean humor, that is particularly delightful, and the screen version of this justly popular offering is as replete with this elusive quality as the play was. There can be little doubt but what it will meet with as much success as the play."

"A good five-reel comedy is a hard thing to put over, and this film has been so well handled that it does go over. Nobody but a cigar store Indian or a professional lecturer on the psycological aspects of laughter could sit through the picture without smiling in complete enjoyment of its uproarious fun."

THE STRAW MAN (July 27).—Georgie gets in wrong with Carmen at school through Dan, the bad boy, who puts on his innocent rival the blame for his own misdeeds. The two boys go into the cornfield at recess time to fight it out. There they are informed by another youngster that the straw man has come to life. Terrified, they run back to the schoolhouse. Georgie's grandfather, Truax, an old forty niner, arrives in search of an escaped convict. He goes to investigate the corn field, and Georgie follows him. Truax, with the help of his small grandson, takes the animated straw man captive. The forty-niner turns over the criminal to the guards, and children congratulate Georgie. Carmen now is moved to kiss her hero.

VICTORINE (Two Parts—August 1).—Dottie gets a job in a small show as "side kick" of a famous knife thrower. The "Angel" is a nice boy who is backing the show, and who is too modest to declare his love to Dottie. She can see no one save the great, handsome "Strong Man." The knife thrower gets drunk, and the "Angel" forbids Dottie to do her act. The "Strong Man," however, locks up the "Angel" and bids the knife thrower go on with the show. Dottie, terrified but helpless, has risked her life a half dozen times from the carelessly thrown knives, when the "Angel," bursting out of his prison, rushes into the ring and flings himself between her and the weapons. He is seriously injured. At the hospital, Dottie and the "Angel" pledge their troth.

KEYSTONE.

WHEN AMBROSE DARED WALRUS (Two Parts—July 12).—Droppington, an apartment house owner, is unable to renew his fire insurance on account of difficulties in collecting rents. The insurance agent accidentally sets fire to the house with a cigarette, and Droppington makes fast and furious attempts to save his insurance policy. During the excitement he tries to rescue Mrs. Mack Swain, wife of one of the tenants, a female acrobat. Meanwhile, Swain, also a skilled contortionist, has suspended himself from the roof, a living fire escape, over which children, carrying cats and other pets, walk to safety. When the confusion has somewhat abated, Droppington discovers that he has had the insurance policy in his pocket all the time.

ROYAL.

YOUR HALF AND MY HALF (July 17).—Jones is so stingy and grouchy that he cannot bear to see anybody else happy. He mistreats his wife, his son and his horse. He opposes his son's marriage, and refuses to give his wife any allowance. At last, she informs him that she is ready to split their belongings and go on her own way. He testily agrees. Even the chairs and tables are sawn in two. But the couple are stumped when they come to divide the baby. Then it comes over Jones the sort of man he has been. He consents to his son's marriage and gives his wife all of five hundred dollars which he has inherited from his uncle.

MAKING OVER GRANDPA (July 24).—Grandpa doesn't wish Harry to marry because wives are too expensive. Knowing the old gentleman's weakness for children, Harry persuades Harriette, his sweetheart, whom Grandpa never has seen, to borrow a baby and fall fainting on the front porch. The old gentleman immediately falls in love with the infant, and induces the mother to stay in his house until she is fully recovered. When she announces her intention of leaving, Grandpa proposes to her. She pretends to accept. On the day of the wedding, while the aged groom is pressing his trousers, Harry is married in his place. Grandpa comes in just in time to witness the tail end of the ceremony. He discovers the whole conspiracy. His heart softens—but while he gives his blessing to the young pair, he refuses to shake hands with the minister.

KAY-BEE.

WHEN THE TIDE CAME IN (Two Parts—July 30).—Nina, a poor fisher girl, whose parents have been lost at sea, finds her one joy in life in the love of Glenn Morey. Miss Arnold, a young artist from the city, comes to the island. She is attracted to Morey's appearance and engages him as her model. He becomes infatuated with her. Nina, neglected and heart-broken, sees her happiness slipping from her. At last, one day near the end of summer, Nina overhears Morey ask the artist to marry him. Miss Arnold puts him off till the next morning. That night the fisher girl throws herself off the rocks into the sea. Early the following day, Morey comes down to the rocks to brood over Miss Arnold. She has spurned him and gone back to the city with Leicester Blake, to whom all this time she had been engaged. As Morey sits staring out over the water, the incoming tide washes the body of Nina to his feet.

DOMINO.

WHEN LOVE LEADS (Two Parts—July 29).—Mary Dunning, in the hope of bringing about the regeneration of her sister, Florence, gets her a position in the same office where she, Mary, has worked for two years. William Leonard, Mary's employer, whom she secretly loves, becomes infatuated with pretty Florence and marries her. Florence is extravagant and she and her husband quarrel. The wife arranges to elope with Rock, a former admirer. As he is short of funds, Florence goes to the office during the noon hour and helps herself to one thousand dollars from her husband's safe. The theft is discovered, and Mary takes the blame. Leonard finds at home a note from Florence, confessing what she has done. Mary comes to the house intending to make a final appeal to her sister. Leonard shows her the note. He now realizes the comparative worth of the two sisters. His former feeling for Florence is banished by love for Mary.

FALSTAFF.

A PLUGGED NICKEL (Aug. 6).—The coin first attracted the young business man's attention on a Sunday morning when he was going to church. He found it in his every day suit, while getting dressed for the Sabbath service. He threw it out of the window and forgot all about it. With his family they attended church conducted by the celebrated revivalist, Willie Tuesday, and when the collection plate was passed he found that the plugged nickel was again in his pocket. He gave it to the cause of religion most willingly. In the afternoon while walking, he met a pleasant darkey, who wanted change of a quarter; the business man gave him the quarter and took the darkey's two dimes and a nickel, and discovered that it was the old plugged nickel again, so he spent it in a saloon, and got it back from a car conductor. Then a blind man got it, who gave it to a newsboy, who sold the business man a paper and gave him the nickel again. This time he threw it in the water, and one day while fishing he pulled it up in a fish that he caught and cleaned.

Here's how it was. When he threw it out of the window, his two kids picked it up and bought a plate of ice cream. A little later the father dropped in to get a stamp, and the coin was part of his change. The coin was thrown out of the religious collection and the darkey found it, passed it on a pedestrian, who chanced to be the business man. In the saloon it was accepted without question, and a car conductor got it in change. He put it back in circulation, and the business man was the passenger who happened to get it again. The blind man was a fakir, who stung the newsboy, who in his turn easily got rid of it. The belief is that after the coin was thrown overboard, a fish dined upon it, and as nickels are not currency in the ocean the fish had to retain the money until he was caught. When it was all over, the business man sat down and tried to figure it out. So far as he could see, he did not come out so badly; by means of a worthless plugged nickel his children got ice cream and he got a glass of beer, he bestowed charity, was benevolent, was thanked by the darkey and in the end got his money back.

SAFETY FIRST (July 25).—Fay, a wealthy young lady, is in love with Ernest True, a lawyer. Ernest acts as Fay's trustee and he holds several valuable bonds for her. These are kept in the office safe. Mr. Duke, a villainous fellow, wants to win Fay's hand, and he plots to get the bonds out of Ernest's hands, accuse him of misappropriating them and thus win Fay over. He hires a crook to help him and they make an attempt to rob Ernest's safe, but are almost caught in the act by Fay and Ernest and are forced to beat it. Ernest is suspicious and hires Max, the famous detective, to guard his office.

Max hits upon a plan to catch Mr. Duke and the crook if they should dare to make another attempt to rob the safe. He removes all papers and valuables and locks himself in with the intention of giving Mr. Duke a surprise if he should succeed in getting the safe open. Duke and the crook get into the office, but do not attempt to open the safe; they take it with them by way of the window. A policeman in the street below thinks they are safe movers and helps keep the crowd back. They take the safe to a secluded spot and proceed to bore a hole through the door. They then push a stick of dynamite through the hole. The dynamite is connected to a fuse. Max, in the safe, just saves his life by cutting the fuse before it burns down to the explosive. When a second fuse is put through, Max lights it from the inside. It burns back out, and, while Duke and the crook are looking for another match, it comes in contact with some carelessly placed powder. Duke and the crook are blown out of the window. They land in front of the pursuing police, who have been led by Fay and Ernest in a chase after the missing safe. The arrest is made. Max is rescued from the safe and is proclaimed a great man.

DETECTIVE BLINN (Two Parts—August 2.—A series of mystifying jewel thefts have baffled an able police force. Hardly a day passes that a wealthy society woman does not report the loss of her gems. At length the master detective, Blinn, is put on the case. Meanwhile, Judge Page, a wealthy jurist, enters the palatial store of Shaw, who is known as an exclusive jeweler for exclusive people. Judge Page's daughter, Adele, is with him. Adele sees a wonderful pendant and her indulgent father buys it for her.

Adele is to be introduced to society and the event is to be marked by an ultra-fashionable ball. Meanwhile, by a clever ruse, Detective Blinn has worked himself into the good graces of a pair of men whom he knows to be crooks, and whom he suspects are minor accomplices of the jewel thief. By great patience and diligence, Blinn becomes the criminals' confidant. At length his persistency is rewarded. The men of the underworld include him in "the gang," while plotting robbery at the Page ball. Blinn, himself, poses, by the way, as a crook from San Francisco, and is chosen to steal Adele's pendant. He does so artfully and then his pals lead him to the "fence" where he can get a good price for his booty. After this master stroke all is simple. One by one, Blinn takes his men in custody. The police—the whole city, in fact—is startled when Jeweler Shaw is arrested and proved guilty of being the leader of the thieves.

girl, points to their few months' old baby, begs him to make her his wife. Impatient of her importunities, he strides from the apartment. Nan, a woman of the underworld, in a reckless mood tells her drinking companions that tonight she is going to play Lady Raffles; she shows them a kit of burglar's tools. Although Jim, her intimate companion, warns her against carrying out her intention, she sets out. Helen feeling her shame keenly pins a note to the baby's dress, commending her baby to some kind person's care. Leaving the child in its crib, she leaves. A little later Nan climbs in at the window, her burglar's flashlight darting around the room and striking the baby's crib. Nan, finding that the baby is alone, bends over it. She reads the note pinned to the baby's dress and determines to care for the child. Clasping it to her, she steals from the house.

A policeman near the wharves hears a splash and a cry; he runs to the spot, too late Helen's troubles are over. Arriving home, Lewis finds that his aged father, long an invalid, has passed away. Jim, coming to their room, finds Nan, the baby in her arms, preparing to leave. Amazed, he questions her.

"Jim," says Nan, pointing to the child, "I'm quitting the old life forever."

And Jim, with the first sign of respect he has ever shown her, removes his hat and lets her pass with the child—out into the night, and to a new life.

Five years pass. Lewis, a lonely man, has sought in vain for his child. Nan eagerly supports herself and Bess, the child, by sewing. While crossing a street, Nan is struck by Lewis' auto, but is not injured. Lewis takes her home. They are mutually attracted, and friendship begins, which deepens into love. When Lewis proposes, Nan tells him of her past, and how finding the child caused her regeneration. Lewis sees a great light. He takes from his wallet the note Helen had pinned to the baby, and, showing it to Nan, says, "Let us forget the past. It is my child whom you have mothered won't you still do so, as my wife?" Nan joyfully agrees.

CUPID TAKES A TAXI (August 3).—Bob is a spendthrift and a source of worry to his parents. Bob takes father for a thrilling ride in his runabout. A number of farmers' chicken coops are bereft of their feathered inhabitants, for the speeding automobile runs over chickens whenever the opportunity presents. Irate farmers compel father to make good. Meanwhile, Bob has come upon a maiden in distress, Mabel by name. Forgetting father, he takes Mabel to her home, sowing en route the seeds of acquaintance that soon ripen into love. Driven desperate, Bob's father disowns him, and Bob goes out into the world to establish himself. He becomes a taxicab chauffeur.

Mabel's parents decide that she shall marry Clarence, a wealthy young dude, but Mabel despises Clarence. Her heart belongs to Bobby. Bob receives a call for a taxi. He realizes that it comes from Mabel's home. Forewarned is forearmed, so Bob speeds to the marriage license bureau and equips himself before answering the call. He is told to drive Mabel, her parents and Clarence to the opera. He arranges with Mabel for her to meet him between the acts, which she does, and the pair speed to a waiting parson and are married. Mabel's parents are astounded. Poor Clarence is foiled. Bob's father relents and the young couple are living happily.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

THE MATING (New York Motion Picture Co Five Parts—July 22). Doris Willard, the daughter of a village minister, achieves the realization of her great dream—a year at college. Doris, although a sweet and pretty girl, is greatly handicapped by her clothes. On her arrival at college she is eyed by the other girls with concealed amusement and curiosity and soon realizes that she "doesn't belong." The girls snub her at every opportunity and she is desperately lonesome and longs for companionship.

The Saturday before Thanksgiving when everyone else has gone to the big Princeton-Yale game, Doris sits alone in her room. She picks up the newspaper and sees in it a picture that greatly appeals to her. It is a newspaper cut of "Bullet" Dick Ames, the universal choice for the "All-American Eleven." She conceives a desperate plan. She thinks nobody at her college knows Dick and decides she will make the girls think he is in love with her. She writes a note to herself to which she signs Dick's name. The note is a proposal of marriage. This she drops on the porch of the girls' hall and it is picked up by one of the girls who reads it to the bunch. Daisy Arnold, the undisputed ruler of the "Beauty Squad," will not believe that Dick knows Doris, and writes to his sister, Eleanor, asking both her and Dick down for the holidays. In her letter she tells Eleanor about Doris claiming Dick has asked her to marry him. Dick sees the letter and he and his sister accept the invitation. When Dick sees Doris, he decides to help her out in her deception. Doris is panic-stricken on the night of the reception given in Eleanor's and Dick's honor, but when she is introduced to Dick he says, "Why sure, we are old friends," and Daisy and her friends are much disappointed, their plan for humiliating Doris having fallen through.

After meeting Dick, Doris is unwilling to carry out the deception, but he insists, and before his visit is over they are much in love with each other. Doris, however, refuses to marry Dick, thinking he has asked her out of pity, but through Eleanor's efforts he manages to make her understand that he really loves her.

MILESTONES OF LIFE (Thanhouser Four Parts—July 29).—A man and a woman were friends in childhood, and in their "mud-pie days" planned how he would be a knight, while she would be the lady fair, who would give him her glove as a token for slaying a dragon. But the "serpent" entered their miniature garden of Eden. She was a grown up young woman, and the future "knight" was only a small boy. She was amused at the way he followed her around and convulsed when he formally proposed by means of a grimy note written with a blunt lead pencil on a torn scrap of paper. It was so ridiculous that she kept the note, and had many a good laugh over it. Then she married a man older than herself and vanished from the boy's life. He had sombre thoughts for a time, but men of 8 do not abandon life for love, and he soon drifted back to his early sweetheart, so that it may be said that in the Springtime of life they were chums and admirers.

With "the summertime," when the girl had blossomed into beautiful young womanhood, and the boy was manly and self-confident, their troth was plighted. "The other woman" came to the wedding, and the little bride rather resented the attentions she paid the bridegroom. It has been said that a woman never forgets the men who propose to her, and that the first proposal is remembered longest. So "the other woman" had a kindly place for the "man" in her heart, although she never dreamed of being in love with him. She liked, however, to think that he still remembered the "beautiful princess of his dreams," although the fact is that he had forgotten all about those experiences of his childhood. For a number of years after their wedding, the other woman did not figure in their lives. Then fate brought them to the same city to live, and their paths again crossed. The wife had aged and was gloomy. She thought far too much of her son who had passed away in infancy, ignoring the living to think sadly of the dead. Her husband's love was slowly slipping away from her, being replaced by a spirit of indifference.

When the wife thought of the other woman, it was with ill-concealed dislike. She resented the fact that "the other woman" never forgot the childish proposal of the husband, and was jealous where jealousy was unfounded. In the Autumn of life they parted. It was the fault of "the other woman." Her husband was not as attentive as he should have been, and illness brought on a morbid frame of mind. Unhappily she heard her doctor telling her nurse that his patient had but a year of life to live. Then she was confronted with her great temptation. What should she do with that last year? Should she drift along as she had been, still concealing the aversion she felt for her husband, or should she enjoy the fleeting months that were left her? While debating this problem, she met the man, and he told her calmly that he was on his way to the west on a business trip.

So she reached a rash decision. She believed that the man still loved her, and she thought he would make her happy. She promptly followed him, boarded the train and astonished him by her confession of love and affection. It took him but a few minutes to disillusion her, but the problem that confronted them was how the news could be kept from the husband, for the woman had left him a letter that would have blasted her name. The man took desperate chances, leaped from the flying train, and by a clever ruse, kept the note from the husband, in fact fairly plucked it out of his hands, and yet never let him suspect it. Left alone on the train, the woman was in an accident, a slight one it is true, but the shock was fatal to her in her enfeebled state, and she passed away. The dead woman's husband never knew, for "The Man" fortunately made him believe that the victim was on her way to see her old nurse when she was stricken. The wife learned of the railroad trip by accident; however, there were hasty words exchanged, and "the man" and "the wife" separated, as they believed, forever.

The winter of life opened sadly and drearily for them. Neither could forget the other, but each was too proud to make advances. The man lived in the city, the wife in the little rural community where they lived in their childhood. The wife, on an errand of mercy, passed a tiny house, and saw that it was in flames. She burst in the door, saw a baby lying helpless on the floor, and bravely tried to rescue the child. The smoke overcame her, and she would have perished had it not been that her husband was passing, went in when he heard that a woman and a baby were in peril, and, at the risk of his own life, saved the others. Later there were mutual explanations. The wife found that her suspicions were unjustified, and the man agreed that he had been proud and unbending at a time when a few kind words might have saved the situation. So they mutually forgave and forgot, and some years later passed through the shadows into the beyond, rejoicing that reconciliation had come before it was too late.

PATHE NEWS NO. 57, 1915 (July 17).—THE SEASON FOR WATER SPORTS IS NOW IN FULL SWING.—1. These pictures show the America Cup yachts Resolute and Vanitie racing off Sandy Hook, the Resolute leading across the starting line.

2. The Resolute, still maintaining a commanding lead, gracefully turns the 15-mile windward mark.

3. The Resolute is far away in the distance as the Vanitie swings around the 15-mile mark.

4. Close to the finish the Resolute passes an old weather-beaten bark. The wave-scarred cruiser and the trim racing yacht form a picturesque contrast.

5. The famous Ambrose lightship, known to all who read maritime reports, is at the finish line. The lightship salutes with her whistle as the Resolute skims by a winner.

6. The Vanitie reaches the finish line 5 minutes and 27 seconds after the arrival of the Resolute.

7. Yacht racing, however, is by no means the most exciting aquatic sport of summer season. There is aqua planing, for instance. "Get aboard!" is the watchword of devotees of this pastime.

8. Even more venturesome athletes than the aqua-planists delight in high diving.

9. The City of Chattanooga, Tenn., has been particularly good to its youthful population. Swimming baths like this are many there.

10. Diving over a hurdle in one of the Chattanooga baths teaches the young swimmers how to hit the water at the right angle and avoid the painful "belly-whoppers."

WOODHAVEN, N. Y.—John Hasselbring, of this place, has one of the most remarkable gardens in the country. He has trained hedges of California privet to grow in the forms of household furniture, loving cups, baskets and in other shapes.

NEW YORK CITY—Harry K. Thaw, slayer of Stanford White, leaves the County Court House after the jury, acting in an advisory capacity in the Supreme Court, has declared him sane. 1. Cheering crowds follow Thaw as he is led to the Ludlow street jail. 2. This is the jury that found Thaw sane. 3. Thaw and the officers who have him in charge obligingly pose for Pathe News.

BRADFORD, PA.—"Little" Billy McCarthy, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. McCarthy, probably will be quite a big boy when he grows up. Billy is now a year old, weighs 85 pounds, is 3 feet 3 inches tall, and has a chest measurement of 42 inches. 1. When Billy gets beside Maxwell Madison, who was born on the same day as he, Maxwell, a strong, healthy child, weighing 22 pounds, looks quite a pigmy. In this picture Billy, being hungry, chews a rubber sponge. 2. Billy will need a larger chair if he grows much more. 3. Billy and his mother. The latter has been forbidden to take Billy on the main streets of the town, for the crowds that collect when he takes an outing usually block traffic.

New York City.—A hydro-aeroplane, designed to carry passengers between this city and Albany, plunged into the river on its first trip, so instead of making the journey it is towed ashore.

The manufacture of war supplies has taken precedence over all other industries in England:

1—Practically all the munition factory workers are women now. Lest they suffer in health from their hard and unusual labor the Ladies' Canteen Committee supplies them with food cheaply and in pleasant surroundings.

2—The big machine factories are working night and day, and a continuous supply of this type of weapon is being sent to the front.

3—Old and young, rich and poor are aiding in supplying the men at the front with the sinews of war. The man in this picture is Lord Norbury, who is working as a mechanic in a Surrey aeroplane factory for 14 cents an hour.

4—Every effort is made to ease the suffering of those who return from the front wounded. Convalescent warriors of Queen Mary's Royal Naval Hospital in Southend frequently are sent to the country for a day's outing.

5—In all parts of England the women have heard the call to arms. A recent energetic appeal by the Women's Volunteer Corps. Action has brought many recruits eager and able to take their places as war nurses.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE, NO. 30, "The Wireless Detective"—Two Parts—July 19).—Marcus Del Mar, a foreign emissary engaged in mining our country's harbors, has established a wireless station close to his submarine base. Elaine Dodge, whose sweetheart, Craig Kennedy, has mysteriously disappeared, disguises herself to investigate the strange things that have been happening in the neighborhood of her summer home. Disguised as a man, she comes by accident upon the entrance to Del Mar's secret cave. This entrance is concealed by a waterfall whose flood is controlled by a lever. Elaine sees one of Del Mar's confederates enter. She stands before the mouth of the cave, not knowing that the man has also seen her. The wily confederate of Del Mar looses the flood gates by a secret spring and Elaine is deluged with water and swept into the current. She cannot battle with the current and is almost drowned, when Jameson, who has gone for a stroll by the water's edge sees her struggles, and diving into the stream makes a sensational rescue.

At Fort Dale, Lieutenant Woodward and his friend, Professor Arnold, receive a note from the Radio Department at Washington:

"Radio station using illegal length in your vicinity. Investigate and report."

Arnold offers the wireless apparatus on his yacht and together they start to make their investigation. Aboard his yacht they intercept a message from one of Del Mar's agents to his chief. The message reads, "Bar Harbor successfully mined." They discover the house receiving messages. It is located in the woods about a half mile off shore. Woodward sends for a troop of cavalry to help in their raid. Del Mar, inside the house, gets word through his valet that the soldiers are coming. He dismantles his wireless station, and slipping on a mask makes his escape from the house to his cave by the water's edge. Arnold and Woodward pursue him. Inside the cave he is confronted by Elaine and Jameson, and finds his escape from the rear of the cave blocked. With Lieutenant Woodward and Professor Arnold on the outside, Jameson and Elaine on the outside and a troop of cavalry stationed around, his chance of escape seems almost nil. But he does escape, and in a way that will cause you to gasp with wonder at his intrepid daring.

Jules Valdez, a notorious road agent, has been terrorizing the surrounding country for some time, and a large reward has been offered for his capture. The sheriff and his posse catch sight of their quarry as he looks at a sign announcing the reward, and wound him in the side. He gets away, however, and comes across the senseless form of Mrs. Harding in the road. Picking her up, he carries her to her home, where Jim, recognizing him, hides him in a room, and attends to his injuries. He then throws the officers off the scent when they ride up to the house.

A few days later Valdez comes across the letter referring to the payment on the ranch and determines to get the money in his lawless way, and to repay Jim for his kindness. He then dresses in the clothes of his benefactor, holds up a gambling joint in which Jim has just won a large roll, and relieves a noted gambler of his winnings. In the fusillade of shots which follows, Jim is wounded on the wrist and Valdez loses Jim's hat, which he has been wearing. The authorities find the hat, in which are Jim's initials, and when they learn that he has a large roll are sure of their capture. Things look bad for the rancher. As Jim is being led away with the admonition that he "will hang for this," Valdez, who has returned to his hiding place in the house of his benefactor, comes forth and announces that he is the man whom they are seeking.

MOORISH GRANADA (Picturesque Spain—Globe Films—July 19).—This most fertile part of Spain holds a double interest for the audience. In this picture are shown the unusually primitive habits and customs of the natives, and some of the most beautiful and famous buildings in the world.

ON THE BANKS OF THE CREUSE (Photocolor—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—The mighty fortified castles which rise on the shadowy hills of the Department of Limousin, France, have always held great interest for all. These massive architectural triumphs, relics of ages gone by, are only one instance of the interest of the subjects in this splendid scenic picture.

THE MONGOOSE (Photocolor—On Same Reel as Foregoing).—This little fellow, the object of worship of the Egyptians at the time of the Pharaohs makes a most interesting subject for an educational release. He's a wild creature, but is easily domesticated, and is then a great help in catching rodents and snakes.

THE ISOLATED HOUSE (Victory Films—Three Parts—July 24). Under the assumed name of Stapleton, Roger of Baskerville is condemned to death for being instrumental in the death of a relative and probable heir to the Baskerville estates. After his plea of clemency is denied, he overpowers his keeper and escapes, taking up his residence near Baskerville Castle, and announcing himself to Lord and Lady Baskerville as Loris Collamore, a new neighbor. The next day he succeeds in inveigling them into a submersible house which he has built in a nearby lake, and making them prisoners. He then goes to the castle and announces to the servants that he is a relative of Lord Henry and has come to take charge of his affairs.

The servants become suspicious of the intruder, and, being mystified at the strange disappearance of their master and mistress, seek the aid of Sherlock Holmes, who had been mainly instrumental in securing the conviction of Roger. The great detective takes up the case and in the course of his investigations is locked in a secret closet in the castle by the criminal, who has recognized him. Armed with a pocket wireless outfit, Holmes calls an assistant and is quickly released.

Later, Holmes and his assistant see the submersible house and manage to get inside, where they learn that the Baskervilles are prisoners. When Roger sees that his nefarious scheme has been frustrated he breaks the windows, thus allowing the water to enter, but in the struggle which follows Holmes reaches the raising mechanism and the house slowly rises out of the lake. The prisoners are freed and Roger is captured. But as they leave the house he breaks away from Holmes and again enters his stronghold, sinking the house and disappearing from sight. A terrific explosion tells those on the shore that the villain has used one of the bombs which he had hidden within, thus ending his career of crime.

PRO PATRIA (Pathecolor—Six Parts—July 31).—Paul Capellani, the famous star, plays the part of "Karloo," which gives him a chance to show his remarkable ability.

This is a picturization of the play "Patrie," written by Victorien Sardou, the famous French dramatist. The author was noted for being a master of stage effect, and the film follows closely the stage production.

"Pro Patria" deals with the efforts of the people of the Netherlands to throw off the iron rule of Spain, and the plots and intrigues which were perpetrated at that time. It was staged in Louvain, Belgium, that beautiful city which has since been ruined beyond redemption by German shells. The costuming, arms, customs and properties are absolutely accurate, and the whole production is most lavish. The acting is truly great and the entire six reels grip from start to finish.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR FOOLS THE ENEMY (Week of Aug. 2).—Colonel Heeza Liar doesn't need to see a battle to write it up. Not he. He sits in the trenches, his trusty typewriter on his knees and rips off "eye-witness" descriptions that would make "our special correspondent at the front" blush for shame. His success is his undoing, though. He is given a camera and has to go out on the firing line to photograph the action he so vividly describes. The old Colonel can't see his way out of this, so he just goes. Setting up his camera in fear and trembling, he lets loose on the crank and all is well until the leaden hail starts imitating a snowstorm in Alaska. The Colonel is inspired with the courage of a man who knows there's no escape, and dodges the larger shot with an almost jubilant agility. His tripod is shot from under his camera, but the Colonel keeps on cranking. Hundreds of shots, any one of which carries sweet repose, sneak through his shifty legs, under his flapping arms through his very fingers, but still he cranks. It would be most undignified to say that the Colonel was a "crank on pictures," so we'll leave that out. Suddenly Heeza feels himself hoisted from behind by a treacherous shot, and riding a cannon-ball through the clouds. He lands amongst friends, though, and surprises them with his sudden terror when told he is to be "decorated" for his bravery.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (Episode No. 32, "The Searchlight Gun"—Two Parts—Released Week August 2).—Elaine Dodge, whose sweetheart, Craig Kennedy, has mysteriously disappeared, receives a gift. It is a revolver with a light-casting device under its barrel. Elaine tries it out and finds that the shots go true where the light is cast. Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, engaged in mining America's harbors, has found Elaine's presence a great interference to his work. He gives one of his assistants a bomb to be placed in Elaine's house that night. The man takes the bomb to his hiding place on the seashore. Elaine, wandering off down to the shore, comes on the bomb. She is taking it to Prof. Arnold, the mysterious stranger interested in the case of the foreign secret agents, when she and Jameson are attacked by Del Mar's men. Jameson throws the bomb out of their car. It lands in the roadway and there tears a deep gash.

Del Mar's car coming along behind, cannot stop in time to avoid being ditched. Del Mar's chauffeur is killed, but Del Mar rises from the wreck of his car, and with some of his confederates starts in pursuit of Elaine and Jameson. They fire a few shots and disable Elaine's car. Elaine and Jameson abandon their car. Del Mar, weak from loss of blood, abandons the pursuit, which is taken up by his men. In the chase that follows, Elaine uses her new gun to advantage, killing her foremost pursuer and wounding the next in his gun-hand. She and Jameson visit Prof. Arnold aboard his yacht and tell him their story. Meantime, Del Mar, informed by one of his men of Elaine's mission, mans a submarine to torpedo Prof. Arnold's yacht. Jameson sees the periscope of the approaching submarine and shouts his warning. They get off the yacht just in time to avoid being blown to the four winds. They jump into a motorboat and start for the shore. Del Mar, seeing his first torpedo has failed, discharges another at the motorboat. Skillful manipulation of the steering-gear just saves the motorboat. But Marcus Del Mar is now thoroughly aroused, and in the next episode reaches the height of his criminal career.

THE RUNNING FIGHT (Five Parts—July 15).—Peter V. Wilkinson, New York Napoleon of Finance, deliberately wrecks the Tri-State Trust Company and claims to be a bankrupt, but, unknown to the world and even to his daughter, Leslie, secretes his ill-gotten gains in assets standing in his daughter's name. She is innocent and believes her father to be so. He is indicted but believes he can buy judges and juries. Illingsworth, an old and innocent vice-president of one of the companies, ruined by the wreckage, beside himself, forces himself into Wilkinson's mansion and tries to shoot him. Leslie calms him, but he breaks out again. Wilkinson is intimate with Madeline Illingsworth's revolver is found, and Illingsworth is charged with the crime and ultimately convicted.

Eliot Beekman, a young lawyer, is in love with Leslie, and Beekman also believes in the innocence of Leslie's father. Leslie, stung by the disgrace of her father's conviction, refuses to marry Eliot because she feels she is tainted with this dishonor. Wilkinson commands her to marry Eliot. She refuses. Eliot pleads, but she is adamant. Wilkinson's case goes through the courts, and he finds, much to his chagrin, that he cannot buy judges and juries and courts of appeals as he thought he could, and his ten years' sentence is finaly confirmed. He still has his hold on politics. He selects Eliot Beekman as the future Governor of New York and elects him. Before young Governor Beekman come two pardon cases: one, Wilkinson's appeal from his ten-year sentence; another, Illingsworth's petition for clemency from his capital sentence. The Governor pardons the latter because he establishes to his own satisfaction that Illingsworth was with him at the time the murder was said to have been committed, and not at the place of the murder. He reviews Wilkinson's case, and although he formerly believed Wilkinson innocent, he now sees that he is a rascal; he refuses the pardon.

Leslie, beside herself, denounces him. Wilkinson, still under sentence, disappears and is reported by the newspapers as a suicide, but District-Attorney Leech does not place any reliance in the suicide report and starts a quiet search for him. Later, Wilkinson is discovered in disguise in a cafe, and is brought home by the detectives. Leslie and Beekman accidentally overhear a conversation between her father and the District-Attorney which shows her his true character. She also discovers that his stocks and bonds stand in her name, although she did not know this. They confront Wilkinson and together force him to make restitution of the stolen millions.

THE FIGHTING HOPE (Lasky-Belasco—Five Parts—July 19).—Anna Granger's husband commits a fraud at the bank where he works and is condemned to pay the penalty of a jail sentence. In the hope of proving his innocence she goes to work, under an assumed name, for the President of the closed bank. This man is now indicted himself, though unjustly, and employs detectives who finally unearth a letter positively establishing the guilt of Granger. In spite of everything, Anna remains faithful until she learns that the theft her husband committed was to get money for another woman. Then comes a sudden climax which puts an end to a situation which she could not possibly endure.

KILMENY (Moresco—July 22).—Little Doris Calhoun, of a wealthy English family, makes a playmate of Pierre, a crippled gypsy boy, and drifts away with him and the gypsy band on their wanderings and is seen no more. In twelve years she becomes a great favorite with the gypsies, who have named her Kilmeny, but rather than be married to a brutal fellow, Barouche, she flees the camp.

Kilmeny is found wandering in the woods, by Lord Leigh, and he persuades the rather reluctant Lady Leigh to give the ragged little wild thing shelter in the manor. The child of camps and trails at first finds naive delight in mysteries like electric light switches, bath tubs with fickle showers and rugs upon which she can slide beautifully over the hardwood floors. But long dresses trip her, the butler is a thundercloud, and at night she cannot sleep in the closed-in room unless she pulls her little white bed to the window. To make it worse, Lady Leigh becomes jealous of her husband's protegee, and so does her brother, Bob Meredith, a dashing chap with whom Kilmeny is very much in love. The sensitive girl who cannot bear to hurt birds, beasts or any living thing, cannot bear to hurt her benefactors either, and so in a pathetic self-sacrifice turns her back upon the manor and returns to the angry gypsies, and to Barouche.

But just as the gypsy wedding ceremony is about to begin the father of the long lost Doris Calhoun appears and calls a halt, and proves the beautiful Kilmeny is his own daughter. To prove it, he produces the poor cripple, Pierre, who has braved the wrath of the clan to balk the brutal Barouche and carry word to Kilmeny's father of her whereabouts.

V-L-S-E, INC.

THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY (July 5).—A synopsis of this five-part Lubin feature for the V-L-S-E, Inc., was published on page 742 of the January 30 issue.

THE CLIMBERS (Lubin, 5 parts—Aug. 2). John Hunter, supposedly of limitless wealth, has an extravagant family, whose sole object is to climb to social heights.

The two younger daughters, Jessie and Clara, assist their mother in the management of her social functions, but the elder daughter, Blanche, married to Dick Sterling, a young attorney with great financial ambitions, cares more for her little boy and the providing of a good education for him. Sterling becomes tired of law, and turns his attentions to stock speculation and its attendant excitements, leaving his wife with little attention save that from Ned Warden, a wealthy young stockbroker, who has desperately loved her all his life.

Finding that his income is insufficient, Hunter attempts a cornering of Amalgamated Copper, is unsuccessful. While a great ball is in progress in his home, he is found dead in his office. Even his home is mortgaged. Great depression seizes the family, when Ruth Hunter, the dead man's maiden sister, declares that she has enough for all, if carefully managed. Each of the Hunter daughters hopes that Trotter, a very rich man, may fall for her, but the widow secures the prize for herself.

Ruth Hunter, in order to provide profitable employment for Dick Sterling, gives him entire charge of her fortune, and at the same time secures for him the agency of the Godesby estate. Instead, however, he uses both fortunes to provide the means for large stock speculations, and for a long time he is successful.

Fourteen months elapse. Meanwhile Dick Sterling has almost submerged his home duties in the excitement of business, leaving Blanche almost entirely under the protection of the faithful friend, Ned Warden. On Christmas Eve, it is discovered that Dick Sterling has wasted nearly all of the Hunter and Godesby fortunes in an attempt to corner Hudson Electric, and his flight is interrupted by Ned Warden and his wife, the former having an idea that he can save the family honor.

Aunt Ruth declines to prosecute Dick Sterling, but Miss Godesby is not so kindly, and it is decided that the rich Mr. Trotter shall be appealed to. Then comes the news over the telephone that on the preceding night, he had eloped with the Widow Hunter.

Ned Warden succeeds in inducing Trotter to indorse a note which shall save Dick from disgrace, and they are about to return to the city, when Dick, almost insane from liquor, intercepts them, accuses his wife of infidelity, and madly attacks Ned Warden. Now it is that Blanche, goaded into a confession, declares her love for Ned. Divorce is strongly advised by her mother, but opposed by Aunt Ruth, whose arguments prevail; but in an interview between husband and wife, he discovers that her love is gone from him forever. A few moments later, he is found dead in his chair.

"BUILT BY BRAINS"

This is E. R. Anderson, the famous Minusa Man, who has devoted eight years to perfecting the Minusa Screen.

You Can't Show a Beautiful Film On a Poor Screen

Don't Use Just a Screen Insist on the Minusa Gold Fibre

When you buy a Minusa Screen you don't merely buy it by the square foot. Minusa Screens are "BUILT BY BRAINS" to meet the particular requirements of YOUR particular theatre. All factors are taken into consideration in building the best screen for YOUR theatre.

When you buy a Minusa Screen you also buy MINUSA SCREEN SERVICE

When improvements come along you won't have to throw your Minusa away. Send it to us for full credit and you will get the newest and best.

Our literature will tell you the story of the Minusa Screen and just why it is the best.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

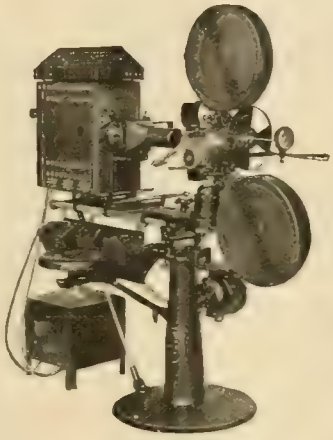
The New 1916 Model Motiograph With the New Sliding Disc Is as Solid as a Rock



Under a test of 60 days —running the machine at a high rate of speed —24 hours per day, and not making one stop, the New Sliding Disc, or any other part of the machine did not show the slightest wear, and the projection was of the painted-on-the-wall kind at all times and at any rate of speed.

There are many other improvements over other models and still the price is not advanced.

Ask your dealer about the 1916 MOTIOGRAPH. If he hasn't one on his floor, write the factory.

The MOTIOGRAPH represents the ESSENCE of SIMPLICITY, STRENGTH and DURABILITY.

The Informative Literature is Ready

Our regrets to those who have asked for and have not yet received their copies of the much discussed Cycle Portfolio—the most comprehensive document ever issued in the motion picture business.

The few copies that first came off the press as an initial edition have been exhausted—and were exhausted before we had fulfilled our promise to one-fifth of our inquirers.

But now we have printed enough extra copies to take care of all who have asked, or who may now ask. Send your name in immediately.

To Exchanges

We wish to state that we will hold all propositions in abeyance and not close any contracts before August 1st, in order to give all an equal opportunity to file with us their proposition for handling the Lincoln Cycle. We are ready to entertain propositions from Exchanges which will get us to the right Exhibitors in a big way.

To Exhibitors

Applications for booking made now will be considered in the order received, to be filled through the Exchange in your territory.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN

will appear exclusively in the CYCLE

Let us make this point clear now, lest the issue be confused. The Lincoln Man—Chapin—whose characterization of the Great President has become the authentic and only accepted one—is with the Charter Features Corporation under absolutely exclusive contract.

Mr. Chapin's first appearance in any moving pictures is in this Lincoln Cycle.

He will not appear in theatres in any other form but that used in the Lincoln Cycle.

He has not and will not appear in any other so-called "Lincoln features."

Chapin has been most highly commended by the men who knew Lincoln best, as being the exact counterpart of the "Rail-splitter." He gives to the Lincoln Cycle all that his fifteen years' success as Lincoln means to the world.

The First Production in the Cycle—

"OLD ABE"

The Pioneer Adventures of Grandfather Lincoln and Daniel Boone, told by President Lincoln.

In five reels—the fascinating, hair-raising and truly inspiring days of young baby America. Before Washington was president, Abraham Lincoln's grandfather, lovingly called Old Abe, lived on the frontier with the celebrated Daniel Boone. What happened one sunny day in early Fall, and how Lincoln's father almost never grew to manhood—the story is told by the President himself; and both Abe and Old Abe are inimitably played by Benjamin Chapin.

First Run Privileges will be especially valuable. Watch for unique advertising campaign for local theatre use.

"THE SANDS OF TIME"

Three-Part Selig Feature Drama Written and Directed by Colin Campbell. Released June 28.

Dr. MacGregor ..... Harry Lonsdale
Enid, his wife ..... Martha Boucher
Young Dr. Blake ..... Wheeler Oakman
The Butler ..... Frank Clark

Superlatives of panegyric are dangerous, especially as a better picture might be released before the encomiums of the present picture have been given time to die away, but it is perfectly safe in stating that no finer three-reel feature has ever come to my attention, since perhaps another three-reel Selig, "The Master in the Garden." In accomplishing this result two very commendable things are noticeable. Mr. Campbell not only directed, but wrote the story himself, and it is another triumph of the scenario conceived directly for the screen. True enough, the theme is an old one as certain blase ones will immediately notify you, but we think that to the rank and file of humanity this picture will appeal as being one of the best it has ever had an opportunity to see. It is a sure combination of materials that gets under the skin of outward indifference to picture effect and that stays there. It stirs mightily, its pathos is extreme and its final moments are a true triumph of motion picturing. We have little hesitation in calling this one of the masterpieces of the screen.

The subject is, as we have intimated, that of the young wife who accepts the veteran and much-consulted doctor, whereas his young assistant also wished vainly for the privilege of her continuous company. Now the gentleman she does marry likes her dearly, is devoted as much as his pre-occupation will allow, and loves her; we are led to presume, in a more or less platonic fashion. The assistant, on the other hand, uses hot words of persuasion, so that it is no wonder that presently the young girl does leave.

Then the scene switches, and we see her living with her younger friend, while a notice arrives that her husband has secured an absolute decree. By this time her ardent young friend shows no further inclination of marrying her, so she leaves, to become a wanderer on the streets, finding lodgings where she can. One night she wanders slowly by a stone parapet in which she discovers a man and woman making the best they can of their hard lodgings, but with their arms about one another. Then there walks slowly and sorrowfully by her, the doctor. He pauses and silently she kneels, then kisses the edge of his coat. He moves onward, then a swift climb to the parapet, a splash, and next two policemen are dragging her body from the river, the young doctor looking on. For the final scene the doctor is to perform a clinic, the background being occupied by note-taking students; while into the foreground a covered body is pushed as subject for the demonstration. The fact that one is allowed to guess that it is his former wife does not abate the tremendous power of this revelation, with which the film ends.

Martha Boucher is a newcomer but extremely effective in registering the scope of feeling required in such a leading part. She looks a good deal like Anita Stewart. Harry Lonsdale played the physician with repression and feeling, while in a somewhat minor part of the impetuous youth, Wheeler Oakman gave a first rate accounting. Frank Clark made more than a butler of his character. Of course in this short space we are unable to more than intimate the course of action which Director Campbell has filled with the heighth of artistic and realistic touches, that make the film what it is. It is one in a year's output that you should not miss. F.

Ward and Fitzgerald will remain in the varieties until the middle of August, when they plan an appearance in burlesque.

Leona Thurber and Harry Madison will present a new act in August.

Reports from the Pantages Circuit indicate that the Six Kirksmith Sisters [illegible] their tour. Juliette Dika is also playing the Pantages

STRAIGHT from his heart of hearts, General Manager Hathaway, of the Trimount Theater Company (Cambridge, Mass.), fires in a letter of enthusiasm. Like a swift, true shot, his finger goes right to the vitals of film success. He says of a Thanhouser release: "EACH ACTOR IN THAT PICTURE PERFECTLY FITTED THE CHARACTER IMPERSONATED WITHOUT FAULT. I WAS SO IMPRESSED THAT I FELT CALLED UPON TO EXPRESS MY APPRECIATION."

THAT is the milk in the cocoanut! Mr. Hathaway has hit it! The characters are real!—They're true!—They live! They are convincing! THAT'S what makes pathos! THAT'S what makes comedy!

THAT'S the Thanhouser aim! The Thanhouser method! And take Mr. Hathaway's word for it, it's the consistent Thanhouser performance! Take HIS word or the word of ANY exhibitor who KNOWS that Thanhousers and Falstaffs are making good with a rip-roaring hurrah.

Edwin Thanhouser

Edwin Thanhouser Presents

"When the Fleet Sailed"

It is doubtful whether any release ever represented greater effort than this. Florence La Badie, Peggy Burke and Harry Benham are cast wonderfully in this production, which will be noted for its genuineness. Everything in it is real, from the great battleships to the officers' shoulder-straps, and there is action every sprocket-hole of the way.

Released in Two Reels Tuesday, August 3rd.

"The Revenge of the Steeple-Jack"

Prepare to lose your breath when you see this one. The big punch is a battle 200 feet in the air by two men who love the same girl. No counterfeit thrill effects! You won't need to ask a question after you see the hair-raising work in this film. Mignon Anderson, Harris Gordon and John Lehnberg worked with all their might—and they know how!

Released in One Reel Sunday, August 8th.

The UNIVERSAL PRESENTS ITS SEVENTH GREAT BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE

Marie Tempest

IN THAT SIDE SPLITTING FARCE COMEDY WHICH MADE THE WHOLE COUNTRY LAUGH:

"MRS. PLUM'S PUDDING"

GEE WHIZ! How these wonderful Broadway Features do pile up. One a week. Humdingers, every one of them, too. Here's an uproariously screaming farce that is positively unique in the history of films.

Marie Tempest plays the lead, and as a fun-maker, Marie gets 'em laughing till it's almost fatal. As Mrs. Plum, the widow whose pudding is represented by tremendously rich oil wells discovered on her farm; pursued for her money by a hard-up nobleman; with a son (the inimitable Eddie Lyons), in the toils of a designing actress—Marie Tempest is a scream—nothing less.

In this great picture Marie Tempest has advantages rarely accorded to any but the greatest film artists. She is supported by the Nestor comedians, who take the very first rank among the funny film folks. The list includes Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, W. Grahame Browne, Jean Hathaway and dainty Violet MacMillan.
And the feature is produced by Director Al. Christie, master of comedy directors.

EXHIBITORS: Here is class. And class is the big punch nowadays. You'll find it in all "Broadway Universal Features." Get in line for the big money by writing for full particulars regarding Booking Dates, special advertising, etc., to your nearest Exchange, or

Benjamin Chapin as LINCOLN

HERE, now Mr. Exhibitor, is your opportunity. Here now is Lincoln—Chapin's Lincoln, the most startling, universally appealing series of big features ever launched, ready for your territory.

Here is your opportunity to get it yourself first, and drain from it all its wonderful money making power. It is a patronage builder.

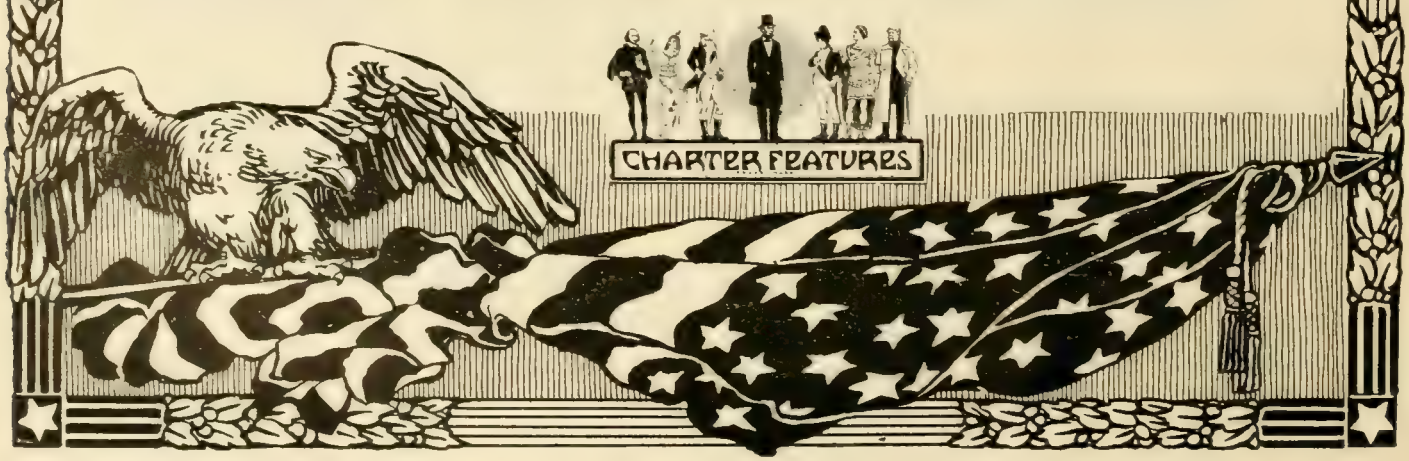
The Cycle of Lincoln Photoplays

is ready. Release notices and how to order on the following page. Don't let this hang fire, because it won't. Correspond with us as quickly as you can and get the whole proposition.

You will be with us sooner or later if you are a big man. If you get in now, there are advantages aplenty that you will be able to see without effort. Get in touch with us today. Read the following page.



Lincoln Cycle Releases

September 13th chosen for opening date of Greatest Serial of Moving Pictures in History of the Industry

Order Now

THE announcements of The Lincoln Cycle have stated that orders would not be received before August 1st.

The reason for this was that the entire field was to be acquainted first with the facts of this stupendous enterprise, before exclusive arrangements were made in given territories. Beginning with August 2nd, orders, contracts and applications will be received.

"Old Abe," the first release, is shown in five reels. It is a perfect motion picture production with Chapin as Lincoln and as Lincoln's grandfather. "Old Abe" is the first big feature of the Cycle, each of which is an independent play, yet all of which fit into the progression of the whole Cycle in point of unity and time. "Old Abe" is complete by itself.

Show it to your audience and forget the Cycle if you want to, but you will find that every man and woman will be "on the job" as each release appears. The Cycle has been laid out in detail.

The Cycle has been blocked out to the very last Feature. It is now in process of creation with a staff of experts in the many departments of picture production.

We are ready to accept your order now for "Old Abe" and we are ready to accept your order for the entire Cycle. Of course, the exhibitor who takes the Cycle, has something with which to conjure—has something to offer his audience, such as no other man in his territory can even compare with.

How the Cycle Will Be Advertised

There are two ways to advertise.

One is to spend the money in a national way, trusting to the density of population for reaching the local theatre's audience.

The other is to spend it in sections around the theatre as a pivot.

Making the Theatre the Pivot

The reason and the advantage of the first are that money goes further in that way—spreading thinly over more territory.

The reason and the advantage of the second are that each territory is covered thoroughly, reaching every person in it.

The Boards of Education to Advertise Chapin's Lincoln

The Charter Features Corporation is going to use the second as its advertising policy. Therefore, it should be understood that Cycle advertising will mostly be done at and about the theatre showing it.

The Churches to Advertise the Cycle

Among other plans which the advertising department are completing is that of co-operation with the schools and the local faculties, and the literature thereof promises to bring many people to Cycle Theatres.

All Societies to Advertise the Theatres

A like plan will be used with the churches.

Chapin (Himself) as Lincoln

LINCOLN

THERE is nothing with which to compare the Lincoln of Benjamin Chapin—unless it be Lincoln himself. Since Chapin produced his great four-act play, "Lincoln at the White House," some ten years ago, there have been many imitations in pictures of this great artist's work, but there is only one man in all the world who has ever succeeded in making the character a living reality.

Chapin's Lincoln is recognized at Washington and all over the world. Chapin's Lincoln is the Lincoln whom people have laughed with and cried over and paid their many, many thousands of dollars to see and to hear, in vaudeville, on the legitimate stage and in lyceum work for fifteen years. Chapin is the Lincoln whom Lincoln's friends declare is perfect. And it is Chapin's Lincoln which will appear exclusively in the Cycle. Chapin will not be seen in any other Lincoln pictures but the Charter Features Corporation Cycle.

Literature Mailed on Request

The most unique "big book" of all motion picturedom is being sent out now to the hundreds who have requested it. Mr. Exhibitor, we have your copy ready. We have printed only enough to go to the better class theatres—the theatres that can handle the Cycle properly and do justice to it.

We will bring new patrons to your theatre! We will draw people who have not before been movie patrons.

ASK THE EXHIBITOR WHO USES ESSANAY

As a rule, all the advertising you see about filling your till to overflowing means little or nothing.

The exhibitor of today is intelligent and knows that only first-class photoplays bring permanent results.

Essanay is not telling you how to get rich quick or to take in so much money you won't know what to do with it. We will tell you, however, that Essanay today is leading the film world in the production of photoplays.

And we can prove it.

The proof lies in the exhibitor who is using Essanay.

Ask him. Go to the man who is filling his house nightly. You will discover the secret of his success. He is providing his patrons with the best photoplays.

And the best photoplays are Essanay.

A Smashing Big Broadway Success!

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY

A Picturized Romantic Novel
By Roy L. McCardell

This wonderful film production—the original continued photoplay in chapters—is the big sensation of Broadway. In the heart of New York's great theatre district "The Diamond From The Sky" plays to the biggest crowds. Throngs clamor night and day for admittance.

Everywhere*—in the metropolis—the smaller city—the town—village—everybody goes to see "The Diamond From The Sky."

You exhibitors who have not booked "The Diamond From The Sky"—you are missing the greatest box office success in the history of motion pictures. A new two-act chapter is released each week. Fourteen chapters are now appearing. Book this biggest money-maker in the business!

For booking information, write, wire or see at once the North American Film Corporation representative at your nearest Mutual Exchange or write or wire us.

MAJESTIC AND KOMIC GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

(In which we try to tell only the truth about all Majestic and Komic releases)

THE STRAWMAN (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, July 27. A comedy drama by the Majestic Juvenile Company, in which the kiddies succeed in capturing the escaped convict.

VICTORINE (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, August 1. A character comedy drama featuring DOROTHY GISH in a new and exceedingly amusing characterization. Victorine is the human target for the knife thrower and in the end marries the angel who has backed the show.

THE DEACON'S WHISKERS (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, August 1. An unusual, interesting comedy number by Anita Loos, featuring Fay Tincher and Edward Dillon. While the Deacon's whiskers are caught in the bath house door, his daughter marries the man of her choice.

BILLIE GOAT (1 Reel Majestic). Release date Tuesday, August 3. Another child comedy by the Majestic juvenile company, in which the children are shown conducting a secret society in imitation of their elders.

BIG JIM'S HEART (2 Reel Majestic). Release date Sunday, August 8. Featuring Charles Clary and "Teddy" Sampson in a story of early Western life, in which the Sheriff learns that his rival is not guilty of the murder for which he is to be hanged, and saves his life.

FATHER LOVE (1 Reel Komic). Release date Sunday, August 8. Another Komic farce in which the ladies of society appear in the roles of the stronger sex.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK

My Dear Mr. Exhibitor:-

The announcement of the formation of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and its intention of marketing its features through the World Film Corporation should be of tremendous interest to you. It means that the first step has been taken toward the goal of direct distribution--a plan which I have fostered--and every advance toward which means a correspondingly increased benefit to the exhibitor. By utilizing the distributing facilities of the World Film Corporation for the dissemination of its products the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation saves the cost of the maintenance of an extensive and expensive exchange organization. That saving will be put into Equitable films. Superior films are a benefit to the exhibitor that is expressed by capacity--taxing audiences.

As a start toward direct distribution the association of the Equitable and World Film Corporations presages the eventual cessation of the useless competition engaged in by a half dozen representatives of as many different producing concerns in the same city--a competition which in nine instances out of ten works the exhibitor an injury by influencing frequent changes of program and business policies that lead to the displeasure and disorganization of a theatre's clientele willing to accord hearty support only to films of a nature and standard which have earned its favor.

The Equitable's announcement is "meaty" with good news for you. Spend a moment digesting it.

Very truly,

Jens Pelzmet

VICE-PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER.

EQUITABLE

CREATED WITH HONEST PURPOSES

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation in introducing itself, does so with the full knowledge that motion picture exhibitors, generally, are justified in being skeptical.

We make no promises other than to issue for release each and every week:

1st—A five reel feature production
2nd—A one reel comedy

both of such a standard as the best talent (in each of the respective departments required by such an enterprise as ours) can produce, with a keen foresight toward the ever and rapid changing conditions and improvements that time demands and master minds create.

We do not believe that our success shall come over night—our goal is too great to be reached hastily—but with the courage of our convictions—a willingness to toil incessantly—inspired by an ambition to become the pride of the industry and representative of America's highest commercial ideals, we feel that our honest and honorable policies, coupled with a determination to help elevate our trade, will ultimately gain proper recognition, and to that end we solicit your co-operation.

THE Wayman plan is a new development of the news-of-the-day-on-the-film idea. Show the first one and you will show them regularly; your audiences will demand them. Most news films are a collection of pictured happenings of slight general and NO particular interest, gathered here and there by photographers who have had no training that would qualify them as judges of news values. The items which make up each film of the National News Weekly are selected by the editors of more than a score of BIG newspapers. One half of the film (500 feet) depicts happenings of general interest; the other half reproduces news events that have occurred in your city—selected by the editors of your favorite home town paper. Here's a slogan for the National News Weekly—You'll find it irresistible:

The Stolen Voice

THE PERFECTLY PICTURIZED ROMANCE OF A GREAT ARTIST

By PAUL McALLISTER

If you were a $5000-a-week-tenor, a feted celebrity to whom the envy of men and the love of women came without the seeking and if, suddenly, without warning, you lost your priceless possession—your voice—what would you do? Gerald Dorville became a motion picture actor. One of his film performances was witnessed by the man who, driven by jealousy, had exercised a strange power to deprive the singer of that glorious voice and, as one result, Dorville was again enabled to make his vocal chords respond to his will. In his days of despair Dorville learned values. Restored to the heights from which misfortune had cast him he experienced no difficulty in distinguishing between the adulation of the shallow beauty whose regard for him was a love of the glamor which surrounded him, and the steadfast devotion of the simple single-hearted girl who loved the man with or without the voice.

The LITTLE DUTCH GIRL

A PICTURE VERSION OF OUIDA'S NOVEL OF COMPELLING CHARM —

"TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES"

The Romantic, appealing story of the babe who startled the old gardener's ducks by appearing among them, afloat in her own little basket. When death robs her of her old friend and guardian she lives alone with her flowers. Romance re-enters her life when a famous artist, searching for an ideal model for his "Marguerite," sees "Little Dutch" at her spinning wheel. Love, all-engrossing, all-conquering, enters her heart, and then—her artist goes away. "Little Dutch" waits and waits. It never occurs to her that Lionel has forgotten her. She hears that he is ill and in want in Paris. Alone and afoot she starts for the great city to comfort and care for him. She arrives to find disillusion and disappointment awaiting her. Jean, the woodman—Jean, the faithful—takes her back to her village home, but the sunlight has gone out for "Little Dutch." Once more she seeks the pond where the startled ducks found her.

WIZARD FILMS ARE FUNNY!

There never was a program that wasn't the better for a dash of comedy. The audience has never been assembled which did not appreciate justification for a hearty laugh. Most comedy films are like a fire-cracker whose powder is damp; They sputter, and stutter and then fizzle out. Wizard films are comedy-fireworks, skilfully, properly loaded. Touch them off and an explosion invariably follows. The

YOU KNOW ME, AL!

THE publication in The Saturday Evening Post of "The Letters of a Busher" elevated Ring W. Lardner from a position of comparative literary obscurity to a place in the sun among the ablest of American humorists. Overnight the ingenuous, unconsciously funny fiction figure he had created became famous. Especially to those who love baseball and follow with interest the doings of the players of the national game, did the conversation and comment of this self-appreciative diamond-hero appeal irresistibly. Characteristic sayings of the busher were interpolated into the slang of the day. He became a national figure. Now he is in the "movies."

The World Film Corporation is offering a series of twelve of the busher's adventures. Each film is a complete feature, but the dozen are so connected by the personalities of their people—the busher and his friends—that by booking the set in its entirety you get a serial—a serial that is a humorous masterpiece—a serial with audiences ready-made and waiting for it.

Many of the pictures were made on the grounds of the Chicago Cubs. A number of baseball's shining lights—notables of the national game—are members of the cast. Roger Bresnahan, Hans Wagner, Garry Hermann and others equally well known here appear for the first time as screen actors.

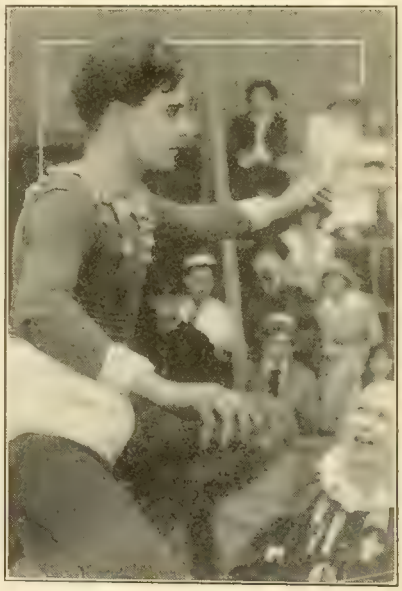
A 3-Act Thriller

by the author and director of "Out of the Ruins"

"The King of the Wire"



featuring

Pat O'Malley

Daredevil Thrillmaker

and

Gladys Hulette

The Talented Little Beauty

Here's a record-making companion for that suspenseful masterpiece, "Out of the Ruins." For "The King of the Wire" is written and produced by the same emotion-twister who played with our nerves in "Out of the Ruins"—Ashley Miller. The same actor who, in "Out of the Ruins" put over the big life-saving act, Pat O'Malley, is here presented in a nerve tingler—see him walk on a slack telephone wire, high above the tree tops, with Gladys Hulette on his back. As the wire swings and sways, as we see the pursuing crook start out on the wire in pursuit, even a "hardened" Exhibitor will get a thrill that starts the perspiration. Then comes the battle in the air. It's nothing of the same old stuff—something new, big, gripping in the unusualness of it, not to mention how cleverly the scene is inwrought to put punch of trip-hammer power into the play. Friday, Aug. 13th.

William Wadsworth, Raymond McKee and Jean Dumar in the really funny comedy, "Food for Kings and Riley." 1000 feet. Direction Will Louis. Wednesday, August 11th.

Bessie Learn, Pat O'Malley and Gladys Hulette in the pretty one-act drama, "A Sprig of Shamrock." Direction Harry Beaumont. Saturday, August 14th.

Facts and Comments

THE man who pays a license for the privilege of exhibiting moving pictures ought not to be troubled with municipal competition. It seems that in St. Louis the city runs "free pictures" on a somewhat large scale, thus making considerable inroads on the patronage of exhibitors. "Free municipal motion pictures" may be all right if confined to a limited territory and run in connection with settlement work, but when the "free entertainment" is patronized by large sections of prosperous people it is quite a different matter.

RECOGNIZING that the motion picture is its most powerful foe the saloon is now trying to mix a moving picture show with the liquid dispensations passing over the bar. In several Western cities saloonkeepers have made application for a license to exhibit motion pictures. They have so far met with little success. Here is a matter for the organized exhibitors to get busy with. They ought to report such places to all the exchangemen and producers. The latter, we have no doubt, will refuse to supply films to saloons. The motion picture cannot and will not be prostituted to promote the sale of cigarettes or to stimulate the consumption of liquor.

A GRAVE question: Out in Kansas the censors swooped down upon a picture because a man was shown in the dreadful act of losing his nether garments, or at least a substantial outer part of them. Kansas code of morals defines such a situation as suggestive. We refer the whole question to a special committee consisting of Breitinger of Pennsylvania and M. M. Miller of Ohio. From the decision of such a committee no one would dare to appeal.

BY THE WAY it almost looks as if some of our producers had been affected by Breitinger's justly celebrated edict and that "all comedies must have a serious purpose." Some comedies that have recently been "released" (the word fits in well here), might better have died "a-borning." They were not only serious, but sad like a picture of Gloom chasing Joy from the atmosphere of the motion picture theater.

RECENTLY we printed a suggestion in these columns that exhibitors insert slips into films showing where the censors have spoiled a good scene. The suggestion originated in the brain of an operator in an Ohio town. He thought that such a course consistently followed by the exhibitors would be the best means of rousing public sentiment against censorship. Since then we have received many assurances of the excellence of this suggestion and we take this way of again bringing it to the attention of exhibitors who live in censorship states. The suggestion is simple, practical and effective.

THE Reverend Dr. Crafts writes to deny that he advocated the restriction of motion pictures to one a week. His statement on the scarcity of educational pictures he also denies. Unfortunately for him the writer heard the reverend gentleman's nonsensical and reckless remarks with his own ears and cannot therefore accept the denial of Dr. Crafts. Perhaps the doctor's recollection is bad. That is a common failing of people who talk too much.

WE CHEERFULLY confess that we did not know who Robert C. Barton was until in his capacity as secretary of the Morals Efficiency Committee of Los Angeles he has succeeded in attracting our unfavorable attention. Speaking at the National Purity Congress Barton made this statement: "Every moving picture actress loses her virtue when she aspires to enter the field." Now there may be nothing the matter with the general health of Barton, but we fear for his imagination. It needs a thorough process of disinfecting.

We will go further and say that any man who will make a contemptible general statement like that is a cad. If we had been unfortunate enough to have been in his audience at the time we rather feel that he would have been called a liar "right out in meeting."

ALBANY has now come to the front and is fighting the local ordinance against Sunday closing. Under the decisions of the highest courts the motion picture theaters have an absolute right to keep open on Sunday anywhere within the jurisdiction of the State of New York. In the meantime prepare for fighting a new Sunday closing law next winter when the legislature convenes.

Presto, Change!

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

GIVEN a stage play that has gone stale and died from lack of public support, or given a novel that has seen its day and contains so little of present interest that second-handed dealers can not sell it at any price, what kind of a five-reel feature can be constructed from such materials? Such is the problem of the adapter who is called upon to rearrange a composition so that it shall be fit for presentation on the screen. He may well earn all that he is paid if he makes a skilful rearrangement and lets it go at that, for he will receive no credit for his pains, but the result can not be other than mediocre. Any architect who is called upon to rebuild and limits himself to the old material must be a creative genius to evolve a fine structure under the circumstances; and, if he is a creative genius, he should not be so hampered and cramped as to the material he shall use.

Between audiences craving strong stories of the hour and men engaged in distribution calling for the wornout stuff of yesteryear the producer is very often at loss how to decide his own policy. He can not respond to the popular demand with what has already outlived its usefulness, and he can not publish new stories unless he can find authors to write them, authors who receive a royalty on gross receipts in literature and the drama, whether they are famous or infamous. Stage directors have enough to do in theater or studio, and their special qualifications are those of their profession. Actors are at their best in their own line of work. Authors refuse to give blood and soul to a story without due recognition and adequate compensation. So the work of hack adaptation goes on, and the producer loses public respect and business good will.

A condition of uncertainty is bound to prevail in motion picture production for many years to come unless a condition of better understanding is established between screen author and screen publisher. We are no longer dealing with a cheap form of entertainment, having no greater significance than that of reflecting what has been done through other mediums of expression. Consider the popularity of the two highest-priced interpreters of screen stories in 1915. Neither was a star before appearing in moving pictures. Both worked their way to popularity in plays written for screen presentation alone, plays to which were attached no names made famous in drama or in literature. This new art has resources of its own, but many will never realize it until they learn through the lessons of bitter experience. When they do learn, there will be a quick change of policy.

Now the average stage play handed to an author for restoration to a former standing, for rehabilitation, is the sorry story of the woman who went wrong, as if theatrical gentlemen were best acquainted with that kind. The fascinating woman who passes through the liveliest kind of experiences, to say nothing of blood-red temptation, and survives the test with a better idea of herself and of the world in which she lives is rarely mentioned, possibly because she has a character wholly lacking in appeal to theatrical gentlemen. It is a venerable stunt to present the adventures gorgeously arrayed, the temporary idol of gentlemen in dress suits, an ancient derivative of life in Paris as it is supposed to be by the hack playwright and frequenter of Lobster Square restaurants. All very well as an occasional dose for the unsuspecting emigrant, but nauseating as a steady diet for intelligent men and women, especially for those who know something about the shady side of life.

Copyright, 1915, by Louis Reeves Harrison.

If stern realism is to present life as it is, even if delightful romance is to present life as it might have been, or might be, why should we so constantly concern ourselves with the rehabilitation of "Camille," or of "Sappho" for the picture play? It can not be that producers imagine that the only creatures of warm flesh and blood are women whose general character, whose very occupation, marks them as incapable of any real depth of feeling. How about the full-blooded creature who is thrown on her own slender resources when unprepared for the struggle, when unprotected by influences of home and family, who is spurred on by natural impulses to exhibit the glowing warmth of her heart, who fights a desperate battle between duty and inclination, whose purity and courage triumphs in the end—has she no place in the pictured play? She would make a glorious heroine, and there would be something worth while to learn from her story.

The architect of a new house built out of old materials will find himself up against an idea that it is not his design that counts. Even when his design is so adequately treated that the complete result elicits critical praise and proves to be a profitable undertaking, he may count upon no added compensation, and he adds very little to his personal reputation. While his plan makes success possible, he is not recognized as a factor in that success. While live people care very little about the ashes of what has burnt iself out, the producer has an idea that a new flame can be blown into them by some modern author of ability and proposes to give both credit and compensation to the author of the ashes rather than of the flame. Right there lies one cause of the tiresome artificiality shown in a large majority of five-reel feature plays.

There are few men thoroughly familiar with all requirements of screen presentation who are capable of stirring dead embers into a beautiful glow of light, and the principal charm of their work lies in their own interpretation of world problems. It is no easy matter for one of such men to act as the mouthpiece of an artist who has said his say in a different medium of expression. There is a certain individuality in a strong writer, in the eyes with which he sees, in the mind with which he transmutes what he has seen, that makes his art-form more or less a self revelation. The real significance of a photodrama lies in what he conveys through it. The theme of the original work may be the merciless world dictum—the adapter may unconsciously be influenced by his own sense of what is just and right. He is apt to bring us into touch with people of today instead of parading the ghosts of our ancestors. He is strong because he has a will of his own.

The great doubt concerning twice-told tales lies in the fact that they rarely have anything new to offer in themselves, whereas the audience craves novelty—people not only desire to live but to live more abundantly than in the past. That they are required to sit and look at what affords them neither suggestion nor encouragement is due very largely to the dogmatic exactions of exchange men and distributing agencies. As long as such exactions exist, so long will adaptations from old works continue, with theatrical stars long relegated to the bush circuits as interpreters. In the stagnation that ensues producers cast about them for a remedy, but they need not look further than the arrangement made by publishers with novelists and by stage producers with dramatists. Only when distributors cease to impose on the good faith of audiences will a bright new era begin.

"The Good Old One Reelers"

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN A RECENT communication to this paper we find these words: "Please give us some articles on when are we to have the good old one-reelers again, the backbone and life-blood of the picture business? We want the assorted program and a variety of films with 'punch' and a let-up on the epidemic of long padded stuff and Big Stars who don't put the dollars in the box office, at least not in small towns."

Our friend no doubt voices a feeling of unrest and dissatisfaction which is found in the exhibiting ranks old one-reelers" he propounds a problem that at this time puzzles us all. When, indeed, will these "good, old one-reelers" come back? That the school of motion picture production which worked on the thousand foot reel as its unit has deteriorated no one will deny. In proportion as the multiple reel developed the single reel weakened. Today the art of producing fine single reels has practically become a lost art and the men who were masters in this art seem to have lost their cunning.

A concrete example will illustrate just what I mean and I know that most exhibitors will agree with me. The man who created a new school in dramatic kinematography discovering and cleverly utilizing the advantages of the screen was David W. Griffith about seven years ago. He has since specialized in multiple reels, but nothing he has done in the new field has surpassed the unforgettable old Biographs like "Pippa Passes," "The Baby's Shoe," "The Lonely Villa" and scores of others familiar to old time moving picture men. I believe some of these splendid old "one-reelers" have been re-issued by the Biograph Company, and I have no doubt they were well received by the public.

Is there any reason to suppose that a revival of the single reel school of art would be welcomed by exhibitors and by the public. Though Griffith was the first and foremost man in this new school he was by no means the only one, and we all remember that in the hey-day of the "licensed films" every producer of the group with perhaps one or two exceptions, struck a wonderfully high average in single reel quality.

Who would then have thought that the single reel would ever come to be a mere filler? The good feature of substantial length has, indeed, come to stay, and is destined to an higher development along the lines of quality, but why should the single reel not parallel this quality? There is not a man in the exhibiting business today whose memory and experience go back seven years who would not gladly trade two or more "ordinary features" for one good, old "licensed" single reel as the single reel averaged in those days.

Is it possible to specialize in both; to make first-class single reels and first-class multiples with practically the same materials and on practically the same basis? Here is a large question which has often been discussed pro and con among the exhibiting body of the country. I do not know just what the result would be if a vote were taken, nor can I know whether such a result would necessarily be conclusive. In a general way, however, one might say that this is an age of specialization and that in the very nature of things it is very hard for a man to specialize in more than one field at the same time.

Exhibitors must do a lot of hunting and choosing before they can find "a good, old one-reeler" nowadays. The supply is limited. With the increasing demand for at least a partial return to the high-quality single reel we may soon expect better things.

The League's New President

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN CHOOSING for their president Frederick J. Herrington of Pittsburgh, the delegates to the national convention have bestowed a just and well-deserved reward upon one of the pioneers of organization. As far back as 1908 Herrington was active and successful in getting the exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania to realize the benefits of organization and to stand together in the common cause.

Mr. Herrington represents the so-called small exhibitor, whose demise has been so frequently and so futilely predicted in certain firm circles. The small exhibitor has survived thrivingly and bids fair to be in the future what he has been in the past, i. e., the mainstay of the motion picture industry. His existence and prosperity rests upon the broadest and most lasting of all foundations, i. e., the demand for cheap recreation. The exhibitor with a high-class entertainment and with a big seating capacity will by no means diminish, but, on the contrary, promises to play a bigger part than ever before. He will always be less numerous than the so-called small exhibitor. Both types are essential to the growth and welfare of the motion picture.

We believe that the new president possesses in an unusual degree the qualifications which at this time are most needed in the leader of the league. He is above all things an organizer. I have little patience with the men who seek to make little of the league because its growth has been small. What industry has ever been organized on a national basis without the expenditure of a good deal of sweat and time? The exhibitors are scattered over the biggest territory in the world; many of their state organizations were poorly put together from the beginning.

What is needed now is energy and Mr. Herrington possesses energy in abundance. He possesses more than mere energy. He has intelligence and breadth of mind He is thoroughly familiar with the problems of the exhibitor and with the alphabet of organization. He knows how to put the arguments in favor of organization convincingly before the exhibitor. We shall be grievously disappointed if, under Herrington's leadership, the league fails to grow in numbers and in influence. On more than one occasion Herrington has shown that he abhors a dog-in-the-manger policy against the exchangeman and the producer. He is an earnest believer in mutual co-operation and in a rational and constructive adjustment of the exhibitor's relations with the distributor and the producer. Mr. Herrington faces a grave responsibility in his leadership, and we believe that no one realizes this fact better than he. We wish him success and will be glad to co-operate with him and the other officials of the league in every movement for the betterment of the exhibitor's position.

A word of thanks and more than a word of thanks is due to the outgoing president Marion S. Pearce, of Baltimore. He has made many and great sacrifices for the league and in the course of his administration has made friends both for himself and for the cause of organization.

We hope that one of the first acts of the new administration will be the strengthening of the state units, many of which have at this time little more than a nominal existence.

In its last analysis the strength of the league depends wholly upon the strength of its state organizations. If between now and the next national convention these organizations are brought up to high standards all well-wishers of the league will be sincerely pleased.

Samuel Long, of Kalem, Dies

Pioneer Motion Picture Man Succumbs to Typhoid—In Business Since 1897.

SAMUEL LONG, president of the Kalem Company of 235 West 23d street, and for the past eighteen years one of the most influential of moving picture men, died at his home in the Clarendon Apartments, Eighty-sixth street and Riverside Drive, New York, at 5 o'clock in the morning of July 28. Death was due to typhoid fever, from which Mr. Long had been suffering since July 4. The end came unexpectedly, for on the evening preceding his death the patient appeared to be in good spirits and physicians had no reason to anticipate the sudden collapse. At three o'clock in the morning a blood clot formed in the lungs and nothing could be done to restore Mr. Long's vitality. He grew steadily weaker and passed into unconsciousness shortly before his death at 5 o'clock. He is survived by a widow and two brothers. He was forty years of age.

Samuel Long.

As had been his custom for a number of years, Mr. Long went to Asbury Park, N. J., to spend the Fourth. While there he was taken ill and a few days later was removed to the Riverside Drive apartment. His strength had been seriously impaired by an attack of pneumonia about a year ago; but despite this handicap his condition improved during the ten days prior to his death. It was characteristic of the courage and optimism of the man that only a few hours before losing consciousness he dictated a long statement relative to motion picture matters.

Samuel Long was a Southerner by birth and as a young man settled in Baltimore, where he received the education that made him an expert mechanical engineer and chemist.

In 1897 he moved to New York and accepted a position with the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, later the Biograph Company, and the following year became superintendent of the Biograph factory in Hoboken, N. J. He remained with this concern for about ten years and was directly responsible for many of the technical improvements in the production of moving pictures. At that time the industry was in its formulative stages and Mr. Long literally devoted his life to the betterment of an art in which he took a keen personal interest.

When the Kalem Company was organized in 1907, Mr. Long was elected president, an office that he never relinquished. He had been a director and active in the councils of the General Film Company ever since its formation and for a time was treasurer of the organization.

Because of a truly lovable personality and sterling qualities of character that endeared him to associates and competitors alike, Mr. Long was a man of whom it might correctly be said that he had no enemies. He was unselfish in the extreme, always shunned personal publicity and worked indefatigably for the advancement of the business that he had done so much to promote from its inception. He was equally well acquainted with the commercial and technical ends of the industry. There was not a piece of machinery in the Kalem laboratory with which he was not thoroughly familiar and he possessed an exact knowledge of every process followed in the preparation of a motion picture.

In speaking of Mr. Long's great value to the industry, H. N. Marvin, of the Motion Picture Patents Company, said: "Mr. Long developed a singular aptitude for factory management, both in devising economic systems and devices, and also in the management of employees. Many of the systems he devised and practiced for the manipulation of motion picture films have been widely copied by others. Under his careful supervision, the photographic quality of Biograph products reached a high degree of excellence. Mr. Long was exceedingly faithful and conscientious in all his work and always was absolutely reliable. He stands in the front rank of motion picture factory pioneers. The development of the motion picture art is greatly indebted to him."

Mr. Long's old associates acted as honorary pall-bearers at the funeral held in the Clarendon Apartments on Friday afternoon. They were J. J. Kennedy, General Film; H. N. Marvin, of the Patents Company; W. N. Selig and J. A. Berst, of the Selig Polyscope Company; W. T. Rock, J. Stuart Blackton and A. E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company; Siegmund Lubin, of the Lubin Company, and George K. Spoor, of the Essanay Company. Officers of the Kalem Company were the active pall-bearers. Interment was in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York.

Arbuckle in New Film for Bosworth

MACKLYN ARBUCKLE, the popular star of the legitimate stage whose success in the Bosworth production, "It's No Laughing Matter," has made him a big favorite among motion picture patrons, is soon to be seen in "Home and Politics," a screen adaptation of his well known vaudeville success, "The Reform Candidate," written by himself in collaboration with Edgar A. Guest.

"The Reform Candidate" was first produced in vaudeville by Mr. Arbuckle at Washington, D. C., on Christmas Day, 1912. The premier was an instantaneous success and was booked for two seasons in all the largest vaudeville theaters in the East and South. His appearance in the Five-Star revival of "The New Henrietta," which just closed after a big tour of the country, prevented his acceptance of an offer from the Orpheum Circuit, which would have brought him to the coast.

Macklyn Arbuckle.

Mr. Arbuckle had just returned to his country estate on the St. Lawrence River after an active season on the road when he received a telegram from Bosworth, Inc., calling him to Los Angeles for another picture. The star is already at work on this production at the Bosworth studios and must finish up his activities there in order to return to New York by August 1 to report for rehearsals for his winter engagement.

In the Bosworth release, "It's No Laughing Matter," Mr. Arbuckle displayed with notable success his adaptiveness for screen work and big things are expected in his second subject for these producers. "Home and Politics" will show off the popular star to best advantage and should score big success for him on the screen.

FLORENCE LAURENCE SERIOUSLY ILL.

Word comes from Milford, Mass., that Florence Laurence, who, before her retirement from moving pictures a year ago, was one of the best-known motion picture actresses in the profession, is seriously ill at her country home here. Her condition is so serious that two Boston specialists have been telegraphed for.

Miss Laurence entered the motion picture field ten years ago while yet a girl in short dresses. Her first important parts were played under D. W. Griffith at the old Biograph studio. Later she played with King Baggot at the old Imp (Universal) studio in the original Imp company. After a year and a half with the Imp company, Miss Laurence went to Philadelphia, where she played leads for a time with Arthur Johnston. Ill health compelled her to retire from pictures for a time, but upon her recovery she joined the Victor company, playing opposite Matt Moore, until her retirement from work before the camera about a year ago because of ill health. In private life Miss Laurence is Mrs. Harry L. Salter, wife of the moving picture director of that name.

Coming Over the Divide

Blaisdell Becomes Poetic Over the Passes of the Rockies, But Is Shocked by a Shot in the Night.

From the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Denver, Colorado.

A TINY stream trickled along the tracks at the eastern exit of the tunnel at the crest of Tennessee Pass, in the Colorado Rockies, two miles in the air. One spring might have been the source of the water.

"As we entered the two hundred feet of tunnel you may have noticed a similar bit of water," said an easterner who owns railroads in the West. "That was on the way to the Pacific. This bit here is the Arkansas River, and it's on its way to the Atlantic. And that's some ocean. Did you ever see it?"

There are times when one is torn by confilicting emotions; when he doesn't know whether to fall on a man's neck or to call him names.

It was with deep interest we followed during the afternoon that bit of water 162 miles down to Pueblo, over a mile nearer sea level. We saw it grow into a husky stream, that tumbled and surged through the same old course Dame Nature had selected thousands of years before, never realizing she was providing a more or less simple route for the use of railroad engineers of a later era.

Much may be crowded into a single day—in the Rockies—if one will arise before the sun. His first impression may be one of the most lasting: A streak of sunlight just touching the top of a great red side of the canyon of the Grand River. Canyon it hardly is. Rather is it a great plateau inclosed by giant walls. In green fields are a few dwellings, some of them of logs, as they might have been two hundred years ago. Off to the east we catch a glimpse of Old Sol just starting up behind the distant Rockies. The train moves. A man on horseback waits for it to pass. He takes out a match and cigarette. The former he strikes on his saddle; but one hand is required to protect the flame from the morning breeze; he drives his heels into the ribs of the finely-conditioned animal; as the cohesive bit of machinery moves rapidly away the driver throws his head back, settles himself one-sidedly into his saddle, buttons up his flaring jumper and is started for his day's work.

A barefooted boy emerges from a log cabin, walks a few feet and casts a line into the Grand. Another American President in the making? Who will say no?

Through the tunnel, the train slips down the hill and past the big fellows. There is Mount Massive, one of the highest peaks in Colorado—over 14,000 feet—its crest covered with snow. Near it are the closely resembling triplets, Mounts Harvard, Princeton and Yale, all freely touched with winter's tribute. The sky is clair. As we get around to the east a thunderstorm breaks on Yale, shutting it from view. Harvard is in deep shadow. Princeton, in the center, is serene, the sky showing a clear blue through the patches of fleecy cloud above it. A great wreath of vapor, as if slowly issuing from the pipe of a giant smoker, coils about Massive.

Crossing from San Pedro to Catalina a couple of weeks ago the channel was unkind—as usual. A little girl who, during the preceding two hours had heard much about swells, went to the side of the boat. "Oh, papa," she said, addressing a man in clerical garb, "the swelling's gone down." "Yes," replied her father, "the swelling has gone down; and the patient, in fact all the patients, seem much improved," he added as he glanced around the deck.

Dropped off at Salt Lake City on Monday afternoon for a couple of hours. It was tough luck to miss "Bill" Swanson by a couple of minutes. We looked in at the American theater and met up with H. A. Sims, the manager, who said Mr. Swanson had just stepped out. Mr. Sims took us on a flying trip over his fine big house. One of the most interesting factors was the ventilation plant, capable of shooting 60,000 cubic feet of fresh air through the theater in one minute, and every foot of it drawn through water at that. Mr. Sims took his visitor down under the stage and turned on the big Sturtevant fan, warning us to "hold on to your hat." He explained that the air was distributed through 800 mushroom ducts scattered over the house. For a moment it seemed as if not only the hat but one World man were in imminent danger of passing through the water and emerging from those 800 vents. There was no question as to the fine quality of air in the theater.

The American has a splendid Kimball organ, which is used in conjunction with an orchestra of fifteen or eighteen pieces, the number depending on the season. The lobby of the American is 165 feet long, decorated with large framed photographs of players. Mr. Sims said business was very good, but that there was a feeling among the management of the house that too much was being given for the money. At present the admission ranges from 10 to 20 cents, with some seats at a nickel. It is intended to change these figures, making the admission 10, 15, 20 and 25 cents.

At the Broadway Theater we met Manager A. J. Fyhn, who reported business to be fully as good as could be expected at this season of the year. He said that while there were many tourists stopping off at Salt Lake they did not as a rule spend much money on theatrical amusements, saving the "necessary" for hotels and food and sightseeing. The Broadway has a thousand seats.

It was a pleasure to find in charge of the Universal Film and Supply Company our acquaintance from El Paso, H. D. Cassidy. Mr. Cassidy had been in his present position but two weeks, but that time was sufficient for him to have learned that he likes his assignment, which comprises Utah, Idaho, Eastern Nevada and Western Wyoming. The new manager is arranging for the distribution of Broadway Universal Features in such a way as to give the smaller exhibitors a chance to show them.

* * *

Mr. Sims introduced us to I. P. Arnold of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and J. B. Roden of the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Arnold said that "Who Pays" had been very successful and that "Neal of the Navy" would be also. Manager Roden reported business good.

Charles R. Gilmour, representing the World Film Corporation in Utah, Montana, Idaho and portions of Wyoming and Nevada, said business was excellent, with no let-up in the demand for features.

* * *

By the way, we heard that William H. Swanson now controls three theaters in Salt Lake—the Rex, of 1,200 seats; the Liberty, of 1,000, and the American, of 3,000. And he said something in Los Angeles about having left New York for a rest, to get away from Broadway. Come to think of it, he did add he might have something to spill later. He's a great Bill!

* * *

W. P. Moran of the Mutual Film Corporation said his exchange was doing a good summer business.

We just missed Roy P. Madden, the manager of the General Film Company's exchange. Mr. Madden had heard there was a World man at large and had phoned in to his office to seize the visitor, but the train man wouldn't wait. In Mr. Madden's absence we were shown over the big exchange by W. C. Riter. There is a large space in the center of the floor for demonstrating machines. The offices are at the front. In the rear are the inspecting tables and a novel film cleaning device; here also are the shipping department and the film storage vault, the latter of reinforced concrete.

Louis Marcus, president and general manager of the Notable Feature Film Company, was not in, but we met George E. Carpenter, the advertising manager—who said hello to Epes Sargent—and also D. L. Leavitt, representative. The Notable in Salt Lake means Paramount. The exchange is doing a good and steady business with Famous Players' "The Eternal City" and will soon put out George Beban's powerful portrayal of "An Alien."

Up in the Colorado mountains Monday night, or rather Tuesday morning, somewhere about 2 o'clock the train stopped. It had been doing that same thing with considerable frequency and seemingly with unnecessary rudeness. On this particular occasion we raised the shade and looked out the window. The night was dark, but apparently there were a few houses near. Suddenly the air was split by a yell—it was startling in its suddenness and in its sharpness. Instantly it brought to mind the vocal efforts of a square-shouldered cattleman in San Antonio early in March. It was the coyote cry, known to every "puncher" from old Mexico to Montana. Its significance was open to doubt—easily it might have indicated a fight or a frolic or both. Before the second of the two short notes was fairly started reverberating through the hills there was one easterner's head buried four thousand miles more or less in his pillow—and that is no joke—as far below the rim of the window as it was possible to jam it. The yell was not repeated. But surely for a moment it did sound as if there was going to be a mean job for the sheriff or the coroner. Probably nothing more happened than the greeting of a returned traveler, but if in the future we may see on the screen men crawling under tables or seeking other cover there will be a better understanding of how they are supposed to feel.

The foregoing, as the dateline indicates, has been penned in Denver—a city of wonderful atmosphere; and that goes both ways. The air is invigorating; the town is new—it dates from '58—but it possesses all the charm of the oldest. Within its borders are the advantages of up-to-the-minute civilization; without are innumerable calls to those who love the wild, the unconquered—forest, mountain and stream. But for a visitor of a few, and, of course, short hours, work is doubly work. In the morning we start for Kansas City to visit Joe Gilday and Henry Lappe and the film boys there. And 2 o'clock is striking. Good night! BLAISDELL.

Metro Day at the Fair

Big Motion Picture Event Has Many Thrills—Daring Stunts of Aviator Smith.

THERE were no business sessions of the League on Thursday afternoon, July 15, so the convention delegates, visiting exhibitors and their friends being the guests of the Metro Pictures Corporation at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, where Metro Day was officially observed. Sight-seeing automobiles and taxicabs transported the visitors from the Auditorium to the Exposition grounds, where free admission tickets were distributed. Shortly after arriving at the Fillmore street entrance, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow and others of the Metro party made their appearance, and, headed by Exposition guards and a band of music, marched through the dense crowds that filled the Avenue of Palms to the Court of the Universe, where preparations had been made for their reception.

Exposition officials were in waiting here, and Director Frank L. Brown, representing President Charles C. Moore and the board of directors, made a short address. He said in part: "We feel that we owe to the moving picture industry a deep debt of gratitude for the splendid publicity that has been given the Exposition throughout the world. When the last great exposition was held in St. Louis, ten years ago, this industry was in its infancy and the marvelous growth since that time is one of the wonders of the age. This is the first occasion on which the moving picture industry has been officially recognized in this magnificent court and it is particularly pleasing to note the interest that is being taken in the event."

On behalf of the board of directors he then presented to Francis X. Bushman a bronze medal, "in appreciation," as he expressed it, "of the service rendered the cause." Mr. Bushman responded feelingly and stated that posing before the camera was never like this, pointing to the vast crowd that filled the Court, declaring that he had never expected such a wonderful demonstration.

Mr. Brown then presented a similar bronze medal to Art. Smith Writing "Metro" in the Sky.

Edward A. McManus, general manager of the Hearst-Selig news pictorial service, who responded in a telling manner, outlining the higher ideals of the moving picture news service. He said in part: "The one striking new feature of modern life is the wider and wider diffusion of information. The press hitherto has been the great instrument of this beneficent work. With the supreme inventive genius of modern men the press has been supplemented by the moving picture film, which not only gives the same wide presentation of the subject, but which visualizes it in presenting it pictorially, and which has established itself as a new and vital educative force in the modern civilized community."

Presentation of Bronze Medal for Hearst-Selig Weekly.

A bronze medal was also presented to the Exposition Players Corporation, which has the concession for taking moving pictures on the grounds, this being received by George Collins, manager of the concern. Mr. Collins stated that about one hundred and fifty thousand feet of film, depicting scenes and events at the Exposition, were now in readiness to be shown.

Harry Reichenbach, of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was then introduced, and stated that the credit for arranging such a novel program must be given to the Golden Gate Film Exchange. E. M. Asher, of the latter concern, who conceived the idea of Metro Day and who arranged all of the details, was also presented.

The party then proceeded to Filmland, on the Zone, where a beauty contest was held and twenty-five aspirants posed before the camera. One of these will be chosen later to appear in picture productions. A short performance was given on the band-stand at the Plaza, but no attempt was made to enact scenes on the grounds, as was originally planned, owing to the dense crowds.

The most sensational feature on the program, and one which will long live in the memory of those who witnessed it, was the night flight of Art Smith, the boy aviator. With scarcely a breath of air stirring he mounted into the clear sky at 8.45 o'clock in an illuminated biplane, and at a height of three thousand feet etched the word "Metro" in letters of fire on the heavens, a performance that brought forth gasps of astonishment and admiration from the fifty thousand spectators who witnessed the flight. This feature of the program was arranged by E. M. Asher, who is a close personal friend of Mr. Smith. At the end of the flight the daring aviator was presented with a gold medal by Francis X. Bushman, on behalf of the Metro Pictures Corporation.

Those composing the Metro party at the celebration were Fred Balshofer, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Reichenbach, A. L. Myers of Los Angeles, Mrs. Doll of New York, Art Smith and his manager, William Bastar, and Leon Netter, E. M. Asher and Irvine Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

"YOUTH," WITH BARONESS DEWITZ.

One of the most notable recent contracts signed by the Vitagraph Company is for the appearance of Mlle. Valkyrien, wife of Baron Dewitz, in "Youth" by Lanier Bartlett, to be produced in three parts by Captain Harry Lambart. Mlle. Valkyrien, probably the youngest Baroness at the present time, is the acknowledged prize beauty of her native country, Denmark, her claim to loveliness being recognized by no less a personage than the King of Denmark, who awarded her the prize accorded by Royalty to the most perfect type of Norse beauty. Not only is the Baroness remarkable for her exceptional loveliness, but has won distinction as a member of the Royal Ballet of Denmark, besides being well-known in the Danish Biograph pictures of Copenhagen.

The Baroness will make her first American appearance under the Vitagraph banner, and, in "Youth," will have a part ideally suited to her personality and artistic capabilities. Her associate players will include Antonio Moreno, Donald Hall and Frankie Mann.

Vitagraph Features in the Making

Many Big Productions Are Under Way at the Flatbush Studios, Employing Numerous Picture Players.

IT IS officially claimed by the Vitagraph Company that it has more big feature productions under way than any other motion picture company. The statement sounds large, but then the Vitagraph Company is a large concern with facilities for doing many big things at the same time. On this work are employed twenty-two directors of whom eleven are working on feature productions, and of one hundred and twenty-five stock players eighty-five are busy on features. Aside from the regular stock company of players several hundred are engaged as extras as the occasion requires. The following are the productions in course of making: "The Battle Cry of Peace," written by J. Stewart Blackton, is being produced by Wilfred North with these leading players: Charles Richman, Ralph W. Ince as President Abraham Lincoln, Joseph Kilgour as General George Washington, Paul Scardon as General Grant.

"The Goddess," whose thirty parts are nearing completion under the direction of Ralph W. Ince, was written by Gouverneur Morris with Charles W. Goddard in collaboration with Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in the leading parts.

"The Patriot," from the story by William J. Hurlburt, is being made in six parts by Director Marston with Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Arline Pretty, Rose Tapley and Bobby Connelly appearing in the principal roles.

Three pictures that will be shown in five parts each, include "A Night Out," with May Robson and The Big Comedy Four, under the direction of George D. Baker, another of William J. Hurlburt's masterful stories, "The Writing on the Wall," picturized by Marguerite Bertsch and being produced by Tefft Johnson with Joseph Kilgour and Virginia Pearson. "The Island of Surprise," picturized from Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's story of the same name in which William Courtenay, Charles Kent, Eleanor Woodruff and Julia Swayne Gordon are appearing in the principal characters under the direction of Lorimer Johnston.

There are also three four-part features, a picturization of George Ade's "Artie," in which Ernest Truex and Dorothy Kelly heading an all-star cast is being produced by Director Harry Handworth. W. P. S. Earle's college story "For the Honor of the Crew," of which he is also the director, introduces James Morrison, Muriel Ostriche and W. B. Davidson of Columbia '09, in the leading characters, and "The Making Over of Geoffrey Manning," by C. T. Dazey and William Addison Lathrop, with Harry Davenport directing a cast headed by Harry Morey and Ned Finley.

"The Ruling Power," a three-part Broadway Star Feature advocating Woman Suffrage, which will be completed very shortly is being produced under the direction of Lionel Belmore, with Edith Storey and Leah Baird, and to complete the list, Captain Harry Lambart has just begun work on "Youth," Lanier Bartlett's three-part picture story in which Antonio Moreno and Mlle. Valkyrien will be seen to advantage.

BRONX EXHIBITORS VISIT BIOGRAPH.

Furthering the keen interest the Bronx exhibitors are taking in Biograph pictures, a movement was made at a recent meeting of the association to obtain permission of the Biograph Company to visit their studios. This permission was granted and Friday, July 23, the entire association were guests of the Biograph.

A tour of the administration building, studio buildings and laboratory was followed by watching Director Vale filming scenes of Tennyson's poem "Dora," a forthcoming three-reel production. For a rest in between tours, the exhibitors adjourned to the spacious projecting room where "Jane Eyre," this week's three-reel release was projected.

Of particular interest were the miniature projecting machines in the laboratory through which every reel of film is run and thoroughly inspected before it is shipped to the exchange.

After a short social visit, the exhibitors were on their way, firm in their belief that they had seen a studio whose equipment and facilities are, in their scope, responsible for the high standard of quality maintained in all Biograph productions.

"SILENT BILL'S" FIRST BABY.

"Silent Bill" Haddock, the well known motion picture director, is now a proud father of a daughter who was born July 20th at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Haddock, 784 Argyle Road, Flatbush, Brooklyn, New York.

Riley Chamberlain

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., is the place and 1854 the year that Riley Chamberlain, for forty years a famous entertainer on the legitimate stage and screen, first saw the light of day. But Riley, his legion of friends always call him Riley, despite his sixty-one years, isn't ready for the old man's home by any means. Just the contrary, for the old boy, like good wine, improves with age.

Riley Chamberlain.

It was a big day for Riley, a husky, smiling lad when he left Cornell University with his prize diploma tucked under his arm. But in his graduation, Cornell not only lost a star pupil, but one of the best all-round athletes of the university's early history. It was a big problem Riley faced after graduation. Where should he begin to turn his talents into money? The Stage! Riley had plenty of ambition and some talent.

Once a member of the legitimate, it wasn't long before Riley began to make a name for himself. During the thirty-five years he was connected with the stage, Riley appeared in support of stars in such successes as "The Blue Mouse," "Tillie's Nightmare," "Lulu's Husband," "Madame X," "Excuse Me" and others too numerous to mention.

When Edwin Thanhouser organized the New Rochelle studios, Riley quit the legitimate for the movies and has been there ever since. As the chief comedian of the Thanhouser forces, Chamberlain has won for himself an enviable reputation, often being referred to as the "Jefferson of the screen." Character leads in Falstaff releases have been his chief work for the past few months.

Riley spends his spare time in a handsome home in New Rochelle. He is an enthusiastic golfer, and a good one, too, and a thorough lover of the great outdoors. Motoring and swimming (outside of golf) are his favorite pastimes. But above all, Riley loves the kiddies and hardly a week end passes but that he is acting as host to a crowd of the little ones at his home.

FOY ARRIVES AT KEYSTONE STUDIO.

Eddie Foy, who was recently signed up to work in Keystone comedies under the direction of Mack Sennett, arrived at the studio in Edendale on Monday of this week and immediately started rehearsal in a Sennett picture. Mr. Foy expresses a desire to get into heavy harness at once and take all the bumps that are coming to him.

As Foy walked into the new auxiliary Keystone plant on the morning of his arrival he witnessed Raymond Hitchcock taking a fast dash on the back of a spirited horse. Foy, who had just presented his card to the gateman, returned to that worthy and whispered: "Tell the ringmaster that I won't be ready for work until to-morrow." But when he discovered that there would be no need of horsemanship in his picture he took off his coat and started work.

TOM CHATTERTON IN "WHEN THE TIDE CAME IN."

Thomas Chatterton, the popular star of the N. Y. M. P. corporation, will be presented at the head of a strong cast in a pathetic Kay Bee story of the sea, entitled "When the Tide Came In," released July 30th. Chatterton plays the part of Glenn Morey, a handsome young fisherman of a coast village, who is in love with Nina, an orphan.

CORRECTING AN ERROR.

Through error in the preparation of the copy, it was stated in a full-page advertisement in the Moving Picture World's issue, dated July 31, that "The Heart of Jennifer," with Hazel Dawn, was a Morosco-Bosworth production. The picture in question, which is to be presented at the Strand theater, New York, within the next six weeks, was made by the Famous Players Film Co.

Unique Studio Construction

Novel Ideas Worked Out by David Horsley at His Los Angeles Plant.

COINCIDENT with the alliance of David Horsley with the Mutual Film Corporation, under the terms of which all productions of the Centaur Film Company and the Eostock Jungle and Film Company are to be released under the "Winged Clock," comes news that the new plant which Mr. Horsley has been building in Los Angeles is now practically complete. Here the new animal pictures, which will be released through the Mutual in September, will be produced, as well as many of the comedies, which will form no unimportant part of the Horsley contribution to the Mutual program.

The new plant, which covers a space of five acres in all, located at Main and Washington streets, Los Angeles, contains many unique and entirely novel devices and appliances, which never before have been incorporated in studio construction. The most important of the innovations in the "arena," so called because it is here that all the animal pictures will be taken and which, by reason of its originality and construction and design, may be rated as among the most important of Mr. Horsley's numerous inventions.

Among the other devices and appliances installed in the Los Angeles studios, all of which were worked out by Mr. Horsley, are twelve modern dressing rooms, which have a combination of 144 bungalow fronts of different design for exterior settings.

Specially notable among the many new devices incorporated in the Los Angeles plant is the "arena," where, by means of a unique arrangement in the plan of construction, the wild beasts of the jungle can perform on the same stage with the human actors without slightest danger to the latter.

As the diagram shows, the "arena" is hexagonal in shape. It measures 144 x 144 feet in area and is surrounded by walls twenty feet in height. In the center, at the apex of the six triangles, is a concrete platform on which the camera is mounted. Around the platform, or "island," is a moat, six feet wide and four feet deep, which is constantly filled with water. Iron bars a dozen feet high surround the platform to protect the director and cameraman from any sudden attack by the animal or animals. At each junction of the different triangles another row of bars extends from the "island" across the moat to the wall behind. These bars extend only a few inches below the water, when crossing the moat, so that all a performer has to do to escape a threatened attack is to dive into the water and come out in the adjoining section of the "arena."

The advantages of this unique construction are many and obvious. Not only does it facilitate the escape of the human artists in time of peril, as well as affording complete protection for the cameraman and director, but it also makes it possible for the stage hands to remove one scene and erect another without interfering with the direction of the production, thus minimizing the delays which hitherto have been a serious factor in the manufacture of animal pictures.

The property room, one of the largest and most modern on the Pacific Coast, measures 70 x 140 feet. It is spanned by sixteen massive steel girders which carry the diffusers and canvas roof, which are operated by means of geared shafting. The laboratory, laid out by Mr. Horsley, is equipped with all the modern improvements, and contains two large, fireproof vaults for the storing of the film. In the same building are the private offices of the administrative forces.

The first of the Horsley animal pictures, according to present plans, will be released through the Mutual early in September, while the initial comedy is scheduled for the latter part of August.

David Horsley left New York on Wednesday, July 21, for his studio in Los Angeles. Immediately upon his arrival there he will begin work on his first one-reel comedy for the Mutual, to be released about the middle of August, and on the first two-reel animal picture, which will follow about two weeks later. Mr. Horsley will personally supervise the production of these releases.

Before departing for the West, in speaking of his new affiliation and his productions, Mr. Horsley said:

"My alliance with the Mutual is the best I have ever had. The Mutual is a strong organization and growing more so every day. I am in a position to realize the advantages the new connection gives me. My contract with the Mutual calls for the release of my entire output through that source. This will include a one-reel comedy picture and a two-reel animal subject every week, and a four-reel Mutual Masterpicture every five weeks."

"I have decided to make the comedies and animal productions in Los Angeles, where I have special facilities for making such pictures. The Masterpictures I will have staged in my Bayonne studio, a better equipped place than which does not exist in the East.

"The brand names of the different releases have not yet been determined, but this matter will be taken care of in a few days and an announcement of our selections will be then forthcoming."

Miriam Nesbitt, Dsrector

AS THE first woman to direct an Edison production, Miriam Nesbitt, the talented and popular star of that company, starts Sunday on a six weeks' vacation and tour of the West and the Panama Exposition, during which she will film the exterior and some of the interior scenes in a four reel feature, "A Close Call," in which she will star, direct, and of which she is also the author. The picture concerns the pursuit of a missing man whom she must find and marry within a limited time to win a fortune. Miss Nesbitt has placed the story in the World's Fair location and she expects to make the feature doubly attractive because of it embracing some of the most beautiful scenes at the Exposition. The plot will take her also to San Diego, while a vivid Chinatown den scene will be taken in the famous Chinatown section of San Francisco. Afterward the chase takes her through the Panama Canal where the story dramatically ends. She will also represent Edison at the exposition.

Mariam Nesbitt.

On her trip, Miss Nesbitt will first spend some time at a camping party in the wilds of Northern Wisconsin, then visiting Chicago and St. Paul. Six days will be spent in Yellowstone Park where her mother now is, and from whom she has just received word advising her to take no money to the Park as she, her mother, had just been held up. Miss Nesbitt, accordingly, shipped her jewels direct to the Coast. Other cities visited will be Portland and Los Angeles.

Of all the stars whom the screen has drawn from the stage, there is probably not another player who, in the first appearance on the professional stage, played a lead in Broadway productions as did Miss Nesbitt, Edison, and has continued to play leading roles since with such marked success.

Equitable Company Entertains.

Dancers in Flushing Studio Are Photographed for Scenes in "Life's Crucible."

THE Equitable Motion Picture Producing Corporation chose to locate its studio in Flushing. Flushing is a town on Long Island, somewhere out in the darkness at the end of a motor run. It has been on the map, the natives say, for a long time, but no matter. The Equitable management made the place known by giving a dance there last week in the studio and inviting over friends and newspaper men. (The friends wore evening clothes; the newspaper men didn't.) Then it all went into a film. It was a dance in a picture, and a picture of a dance. Guests came in their motor cars—and Fords—checked their hats, wraps—and Fords—got their programs, were ushered into a ballroom, danced, drank punch, and danced again. The cameraman ran around on the outskirts; the guests had a good time and he kept busy, and the picture was in the making.

This is how it happened. Isadore Bernstein, recently returned to the East from his large activities as head of Universal City, planned a ballroom scene for "Life's Crucible," a five-reel feature, in which William Courtleigh is starred. He arranged for a pretentious set, and while that was being built, he puzzled over the problem of how to get a real dancing crowd, instead of the usual staged affair. Then the idea came to him of having a real dance, and he did. In the same spirit as that in which he jumped in and directed the picture himself from start to finish, because he knew how he wanted it done, and he didn't have the man to do it just then, Mr. Bernstein sent out invitations to friends of the Equitable to come along to a ball. They came, and danced, and he jumped in and danced himself.

Between dances he called for Mr. Courtleigh. The star appeared. Mr. Bernstein asked him if he was ready to do a certain scene. Mr. Courtleigh said, "No; not while this crowd is here." There was an argument. It was considerable argument. In a minute or two everybody in the place was intent on hearing that argument. Then Mr. Courtleigh smiled, and handed Mr. Bernstein a watch, on behalf of the company, with a few pleasant words. Mr. Bernstein replied with a few more pleasant words, and the crowd, realizing how neatly it had been tricked into paying close attention, applauded heartily.

Then the orchestra struck up again—it was a real orchestra up on the balcony behind the palms, just as everything else in the expensive set which had transformed the studio into a ballroom was real—and dancing went on again, while Jacob Wilk, publicity manager for the World Film Corporation, through which the picture is to be released, brought the watch over to the newspaper men, and convinced them that was real, too. "Don't say anything about this, of course," he warned them, "but did you say you wanted a picture?"

Whereupon he bundled them all into the Packards in which he had brought them from town, and adjourned with them to a place where other entertainment was furnished.

"Life's Crucible" is from a scenario by Marc Edmund Jones. It is directed, as has been said, by Mr. Bernstein himself, assisted by J. B. Cunningham. In the cast, supporting Mr. Courtleigh, are Orlo Lea, Clara Whipple, and George Soule Spencer. Also many dancers.

SELIG TO PRODUCE "THE GARDEN OF ALLAH."

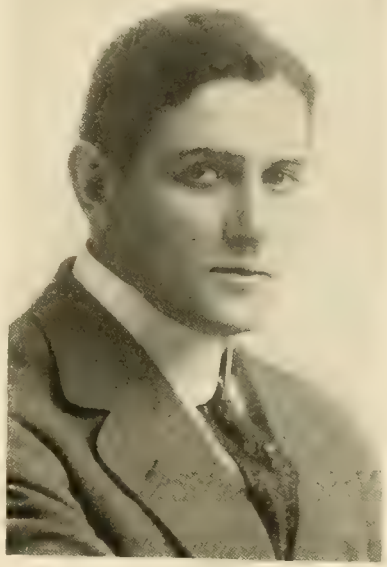
Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, is busily engaged in completing final preparations for the filming of "The Garden of Allah," the wonderful story by Robert Hitchens. Mr. Selig's agents have worked for several months gathering the essentials and planning the properties and scenic environments for the forthcoming spectacle. In an interview, Colonel Selig said: "Do you know that I heard of a film company making films of this kind in six reels in two weeks, while my company with its tremendous facilities, big staff of artists and actors, knowledge and experience gained in over twenty years of motion picture making, with some of the largest studios in America, and a large staff of producers and acting folk, work for several months on a single production.

"It seems to me," continued Colonel Selig, "that exhibitors sometimes fool themselves into taking these quickly and illy made productions, thus making it more difficult for the men who have made film manufacture a business and whose effort is to make pictures which will live and make money for the exhibitor."

Colonel Selig is considering a de luxe presentation of "The Spoilers" in its original length of twelve reels. "The Spoilers" is one of the most popular picture plays ever shown.

Glen White With Kleine.

GLEN WHITE, that versatile and clever leading man whose long and successful record as a picture-player has endeared him to fans the nation over, has been engaged by George Kleine to play leads opposite Ethel Grandin. He will be seen in the Grandin Series to be released weekly through the General Film Company.



Glen White.

Mr. White, like most of the present-day film stars, enjoyed a varied and successful stage experience prior to his advent into motion pictures. He was for a long time associated in leading parts with some of the better class road companies including leads in Augustin Daly's "A Country Girl," Lew Fields' "It Happened in Nordland," and Charles Frohman's "Hook of Holland." He also played leads in the Vaughn-Glaser stock at Cleveland and spent a season in support of Fay Cortney in Columbus. He passed the following two years in vaudeville under the management of Joe Hart in J. V. Hobart's popular sketch "Bill's Wife." His last appearance on the stage was in London where he played the gambler in Joe Hart's production of "Every Wife."

Mr. White, however, lays claim to considerable picture experience, including the lead in "Seats of the Mighty," also leads with Universal, Pathe and Biograph.

V-L-S-E PROMOTES MANAGERS.

The V-L-S-E in accordance with its policy of recognizing and rewarding integrity and merit as recently announced over the signature of General Manager Walter W. Irwin, makes known the promotion of several members of the Big Four sales force.

A. W. Goff, Manager of the Cleveland Branch, is named as the first Big Four Division Manager. He assumes charge of the western division, embracing Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, on July 24th and will make his headquarters at the San Francisco office.

Sydney E. Abel, a salesman in the Ohio territory, becomes manager of the Cleveland office, succeeding Mr. Goff.

R. S. Shrader, formerly a salesman in the Ohio territory, is placed in charge of the Cleveland sub-office at Cincinnati.

R. R. Hutton, another of the Ohio salesmen, becomes manager of the Cleveland sub-office at Detroit.

Frank Harris and S. W. Hatch, formerly salesmen in the Kansas City territory, are now managers of the Kansas City sub-offices at Denver and St. Louis, respectively.

Assistant Manager R. B. Quive becomes manager of the San Francisco office.

H. D. Naugle, salesman in San Francisco territory, is made Los Angeles manager.

Tom North, salesman in San Francisco territory, has been made Seattle manager.

TAKING PICTURES IN THE RAIN.

A distinguished party of picture men, including the representatives of the trade press, journeyed out to Cliffside Inn, near New Rochelle, N. Y., on Monday evening, July 26, to help Jack Harvey of the Universal take some night scenes. When the party gathered on the grounds of the Inn a drizzling rain commenced to fall and kept up with varying copiousness all evening. The scene to be taken was a "rain scene" and Jupiter Pluvius was aided by a more abundant flow of water from a sprinkler arrangement erected by the picturemen.

How successful Director Harvey was in getting the effects he strove for has not been reported, but the party had a good time afterwards at the inn, returning to New York some time during the small hours.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

The Eastland Horror.

CHICAGO is suffering generally from great grief over the loss of life in the lake steamer Eastland's disaster. Not since the Iroquois horror has the city been so stirred to its depths as in this instance, and the sorrow is more heart-felt because it seems so impossible that so many precious lives could have been snuffed out within the reach of hundreds of thousands who were helpless to render aid. That such a catastrophe could occur in a small stream like the Chicago river, within talking distance of two bridges spanning it and within hearing of the busy din of the big city, shocks the sympathetic mind with paralyzing force. One is simply overwhelmed by the why and wherefore and possibility of it all—more especially so because the majority of the victims were little children, girls and women.

With her proverbial richness of heart, Chicago is arranging to raise funds for the relief of the many sufferers who have been deprived of support. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings (July 28, 29 and 30) all the moving picture theaters of the city will give special exhibitions to swell the relief fund. At the Auditorium theater, a benefit performance will be given Friday afternoon, July 30, by actors from all the large dramatic theaters running in the "Loop," and, in addition, special benefit programs will be offered by combination moving picture and vaudeville houses.

Every dollar of the receipts, in all cases, will be donated to the relief fund. The amount, whatever it may be, will be devoted to the destitute, under the supervision of the Red Cross.

In addition, the Chicago Tribune, the Examiner and other leading dailies have started subscription funds, each heading the list with a donation of $1,000.

Alfred Hamburger has agreed to set aside the receipts of one exhibition at each of his 12 theaters, and the Strand Theater Company has made arrangements to swell the fund by full receipts taken in at Orchestra Hall for special and augmented programs. A special presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" will also be devoted to the relief of the sufferers, the entire receipts to be turned over to the committee in charge of the fund.

The exhibition of all moving pictures of the disaster have been prohibited in Chicago theaters until the grief has somewhat abated. Acting Mayor Moorhouse issued the order. Many realistic pictures were taken, notably by the staff of the Hearst-Selig Weekly, and they were shipped out the evening of the day of the disaster to exchanges in all parts of the country.

Important Information for Exhibitors.

Dr. W. A. Evans, in his widely read columns, published daily in the Chicago Tribune, devoted a valuable article in the issue of July 24 to the effect of moving pictures on the eyes, under the heading "Movies." The article is so clearly written and so practical in its treatment of the subject, that I think it well to submit it in toto to the readers of the Moving Picture World. It will assist exhibitors in meeting arguments on the subject and will enable them to give good advice to people who complain of affection of the eyes by looking at moving pictures.

A boy writes us he notices that he gets a pain in the back of his head after he has been at the picture show for an hour or so. He wants to know if there is anything the matter with him, or is the trouble with the "movies." The answer is that the trouble is with both. The boy has poor eyes and needs glasses. Had his eyes been normal the "movies" would not have made his head ache. On the other hand, had he not worked his eyes over-hard at the "movies" he would not have got headache.

When the "movies" first began to grip the people the eye specialists were certain that they would ruin the people's eyes. The flicker, the rapid jerking, and the bright shine did present an ominous combination. Then there was the use of one sense, the sight, as a line of approach to the brain, instead of sight and hearing, as in the ordinary theatrical production. Finally, the presentation of a "movie" play with an involved plot causes the persons in the audience to concentrate their minds closely, to watch closely, and to see quickly. The old slapstick plays were easy. The plays at present in vogue are trying on the concentration.

Everybody goes to the "movies." Everybody has the habit and has had it for years. The boys who get a headache from it are the exceptions.

What is the reason? A man with good eyes of with properly-fitted glasses does not get a headache when he looks out of a car window. Objects appear to move rapidly, to jerk and jump. The lights change rapidly and violently.

A man watching a moving crowd does not get headache if his eyes are good or his glasses fit. Objects are moving in and out of focus constantly. The eye does not try to change its focus for every jiggle on the screen any more than it tries to focus on every object out of a car window or on every man in a street crowd. Never under any ordinary circumstances of ordinary vision is the image on the eye mirror limited to the one sharply focused object on which attention is centered. In addition to the one well-focused image there are always out of focus images of other objects.

Having been accustomed to this, the eyes refuse to overstrain themselves on moving pictures. However, if the eyes are not right, or if the glasses do not fit, the "movies" cause eye strain. Conversely, if the "movies" cause eye strain, then the eyes should be tested.

Dr. Dunbar Roy says: "Each individual is a law unto himself, and he must determine whether his eyes can stand this kind of amusement. To say that moving pictures are universally harmful to all eyes is certainly not correct, but that they are harmful to certain individuals must be admittedly true."

Dr. J. M. Ray says: "I notice that I suffer in a like manner when I look out of the window of a moving train."

Dr. Claiborne says: "I have never known any one to complain that the "movies" hurt his eyes unless he has some eye weakness, such as some error in refraction." He advises that the seat chosen be far back and straight in front of the curtain.

Dr. J. N. Risely thinks it would be easier on the eyes if the projection apparatus was placed lower than the curtain, so that the light would strike the curtain from below and would be thrown back on a line above the heads of the audience.

The Northwest Weekly

William A. Lochren and Harold P. Brown paid us a very pleasant call last week. Mr. Lochren is president and Mr. Brown is director of The Northwest Weekly, a "reel" newspaper in motion pictures, which is being produced in Minneapolis and has passed its 13th release. They select for the camera only "first page stories" of live local news interest and have proved conclusively that Northwest people will turn out for Northwest news pictures, having secured a large following in Montana, North and South Dakota, Northern Iowa, Northern Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. Lochren is a newspaper and advertising man of experience and has been connected for years with the Minneapolis Journal. He has a large acquaintance throughout the Northwest and is the son of the late William Lochren, United States District Judge for this territory.

Mr. Brown is well known in Chicago as one of the crack camera men of the Chicago Tribune and the originator of the Chicago Herald Movies, which created quite a following in the Windy City. He is a news photographer of ability and energy and has been very successful as director of this news photo weekly.

Charles C. Branham, an all-around newspaper man, is general manager of the company. He was city editor of the Duluth News-Tribune for several years and was star reporter and feature writer for both the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch. He has made a special study of Northwest industries.

Fred C. Place is news editor, and also comes from the Fourth Estate to the Northwest Weekly. A soldier and traveler, he went into the newspaper game with the Hearst papers and the Chicago Tribune and came out with a motion picture camera under one arm and a great thirst for the unusual in news photography. For several years he was head photographer of the Minneapolis Journal.

The subject matter of this news photo weekly is devoted to all the live news happenings throughout its territory. When there is a big washout on a railroad, an automobile wreck, a sporting or society event of importance, yacht races, golf, polo and baseball games of note, carnivals and conventions, the crowd is sure to see the moving picture cameras of the Northwest Weekly on the ground covering the news in proper style.

The life of this section is being recorded, and in recognition of the historical value of these pictures, the Minnesota State Historical Society has requested that a copy of each reel of the Northwest Weekly be turned over to them for preservation in their files. They will be marked Vol. I, II, III, etc., "History of the Northwest in Motion Pictures."

From the Governor and the big commercial and social clubs, down the line, the men who are doing things have given their support to the Northwest Weekly. As a result in three short months it has become an institution of real power in this section of the United States.

Tourists on Selig Flyer Return Home.

So successful was the tour of the Selig Exposition Special, which returned to Chicago Sunday morning, July 25, that the guests requested the Selig Polyscope Company to make the trip an annual affair. A farewell banquet was held in the Jefferson Hotel, St. Louis, Mo., Saturday evening, July 24, during the stop of the Flyer in that city. Speeches were made by the Mayor of St. Louis, the members of the City Council, Judge Hogan of Chicago, Ed Kohl, a well-known exhibitor of Cleveland, O.; Herman Dieck, dramatic critic of the Philadelphia Ledger, and H. C. Hoagland, assistant general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company. C. A. Frambers read "telegrams" from many national characters which caused much amusement.

All along the route the tourists were allowed to stop the train at points of interest. In this way much of the beautiful scenery was inspected at close range. Ogden, Utah, was the scene of an automobile ride, in which all the tourists participated. The key to Salt Lake City was turned over to the tourists by the Commercial Club of that city, and an entire day was spent there.

In San Francisco the Selig guests visited the Fair, and the Hearst-Selig Pictorial was awarded a medal for its excellence. Art Smith, the daring boy aviator, wrote the words "Hearst-Selig" in the sky with his aeroplane, in honor of the visitors.

"The Seven Suffering Sisters" picture, which was filmed on the trip, attracted much attention all along the route and was widely mentioned in the newspapers. In Caliente, Nev., many people who had never seen moving pictures made, drove almost one hundred miles to witness the taking of a single scene.

The Colorado Springs Hotel entertained the party while in that city. Near the Rio Grande the party was taken in charge by the General Traffic Manager, Chief Traffic Engineer and General Passenger Agent of the Northwestern R. R., one of the officials coming from as far distant a point as San Francisco in order to ride on the Flyer. While passing through the Royal Gorge and the Grand Canyon open observation cars were provided for tourists who wished to obtain a better view of the wonderful scenery. A special train was furnished for a trip to the Cripple Creek mining district.

The San Diego Fair was visited on the day set aside for a "Utah" celebration. The governor of Utah and the governor of California were among the speakers. Before leaving California the Selig Flyer also visited Santa Cruz and San Jose. At the former a band was at the station to greet the tourists and at the latter they visited Palo Alto, and viewed the site of the old Muybridge studio.

Not a single accident marred the trip and none of the tourists were indisposed during the journey. The weather conditions were delightful throughout and everything went through as scheduled.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Fred C. Aiken, long and popularly known in film circles here, arrived from the West, accompanied by his wife, Wednesday, July 21. On Saturday, July 24, Mr. Aiken resigned as special representative of the General Film Company in western territory. When seen he announced that he had no plans at present, and that he would take a good rest, undisturbed by business cares of any kind.

The Hoyt comedy, "A Black Sheep," featuring Otis Harlan, who has been supported by an exceptional cast of photoplayers, including Grace Darmond, Rita Gould and John Charles, has been completed at the Selig studios by Director T. N. Heffron. It will be released as a Selig Red Seal photoplay about the middle of October. Gilson Willets adapted the story and also that of "A Strnager in New York," which is now being produced at the Selig plant, with Otis Harlan in the title role.

A private exhibition of "Sarah Bernhardt at Home" was given at the Illinois theater on Tuesday, July 27, the theatre being placed at the disposal of the Photoplay Releasing Co. by courtesy of the corporation controlling "The Birth of a Nation." A. M. Gollos, president of the Photoplay Releasing Co., sent out invitations to most of the leading people in the city to attend the presentation.

Ike Van Ronkel, Chicago branch manager of V-L-S-E, Inc., returned from a trip to New York Monday, July 19. He informed me that, notwithstanding the hot weather, the volume of business done by his office has shown a steady increase, weekly, for some time past.

E. B. Lockwood, of McGeary-Lockwood, this city, tells me that his firm has recently completed a thousand feet of pictures for the Chamber of Commerce at Benton Harbor, Mich., and also has finished a two-thousand feet subject entitled "The Whim of Fortune," for the De Kalb Chronicle of this state, in which State Senator Cliffe appeared in the leading role.

H. W. Ricker, vice-president of the Clark Amusement Co., which owns the Clark theater, 4533 N. Clark street, this city, called one day last week, and subscribed for the World. The Clark has a seating capacity of about 1,100. Admissions of five and 10 cents are charged daily for a program of six reels of Universal and Paramount service. Serials such as "The Diamond from the Sky" and "The Goddess" are also shown at the Clark. Mr. Ricker reported good business. John H. Ferris is president of the Clark Amusement Co.

J. Cooper, manager of the 20th Century theater, 3538 W. 12th street, this city, called at the World office last week and renewed his subscription for the paper. The 20th Century seats 800 people. An admission of 10 cents is charged on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays for programs of seven reels consisting of V-L-S-E features, Metro, etc. On the remaining days of the week five cents is charged for five reels of General Film service. Mr. Cooper reported very good business.

Viola Allen has been convinced by the art in moving pictures, as the following pronouncement shows: "There is as much art in working before the camera as on the stage. The 'movies' for me from now on."

"The Blindness of Virtue" has made a big hit at the La Salle theater, and has entered on its second week with crowded houses as the rule. The Chicago press, without exception, has devoted considerable space to eulogistic reviews of this fine feature. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn have come in for unstinted praise.

"The Melting Pot" has aroused unusual interest at the Fine Arts theater, and has entered on its second successful week at that house.

"The Second in Command," with Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow in the principal roles, opened at the Studebaker Monday, July 26. This Metro feature shows the first appearance of Mr. Bushman under that company's trademark.

The principal photoplay attraction at Orchestra Hall for the current week is "The Seven Sisters," a romantic comedy in which Marguerite Clark is featured. The play of that name was staged at Powers theater several seasons ago, and made a successful run.

H. E. Aitken, president of the Epoch Producing Co., and A. H. P. Banzhaf, secretary and treasurer of that organization, stopped over in the city last week on their way from Los Angeles to New York City. It is rumored that Mr. Aitken will sign a long lease for some theater within the "Loop" to show the big productions of his company. The Colonial, the Olympic and the Studebaker have been mentioned in connection with the deal. It is said that this is part of a general plan to establish a circuit of moving picture houses in the largest cities throughout the country, in which admissions will be two dollars. Leases have already been taken on theaters in New York City, Philadelphia and Boston. At the present writing it seems as if the Colonial will be the theater selected in this city. The only hitch in the negotiations is over the $5,000 required to renovate and re-decorate the theater.

Kernott & Beck, well known restaurtateurs of this city, have secured a lease at South State street for the purpose of building a high-class moving picture theater, it is said. The consideration is said to have been $75,000, and the yearly lease rental has been fixed at $19,353 for the next 10 years. The lot has only a frontage of 24 feet, with a depth of 120 feet.

Suit was filed in the Circuit Court, St. Louis, Saturday afternoon, July 24, by the New Grand Central Theater Company, to restrain the police from interfering with the production of "The Island of Regeneration," the first showing of which was booked for Sunday afternoon, July 25. William Sievers, secretary and treasurer of the company and manager of the theater, was notified by the police that a certain scene would have to be cut out. The objectionable scene shows Miss Edith Storey in a swimming pool. Judge Rassieur issued an order citing the police authorities to show cause why an injunction should not be issued, a temporary restraining order to prevail in the meantime. Mr. Sievers stated that about three weeks ago Attorney E. V. P. Schneiderhahn, representing the Federation of Catholic Societies, made objection to the production. Mr. Sievers invited the morality squad of the police department to attend a private exhibition of the picture. Objection was made to the swimming scene and orders were given for its elimination. Mr. Sievers, however, was of the opinion that there was nothing wrong in the scene. He makes it a point to review all his film subjects and eliminates anything that he considers objectionable, as he especially wants to run clean shows. Chief of Police Allender disavowed any intention to interfere with the presentation at the New Grand Central theater, but that he would have his men attend, and if the objectionable part of the subject is shown, the matter will be laid before the prosecuting attorney.

L. J. Reynolds, of the auditing department of the Moving Picture World at the New York office, made a short stop-over in this city Friday, July 23, on his way back from a tour of the Pacific Coast, which lasted about 30 days.

Mr. and Mrs. George Blaisdell made a brief stop-over here Monday, July 26, on their way back to New York from Los Angeles and San Francisco. Mr. Blaisdell is well known as a member of the New York staff of the Moving Picture World. He made a tour of the country, leaving New York in March and stopping over at the leading cities in the South and Southwest on his way to Los Angeles. There he compiled all the special matter in the Pacific Coast Number of the World, and covered the San Francisco annual convention of the M. P. E. L. of America. On the return trip Mr. Blaisdell stopped over at Salt Lake City, Kansas City, Denver and St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Blaisdell left this city for Buffalo, where they will make a stop-over and then proceed to New York.

Harry Charnas With Standard Program.

ALTHOUGH he has not yet celebrated his thirtieth birthday, Harry Charnas of Cleveland, or Harry Charnas of Pittsburg, or Harry Charnas of Detroit—for in motion picture circles he is equally known in all three sections of the country, not forgetting Altoona, Pa., where he was born and received his first financial backing in the shape of sundry dimes from his parents with which to buy the privilege of seeing the life motion animated pictures at the opera house—Harry Charnas of all these places is the proprietor of two flourishing exchanges and is arranging for the opening of a third at present writing.

Harry Charnas.

In spite of the fact that Mr. Charnas is not fond of the limelight and has managed to avoid it pretty well during the eight years he has been active in picture affairs, the brilliant glare falls upon him now through his visit to New York for the signing of a contract with the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., which gives him control of the Standard Program for the territories covered by his three exchanges: The Standard Film Service Co., 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio; the Standard Film Service Co., Griswold and State streets, Detroit, Mich., and the new office which he is opening in Cincinnati.

Part of Harry Charnas' success is probably due to the fact that he has worked his way up from the smallest position in an exchange to the very highest and knows every angle of the business by personal experience. He first attracted notice with the Duquesne Amusement Supply Co., of Pittsburg, and little surprise was accorded his large circle of friends when he proved himself to be the most successful manager of all of the Warner's Features Exchanges when that organization was at its height. It was then that Cleveland and Detroit made his acquaintance and received much of their education in features through his efforts.

Mr. Charnas has introduced the word "open shop" to the motion picture art. Projecting rooms where certain days of the week are devoted to acquainting theater managers with the subjects he offers are important departments of his exchanges.

Dawley Returns to Famous Players Film Co.

Noted Director on First Famous Players Producing Staff Resumes Directorial Activities for That Organization.

J. SEARLE DAWLEY, conceded one of the foremost feature directors, who joined the Famous Players shortly after its inauguration in 1912, remaining with that organization until the formation of the Dyreda Film Corporation, in which he was instrumental and of which his name supplied the last two letters, has now returned to the Famous Players producing staff, and will be assigned the direction of an important series of features.

J. Searle Dawley.

Mr. Dawley is among the oldest directors associated with the motion picture art, and was one of the first in the United States to undertake the production of features. His activities in this direction cover a wide range of subjects, many of which have been recorded among the most notable feature successes in the annals of the screen. He contributed a great part of the success achieved by the Famous Players' third release, Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and subsequently created a number of the epochal productions which established the then unprecedented artistic standard of the Famous Players in feature producing, a policy of which at that time the Famous Players was the only exponent. As is now generally known, it was the amazing popularity of these early multiple-reel subjects that attracted a number of other film producers to the feature field, with the present result that this is now the greatest branch of the motion picure industry throughout the world.

Mr. Dawley's first production for the Famous Players in his new affiliation with that company will be of Marguerite Clark in "Helene of the North," an unusual romance that presents this dainty star in the most unique impersonation she has yet assumed since her first triumphant association with the screen. The subject combines in a decidedly novel manner the cultured atmosphere of aristocratic society circles with the rugged environment of the trackless wilds of Northwestern Canada, between which for extremes the drama sways with uninterrupted fascination. "Helene of the North" is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program August 19.

COMING RELEASES FROM LASKY.

The schedule of Lasky releases for the months of September, October and November includes the following productions, which will be distributed by Paramount: "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar, will be shown in October. In September Blanche Sweet will be seen in "The Case of Becky"; Charlotte Walker in "The Dark," and Lou Tellegen in "The Explorer." Beside "Carmen" the October releases will be "The Voice in the Fog" with Donald Brian, and "Blackbirds" with Laura Hope Crews. November will bring forth "The Chorus Lady," "Chimmie Fadden Out West" with Victor Moore and "The Cheat" with Blanche Sweet.

IT GOT TO MONTAGU.

"I would very much like to congratulate you on the Pacific Coast number of July 10," writes E. H. Montagu, the old-timer who is now representing Colonel Selig in England. "I think it is quite one of the most interesting numbers of your paper I have ever read, and as one of the old-timers in the American business, it is probably more interesting to me than some of the others of your readers."

Old-timers will remember that "Monty" started in the picture game in New York in 1903. He was with Miles Brothers and later with Pathe, leaving in 1911 for his present post in London.

SECOND KLEINE-EDISON RELEASE.

Through misinformation it was stated in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World that the second Kleine-Edison release would be "The Poor Little Rich Girl." This should have been "A Message from Garcia." The first release is "Vanity Fair" with Mrs. Fiske.

Doings at Los Angeles

WELL, the convention is over and home seems good again after a week spent in San Francisco with the exhibitors. Every minute was a busy one and there were few leisure ones between those occupied by seeing what the visiting moving picture men did.

As already announced, the delegates left San Francisco on Sunday last, and journeyed to Los Angeles, where they were received by an entertainment committee composed of local picture men. The number of showmen who came south was small, disappointingly so, and the largest affairs planned in their behalf had to be crossed off the program. However, the half hundred who did come were well entertained and left at the end of the week with a memory of a continual round of pleasure and sightseeing.

Bright and early Monday morning the exhibitors were loaded into a fleet of automobiles and whisked out to Universal City, where Director General Henry McRae welcomed them. M. J. Jonas, head of the publicity bureau, piloted the visitors around the village and Mayor H. P. Caulfield received them at the genuine Spanish barbecue which had been prepared for them. Still and moving pictures were made and the party watched the players work then departed for the Selig Zoo, where Manager Thomas Persons showed them the sights and gave them a circus show with some of the animals.

The next day the showmen were autoed to the Mutual studios, where Frank E. Woods received them and Billy Bitzer piloted them about. Bennie Zeidman, head of the publicity bureau, explained the various parts of the plant to them and introduced some of the stars.

The next stop was at the Metro studio, where Fred Balshofer of Quality Pictures received them. Harry Reichenbach introduced Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow and then sent to the ice cream factory for a dozen trays loaded with ice cream, which the hot and sweltering visitors enjoyed immensely. After seeing "The Second in Command," a six-reel picture which has just been completed, the exhibitors departed for the next place.

At the Lasky studio Mr. Lasky received the showmen and turned them over to Kenneth McCafferty, publicity manager, and Captain Ford of the military branch, who piloted them through the big studio.

By this time the sightseers were hungry and the program called for the Mina studios, so they sped along to the Horsley plant where Ernest Shipman received them, showed them through the studio and then whistled for lunch. The call was promptly answered and a temporary rest ordered. The visitors were then treated to a show in the jungle arena after which they departed for the hotels.

Wednesday was the banner day for the strangers. The William Fox Film Corporation through its popular special western representative, Harry Leonhardt, entertained royally with a sightseeing trip to the beach at Venice, where the visitors were delighted with the scenery. After the hour's trip through the showhouse of the south, the fine residential districts, mountain roads, and beach boulevards, they were taken aboard a cafe in an old boat where a luncheon was served which was a feast. Judge Tugwell of Los Angeles was seconded for a move to extend a vote of thanks to the Fox firm and to its western manager. After lunch the visitors were piloted through the amusement district and then turned loose to enjoy the beach as best they could, and they all did, for when the automobiles filled at seven o'clock not an exhibitor could be found without a broad smile.

That concluded the entertainment of the exhibitors, and by this time they are all at home and have a memory of a good time spent in the city where the films are made.

It certainly is hard to get away from events which happened during or immediately after the convention. There was so much going on all the time. The Universal sent a company up under the management of Beverly Griffith and under the direction of Leon D. Kent. I returned on the same boat with them and there was no little excitement. The water was like a mill pond, so said an old salt, but the cameraman was the first to succumb to the gentle rolling of the vessel. I have not the heart to mention the Static's name. The story they did was of an invalid in a wheel chair, and husky Hobart Henly was slated for the part. The newsstand man sold some anti-seasick tablets to Beverly Griffith and Henley ordered a basket of lemons, and the rest of the company were faring well except for Kent and he has traveled round the world eighteen times and is now immune.

On the boat also was Bennie Zeidman, formerly from Lubinville, and he went to sleep as soon as he boarded. Clem Pope, a New York telegrapher, who is now in the west, donned a cap and walked the "fo'csle" until dinner time, proving that he was immune. Oh, yes, I walked the deck with him.

While in the north Kolb and Dill were preparing to launch a film company and an announcement just arrived which gives the details. The two fun men will incorporate for $50,000, in fact, the articles have been filed, with Messrs. Kolb and Dill, Oscar de Brettiville, Maude L. Moulin, and George D. Perry. They will have headquarters in San Francisco.

Sam Spedon, well-known head of the publicity department of the Vitagraph, has arrived from the convention and is doing things at the Santa Monica plant. First thing he did was to order everyone to appear for a general picture, and ever since the first day a cameraman has been shooting plates of the plant, which will be used to advertise the western holdings of the company. While here Mr. Spedon was the honored guest at several functions, dances, and dinners.

Rollin S. Sturgeon has returned from the east where he renegotiated with the heads of the Vitagraph company. This is about the fourth time he has come back to his first love, and this time looks like the final one. He returns with full managership of the western branch and also as director in chief. He will be assisted by the players who are here and also by a number of New York actors who will be sent west to work in special V-L-S-E features. Mr. Sturgeon will direct only multiple reelers, with an occasional short picture to fill in the time between big ones. W. S. Smith will be the business manager and look after the technical end of the business. All in all the Vitagraph is to improve and enlarge considerably its holdings on the coast, which means just another step in the progress of the film industry.

Of course, this has been announced in New York, but there may be some who have not seen it. David Horsley completed contracts with the Mutual whereby his pictures will be placed on that program. This means that he will immediately put about ten companies at work in his big studio at the Bostock arena and jungle. Already a number of well-known players have been signed and will leave other concerns in a short time. A studio may be rented in addition to the present studio. One of the new releases to go under the winged clock is an animal comedy every week. Mr. Horsley will return to the coast early in the coming week.

Marjorie Rambeau, who was favored so much on Broadway last year, is now working in "The Honey Bee" at the Oliver Morosco studio. She says that picture work is far ahead of the legitimate and wishes to stay in the screen plays.

Carl Laemmle has departed for the east after a busy visit to the coast. He came out June 11th with the Beauty Special and has since been looking after the business of the Universal on the coast.

Henry Walthall, popular actor, who is with Essanay, visited Los Angeles to win his case with the Balboa company, who is after him for breach of contract. "Wally" looked healthy, wealthy and strong, and said he was glad to get back here, but sorry to leave again so soon for the Windy City.

Helen Holmes is again busy on an installment for the endless "Hazards" series. It is "A Girl's Grip" and is a thriller, for Helen jumps from an overhanging depot roof to the top of a moving train. At this Glendale Kalem studio James Horne is finishing the sixth episode in the serial of the G and hotel which is "A Double Identity." A mishap which might have proved fatal happened when the cable which hoisted the hotel elevator snapped while some players were inside. The car, which is in every way like a real one, dropped to the ground. Marion Sais, who was in the car, was uninjured.

And while we all were away last week the Elks held their big and well-attended convention in Los Angeles. Among the visiting Bills were a large number of exhibitors. They took part in a big allegorical parade one day and that night at a local house they went in a mass to see the show and were surprised to see their own selves as they had appeared in the morning. The speedy film work was done by the local Pathe men and was issued before the regular weekly comes out.

Mabel Van Buren, who was formerly with Lasky, has joined the Balboa firm and is now living in Long Beach. Several new players have been added to the ranks of the Horkheimer brothers' company and much work is being turned out now.

Nat Goodwin arrived on the coast last week and is now busy on the Universal story "Business is Business" with Anna Little opposite. Gretchen Lederer is also in the cast. The famous old actor, who is just as young as ever, says he likes the films immensely and is only sorry that he did not get in them before this time.

Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman, and Charley Clary appeared in person at Clune's auditorium this week to meet the people. They played the principal parts in "The Rosary," which is the feature program for the week.

Relying on a "dry reel" to make votes against the saloon, the prohibition element in California have financed and formed the California Progressive-Independent Picture Company, which will flash on screens in motion picture houses all over the State for a whole year the story of the effects of booze.

In the company that has just been formed, Charles R. Burger, State chairman of the Prohibition party; Frank W. Emerson, national committeeman, and H. G. Sohn are on the board of directors. Mr. Burger has been elected treasurer and Mr. Emerson vice-president. Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of the Southern California W. C. T. U., is on the censor committee to scan the scenarios.

Few more successful celebrations have been held at Universal City than the rodeo held in honor of the visiting Elks, Saturday, July 17. Fifteen hundred Elks, together with some two hundred and fifty Texas Rotarians visited the picture city to be initiated into the mysteries of motion picture production. In addition to showing them the production of a number of big scenes in pictures now being staged there, a round-up was also held in their honor.

It is not often that anyone "butts-in" to a studio and takes possession of the stage, driving everyone out and raising a general rumpus. But this week two individuals, backed by a raft of smart guys swooped down on the sunny stage of the Vitagraph and as soon as they appeared every mother's son of "us" departed for parts under cover. Poor Dave Smith, who was directing, was the first man caught, and he has been squinting out of one eye for three days. Several other persons suffered, and when they discovered what the commotion was, the fear turned to laughter, for it was only a swarm of bees that had decided to make their nest on the diffuser posts. The queen bee led the mob of stingers into the studio and for some time no one desired to work on that stage.

Harry Leonhardt, Fox's special western representative, who returned only last week from New York, has departed again for the east, going via San Francisco, Denver, Salt Lake, and other cities. In the recent Elks' convention parade he was commander of the first division which included horned paraders from Ohio, Missouri, New England states, and New York. Many moving picture men were here for this convention.

Stella Razeto, who for so long starred with the Selig company, has transferred her dressing room out to Universal city and is busy working in a new picture there.

* * *

The Francis Ford company broke several big coins when they went to Tia Juana, Mexico, this week, to film some bull fight scenes for the latest installment of the coin serial. They threw Eddie Polo into the dusty ring among the bulls, and the toreadors, matadors, picadors, and all the rest of the dors that go to make a bull scrap a thing of beauty and a joy forever. But he escaped and only narrowly missed being impaled upon the unmanicured stumps of the bovines. The last few words come from the pen of Mr. Ford I. Beebe, chief writer in the publicity office of the Big U.

CLARKE IRVINE.

W. Lawson Butt With Kleine

FEW of the many actors who have recently deserted the stage for the studio have brought with them a more enviable record in the so-called "legitimate" than has Lawson Butt, prominent in the support of Irene Fenwick in George Kleine's picturization of the successful Owen Davis play "The Woman Next Door." Previous to his first appearance in America, Mr. Butt was already recognized as one of the most competent actors on the English stage, having made a truly enviable London reputation during the years he spent in the support of Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theater. Among the productions in which he was featured with the English actor-knight were "Ulysses," "Herod," and "Twelfth Night." Later he made the successful step from the classic to the modern and scored heavily with William Gillette in the latter's greatest success, "Sherlock Holmes."

W. Lawson Butt.

Mr. Butt's splendid work in America has made his reputation international. In this country he played character leads with Robert Mantell for a number of years, essayed the leading role in the mammoth production of "The Garden of Allah," and played leads opposite Grace George in "Much Ado About Nothing," and "The Earth." Shortly before his engagement with the Kleine film forces he was featured in the support of Margaret Illington in her New York run of "The Lie."

In "The Woman Next Door" Mr. Butt has one of the most difficult roles of his long career as an actor, but difficulties, to an artist of his standing, mean increased opportunity, and those who have seen the picture in the making agree that he has given a characterization that will not be readily forgotten.

M. E. HOFFMAN CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

Not nefariously engaged, it is seen, but in health-giving exercise on the water. M. E. Hoffman, the popular and respected untitled World Film executive, is dimly suspected of occasionally ceasing work, and the photograph is evidence of the fact that he occasionally halts in his twenty-four hour a day devotion to the interests of the great film corporation in which he is so much a factor.

The picture was surreptitiously snapped at Cleveland, O., on Independence Day. The ladies are Mr. Hoffman's mother and wife. Mr. Hoffman is back on the job now, but the recollections of that vacation still hang around, he says.

Among the Picture Theaters

News and Views of Photoplay Houses Everywhere

TWO BUFFALO PICTURE THEATERS.

Under the Capable Direction of Harold Edel the Palace and and Strand Are Popular Amusement Places.

THAT the moving picture business offers a special demand for red-blooded young men of original ideas is an acknowledged fact. To be versatile, to be able to clean-up mountains and mountains of details, to have one's hand on the public pulse, to keep not only up to the times but ahead of the times are the only assurances of big success in this field. A combination of these and other live-wire features is responsible for the success of Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand and Palace theaters, Buffalo. One of the latest and most successful stunts of Mr. Edel is the publication of a live, miniature newspaper called the Palace Blade. This paper abounds in bright sayings, clear photographs, well-balanced head lines and appropriate data about the Palace attractions. Mr. Edel is managing editor and E. L. Hyman is his assistant. Mr. Hyman is also house manager of the Strand. The big news features of The Palace Blade are flashed in metropolitan style and the make-up is complete.

Harold Edel.

The Strand is owned by the Courtland Theater Company, of which Moe Mark is president. Mr. Edel has been the guiding star of this house since the opening three years ago. A constant flow of patronage to the Strand and the Palace proves the success of his efforts. The Palace was opened a few months ago. A few of Mr. Edel's aggressive business methods will not be amiss. He had his own cameramen take moving pictures of the parade of the Veiled Prophets, which recently held a national convention in Buffalo. He showed the pictures in his own houses and the films proved a hit. Another late idea he used was the placing of a changeable sign in the Strand lobby. There are fourteen cards in the outfit and each tells a story of coming attractions and gives terse slogans about the service and high quality of the shows. He has also arranged new half sheets, advertising his programs. These sheets are framed and monogramed and placed in the leading hotels. Another feature he has just introduced in his lobby is large shadow boxes, each 4x7 feet, containing excellent pictures of the stars appearing in his current productions.

The Strand seats 1,200 and runs from Main to Washington streets. There is a three-manual pipe organ and a ten-piece orchestra. The director and organist is George A. Bouchard, an experienced musician. The Strand uses the Paramount programs and the General service. His latest attractions include Earle Williams and Anita Stewart in "The Goddess" and in repertoire. The picture of the Strand lobby, shown here, was taken when it contained special decorations for "The Wrath of the Gods," offered several months ago. Every novel device for proper lighting and ventilation has been introduced at the Strand.

Mr. Edel is a college man, a gentleman from the South, and his courtesy is reflected throughout his theaters. His assistants catch his spirit of politeness and his patrons feel right at home at the Strand and Palace. The various "ologies" which Mr. Edel mastered at college are nothing to the problems which he has to solve through the year in the moving picture business. As he is practical and aggressive, he always has smooth sailing in his work.

The Palace is owned by the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Company, which built the Strand theater in New York City. The Palace seats 1,200 persons, and like the Strand in Buffalo, is in the heart of the shopping district. The Palace features the Fox and General programs. The Palace balcony is reached by escalators. The stage is set as a terraced platform in an Italian garden. There is a large pipe organ and a ten-piece orchestra. Comfort, convenience and luxury mark the appointments of the Palace. The theater has an attractive tower, where there is a clock which plays selections on the chimes. Buffalo has seen many changes in the moving picture business during the past year and the survival of the fittest seems to be the rule. However, under the successful general management of Mr. Edel, the Strand and Palace, like Tennyson's brook, promise to "go on forever" in serving thousands of Buffalo and transient patrons.

GEORGE KLEINE ENGAGES NEW DIRECTOR.

Ray Smallwood, formerly head of the Smallwood Film Company, is the latest acquisition to the George Kleine studios. Mr. Smallwood was engaged by George Kleine to produce the Ethel Grandin series and is already busily at work on the first of a long list of carefully selected stories especially written for pretty little Miss Grandin.

The Grandin Series will be released in the form of two-reel subjects through the General Film Company every Monday, commencing September 6.

THE VAUDETTE, ATLANTA, GA.

Atlanta's Handsome Picture Theater Had Its Start in Section of Department Store.

THE VAUDETTE THEATER, under the able management of two brothers, John G. and Gus Evins, is the largest moving picture theater in Atlanta, not only the largest, but the equipment of this theater is modern in every respect. Back in 1908 the two brothers were engaged in the furniture business. One day the present chief operator, L. F. Henderson, came to their furniture store and made the suggestion that one part of the store might be partitioned off and a moving picture theater be started. Both being shrewd business men they saw the possibilities of such an adventure, and in a short while partitioned off a room 18x80 feet, equipped it, and on December 19, 1908, the "Vaudette" was first opened to the public. The theater was a financial success from the beginning.

Realizing the future for the moving picture business they began to look for larger quarters. They secured quarters in the same block, a floor space of 38 by 100 feet. Before starting the theater they made several trips to New York, Chicago and other big cities in quest of information in regard to improvements in both construction and operating, studying the necessary points from every angle. On September 4, 1911, the new "Vaudette" was opened, the brothers in the meanwhile retiring from the furniture business to give their entire attention to their theater.

The "Vaudette" is equipped with 500 folding opera chairs, 37 inches apart, thus allowing patrons to take their seat without disturbing another. Chairs to the amount of 760 could have been placed, but this one convenience alone has helped make this theater what it is today. Big rotary fans were installed, which exhaust 42,750 feet of air per minute. Commodious rest rooms for both women and men were provided near the entrance. A new Pilcher pipe organ was installed at a cost of $5,000. This theater is also well equipped with exits, thus reducing to a minimum the danger from panic, fire or any other condition that might arise, which would necessitate emptying the theater within the space of a few minutes.

Another thing which has aided in establishing the "Vaudette" in the esteem of Atlantians is the unqualified loyalty of its employees. Many of the present employees were with the house on its opening day. John Evins, speaking of these employees, said, "without this loyalty on the part of our employees we could never have attained the success which has crowned our efforts. Day in and day out, their fidelity has never waned, and no job has ever been too irksome for them to undertake. No detail which would add to the popularity of the theater has been too small to engage their attention, and courtesy has been the watchword from the beginning."

Only recently they have installed a $1,000 plate glass screen, which is a joy forever to the four operators. Their chief operator, L. F. Henderson, has been with them for seven years. The film service at this theater is the full Mutual service, and the pick from the General Film. The "Vaudette" is always packed from the time it opens at 11 A. M., until its close, 10.30 P. M.

The Lindell Theater, St. Louis, Mo.

Beautiful Neighborhood Picture House Receives Loyal Support—Has 1,800 Seats—Not Yet a Year Old.

THE LINDELL THEATER, which stands at Grand avenue and Hebert street, St. Louis, Mo., will not be a year old until August. This theater represents the latest ideas in theater construction throughout. It is fireproof, with concrete floors and balcony, outside stairs of steel which descend to wide openings between the theater and the buildings on each side. The Lindell seats 1,800 persons, is equipped with the latest designed folding opera chairs, has wide aisles, a roomy lobby and foyer, a finely appointed office for the manager, is ventilated and cooled in hot weather with a cooling system that delivers 35,000 cubic feet of chilled and washed air into the auditorium every minute, an excellent orchestra, a corps of neatly-uniformed ushers and a comfortable and completely appointed projection booth, equipped with two motor-driven projection machines. A Minusa screen is used.

The Lindell is a neighborhood theater in every sense of the term. It was promoted and built by the people living in the vicinity of Grand avenue and Hebert street, who are very proud of their beautiful playhouse and support it loyally. When the Lindell first opened, it was run as a mixed program house, moving pictures forming one-half of the bill, the other portion being devoted to high-class vaudeville; and then later excellent musical comedy and dramatic tabloid companies were given places on the program; but gradually the charm and power of moving pictures have encroached, until, beginning with the week of June 13 last, the Lindell came into its own—found its true function as a house of entertainment and changed to an all moving picture program.

The Lindell is owned by the Great Northern Amusement & Realty Company, but is managed and directed as to its program and personal details by A. J. Dervin.

LENORE ULRICH SIGNS WITH KNICKERBOCKER.

Lenore Ulrich, the popular little charmer of the legitimate stage, has just signed up with Knickerbocker Star Features, to appear in their release of August 18.

Miss Ulrich, although scarcely twenty-one years of age, is probably as well known throughout the country as many an actress having twice her experience on the stage. Her great popularity was gained in her splendid and fascinating rendition of the role of "Luana" in the "Bird of Paradise," which role she played for three seasons and covered the country from coast to coast charming audiences in great cities and little hamlets alike.

Several years ago the whole country was aroused with interest when Leonardo Boratellin, a Milwaukee sculptor, pronounced Miss Ulrich as an absolutely perfect model of form of womanhood, while her face and head have been the subject for scores of paintings by well known artists in and about New York.

Great things are expected of her in the August 18 release of Knickerbocker Star Features, released on the General Film regular program.

THE SAVOY THEATER, WASHINGTON, D. C.
Has Inclined, Bowl-Shaped Seating Plan, Permitting an Unobstructed View of Screen from Any Point in Auditorium.

THE SAVOY THEATER, located at Fourteenth street and Columbia road, Northwest, Washington, D. C., ranks well among the motion picture houses of the national capital, both as to attractiveness and the provisions made for the comfort of its patrons. It is wholly detached, and the front and side walls are of tapestry brick. The building was designed by B. Stanley Simmons, one of the foremost architects of the city, and represents an investment of $40,000, with an additional $40,000 for the ground upon which it stands. The building is of Colonial style, with the lobby in Carian marble of a delicate green. The walls are of ornamental plaster and paneled. The floor is of Mosaic blocks and marble, with Mosaic blocks forming designs and in the center the letter "S" in a wreath and above a lyre also within a wreath. All doors are full-mirrored, while mirrors stretch across the lobby, giving it an appearance of having twice its real depth. The lobby is forty-five feet wide at the street and has a depth of thirty-four feet. At the north end is the manager's office, following which is the box office, and at the west end is a closet for storage purposes and another door leading to the stairway which goes into the operators' booth.

Lobby of the Savoy Theater, Washington, D. C.

The operators' booth is one of the best in the city. It runs the full width of the lobby and has a depth of eleven feet. It is equipped with toilet facilities and is well ventilated, there being a window at each end and there are two vents, eighteen inches in diameter, leading to the roof directly above the two Simplex motor-driven projecting machines, which, with a motor generator and rewinder, are here installed. The projection and lookout openings are provided with slides fitted with fusible cords and act automatically in case of a conflagration. As one enters the auditorium he cannot help but admire it for its attractiveness. It is wider than the lobby, having a width of sixty-five feet, and it is one hundred feet in depth. A feature, new to Washington, was here embodied, for the floor has been laid bowl-shaped and on an incline, the latter being one-eighth inch to the foot. The shaping of the floor from side to side gives those patrons who occupy the seats nearest to the wall an opportunity to look directly over the heads of those occupying the central seats on the aisle and gives an unobstructed view of the screen. Further comfort is insured by the width of thirty-four inches, two inches more than required by law, between the backs of the chairs. The house has a seating capacity of 840, while more than 200 others can find standing room behind the heavy brass rails. The center aisle is also very wide.

From the floor line at the walls a base of imitation marble extends to the belt course. The walls have been left in white with all ornaments brought out in low relief, giving an appearance of daintiness of outline. The wall lines run to the first rib of the ceiling, forming what might be termed a slow half ellipse. Pilasters are placed on each side of a blind window at each side wall, with a delicately moulded cap and a cartouche over the center of each opening. At the ends nearest the screen the walls have been splayed to an angle of sixty degrees and a recess formed therein to give the appearance of private boxes. These are decorated with fan-shaped ornaments and above the center of each is a cartouche. Above the gold fiber screen is a proscenium cove, ornamented with a large cartouche in the center, as seen in theaters having a stage, although the Savoy is not so equipped. The screen itself is within a shadow box having a bevel extending back fifteen inches to the line of the screen. In the center of the house is a cross aisle six feet in width to an exit on each side. The floor is of cement, having a hardened top layer, preventing it from chipping. The ornamented walls and paneled ceilings of both the auditorium and lobby are in what might be termed a modified Renaissance. In the center of the ceiling of the auditorium is an ornamental plaster centerpiece, elliptical in shape, with a black blind vent in the center serving to break the surrounding dead white, and a circle of forty-six Mazda forty-watt lights with frosted globes. In each of the four surrounding panels are similar lamps of one-hundred-watt power. On each of the twelve pilasters along the walls is a bracket of composition, done in gold leaf, and lacquered in imitation of statuary bronze, holding five candles with frosted pear-shaped globes. Similar lights have been placed in the lobby which is also equipped with three chain-hung fixtures, which are both elaborate and very expensive.

The heating and ventilating system is of the best. The former is what is known as the Plenum direct-indirect system. During the winter months the building is heated prior to being opened for an entertainment by direct radiation, after which this heat is turned off and the indirect service is brought into play. This is accomplished by blowing the heated air into the theater from the rear of the screen wall over a heating coil through the registers above each of the two rear exits. The fan is a belt-connected Sturtevant, capable of distributing 30,000 cubic feet of heated pure air per minute. The same fan is used for sending in a like amount of cooled air in the summer months. The radiators are concealed in the walls. The vitiated air is drawn out from the theater at the front floor line through registers on each side by an exhaust fan at the rate of 24,000 cubic feet per minute and carried through the roof. The fan is located in the operators' booth. The piping of the house is what is known as the overhead or drop system, the main flow pipe being above the ceiling of the auditorium and from this pipes drop to the radiators at the floor line. The return or condensation pipe runs under the flooring to the boiler at the rear.

Interior of Savoy Theater, Washington, D. C.

At the rear of the house is a park capable of accommodating nearly 900 patrons seated and in addition there is standing room for 300 more. Entrance is had to the park from the north side of the theater through an entrance fourteen feet in width. The flooring of the park, first made with a fill of clay and then covered with two layers of crushed limestone, is curved and inclined similar to the theater itself. The limestone surface has proven to be exceptionally satisfactory and superior to gravel, which is usually used, in that it presents a harder surface and there are not the footprints to be rolled out after each performance, nor does it cause the soiling of white shoes or dresses. The Savoy theater and Savoy Park are controlled by a theater company of the same title, of which J. M. Swanson is the treasurer, A. G. Swanson is the vice-president, and M. B. Swanson is the secretary and treasurer. The house was first opened to the public on February 1, 1914. The projection is excellent, and, aside from the general appearance of cleanliness for which the house is noted, a great deal might be said of the music furnished by the five-piece orchestra. The general admission to the Savoy is ten cents, although up to twenty-five cents has been readily obtained on a number of especially popular films. Its patronage includes the residents of the finest part of the Hill district and it has enjoyed a very satisfactory business from the time of opening.

OLD MILL THEATER, DALLAS, TEXAS.

Hulsey Adds Another Big Picture House to His String By Leasing 1,924 Seating Capacity Structure.

THE OLD MILL theater, Dallas, Texas, was erected by Dalton Brothers and Bible during the fall of 1913, and was opened October 15 of the same year. The idea of naming it the "Old Mill" was originated by the architect, I. A. Walker, on account of two large exhaust fans used in the front, giving it an "Old Dutch" appearance. The house seats 890 on the main floor, with additional 48 chairs in the boxes on the main floor; the balcony seats 936 and two tiers of boxes on the sides, brings the total seating capacity to 1924. The chairs used on the main floor have what is sometimes called an "air cushion" seat, the trade-name being "squab-spring" seat, which is very comfortable. It is said these chairs cost over $8.00 each installed. When the house was first opened, a light musical comedy was used for some six or eight weeks, being succeeded by Pantages vaudeville. This circuit's acts brought very good business to the house until the Garden, Majestic and Orpheum put on vaudeville, and the city could not support so much vaudeville.

During last fall, motion pictures were installed in the Old Mill, and some few weeks after making it a picture house. Dalton Bros. & Bible leased the house to E. H. Hulsey, then owner of the Queen theaters at Dallas, Galveston and Houston. The same day this announcement was made, another deal was consummated whereby the Feature theater, formerly the Orpheum, under complete remodeling, was sold by Dalton Bros. & Bible to the Jorgenson Brothers.

As soon as Mr. Hulsey took over the house, a complete change of the program being used was made. Then Mr. Hulsey started making improvements, the first being an expenditure of several hundred dollars for artistic scenery on the stage, and an electrical fountain. One of the latest improvements is the Wurlitzer Hope-Jones Unit orchestra, said to have cost $15,000. The Old Mill is now running Paramount, V-L-S-E, Griffith features, and features of the General Film Company.

Mr. Hulsey, the lessee of the Old Mill, has just recently added to his string of houses, the Newport, a small house next door to his Queen theater in Dallas, both of which are in the same block with the Old Mill. He also operates the Hippodrome at Waco, in addition to the Queen at Houston and Queen at Galveston. Mr. Hulsey has introduced many novel advertising methods in Dallas for the Queen and Old Mill. One of his recent "stunts" advertising Kleine's "Woman Who Dared" at the Old Mill was an open carriage, driven by a uniformed driver, with a beautiful woman in the back seat, who had her eyes covered with a domino mask, parading the principal streets of the city.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Bryan visited Universal City last week where they were the personal guests of President Laemmle. As the party of the ex-Secretary of State arrived at Universal City from Hermosa Beach they were met by President Laemmle, Director-General Henry McRae, Manager H. P. Caulfield and other Universal west coast officials. Nearly a hundred cowboys and cavalrymen were lined up on each side of the boulevard and fired a welcoming salute as Mr. Bryan drove up Laemmle boulevard.

Having been apprised of the coming of Mr. Bryan, the various directors had arranged a program of events calculated to give the ex-Secretary of State a comprehensive idea of the growth of the industry. Several scenes were staged for their benefit on the big open-air stage, among them being an interior of Al E. Christie's four-reel comedy feature, "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," with Marie Tempest in the stellar role.

Leaving the main stage, the party motored down the broad boulevard to the lower end of the grounds where more thrills awaited them. Paul Bourgeois and Rex De Rosselli halted the work of their company long enough to show the visitors how wild animals are handled at the picture city. Continuing on to the set in use by the Rex company, they witnessed an old-fashioned barn dance which Director Reynolds staged for their amusement. Daddy Manly and Mother Benson led the almost obsolete square dances and at the close of the Virginny reel Daddy called for three cheers for the statesman.

The cowboys then led the Bryan party to a street scene in a western town which Robert Leonard was using in producing the four-reel feature, "Renunciation," featuring Julia Dean. As the party were about to leave the grounds a howling mob of mounted cowboys and cavalrymen rushed past them, running toward the hills. In their hands they bore wet blankets and grain sacks. Looking toward the hills Mr. Bryan and his party saw that the beacon fire which was lighted in honor of the party had run before the wind and was rapidly becoming unmanageable. Help had been called for by telephone and the ranch boys were responding.

Urging their horses to top speed, the boys wormed their way up the hill and soon stood silhouetted against the skyline beating back the fire. The party remained interested spectators of the fire fighting until the last sign of smoke had disappeared. Before leaving for Los Angeles Mr. Bryan posed with President Laemmle for several still pictures and turned the crank of a moving picture machine on a comedy scene.

JACK HARVEY, DIRECTOR, JOINS UNIVERSAL.

Violet Mersereau and Billy Garwood are now being featured in a big three-reel production called "The Wolf of Debt." It will be in the hands of Jack Harvey, formerly a Thanhouser director. Night photography will be one of the features of this picture.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Posters.

POSTERS are good only when they are advantageously placed. The mere fact that they are posters does not make the business. Posters may be a positive detriment. The other evening we stopped in front of a house the lobby of which was plastered with bills. Small painted cards told whether the attraction was "Today," "Tomorrow" or "Coming." Evidently the posters were not changed about but merely these signs were shifted. Two men stood in the lobby trying to figure just what the bill was. They gave it up and passed on. It was too much trouble. It seems strange that a management should be content with such a patchwork display, but the house was there to prove it. Not far away is another house with a sign that reads: "All posters advertise pictures shown today." Of the two, the latter is by far the better plan, though some "coming" subjects should be advertised.

Ticket Cases.

The Maxime, Detroit gives a ticket case to its patrons, as this clipping from the program shows:

TICKET CASE

The Maxime Theater has issued a very neat leather combination ticket case, with compartments for street car tickets, stamps and Maxime Theater tickets.

Patrons of the theater can secure one of these cases at the box office with every dollar's worth of tickets. By purchasing tickets in lots and using these cases, they save waiting in line at the box office.

A man with a ticket case will want to keep tickets in it. We have not seen a sample of the case, and no details are supplied, but perhaps the management will reply if interested brothers query with a return envelope.

The program is twenty pages, largely advertising, but taking enough room to announce the attractions, and it is possible to tell which is program and which is advertising because a triple cut-off rule is used. Not much is said of a majority of the films. The first inside cover page gives all the facts about the house that patrons might wish to know. The whole page is occupied to advantage and you feel that you know all about the house. We think that if they would take another page from the advertisers and give some house talk, as well, that they would give interesting house talk; the sort of copy that would pay for the space used. The Fourth of July issue carries a very red firecracker and a flag border for the front and back cover, running across the top and bottom, but not down the sides. Which gives a better effect with a larger border than would be obtained from the panel effect. Each day is named and dated, and in other ways they conform to the best usage. The bottom of each page carries the page number spelled out and the words "Maxine Program"; the latter appearing inside and the numbers being on the outside of the margin; to the right on the right hand pages and to the left on the even numbers. It carries a certain suggestion of style that counts. The paper is good enough, but not too costly, and the printing is well done.

Coming Back.

From the Orpheum theater, Gardner, Mass., comes a post card for The Celebrated Scandal. Many exhibitors have been quick to make this work for them. The current copy reads:

Everybody, Everywhere in town will talk for weeks about
The Biggest Scandal
Gardner has ever had.
Are you familiar with the facts?
It concerns Betty Nansen.
Do you know her?

In the original, the lines "The biggest scandal Gardner has ever had," get all the display. There is a lower panel giving all of the facts, naming the film and the player, with house and date of performance, but this must be varied for each house.

We are glad to see Mr. Stanton coming back into the fold.

Advertising Slides.

The management of the Lyric, Stuart, Florida, sends in a clipping from a local paper. It is not from a photoplay page but from a feature department. The item reads in part:

Every now and then--especially now—there are those who will howl about the advertising signs shown in the pictures; and there are many who condemn them, saying, "We go to see the films and not to have these ads thrown at us." That is true enough—but the same is true of folks who go to a restaurant to get grub—yet I've never heard of there being any kicks over the ads placed on the menu! No sir. The same people enter a trolley car for the purposes of transportation—and those same cars, all of 'em, are crowded chock-a block with big placards from those advocating the advantages of "see that hump" clear down through to castoria corsets—but I've never heard any raucous remonstrances against the ads, have you?

The fact is that while the people do "go to see the films" they don't realize the great cost to the theater in procuring these master-pieces, the cost of the entire upkeep of the establishment and the frequent losses the managers are obliged to suffer at frequent times. The matter of conducting a first-class playhouse is not all "velvet" by about thirty miles; and I favor the plan of the manager getting as much for his advertising space as he possibly can If anyone is harmed by the insertion of a few advertising signs slid in between two long-extended performances he is sure some tender-hearted. He should never eat a cheese sandwich—merely because the darn thing isn't made of all bread.

This reads well, and a lot of managers argue along the same lines, but why? Put advertising in your program and the public does not have to read it unless it wishes to. Put signs on the restaurant and they do not spoil one's appetite. But the theater manager himself would be one of the first to complain if each slice of bread had an advertisement printed on, if the tablecloth announced that it had been purchased at Brown's and washed with Smith's soap in Jones' laundry.

The screen advertisement is not the same as the advertisement on the wall. It is thrust upon the patron. He must read it whether he wishes to or not. There is no alternative. It is thrust into his face. He comes in to see pictures and not the advertisement of Smith's skin cure or Jones' grape juice. He resents being compelled to read the stuff and he resents the interruption to the performance. He has paid for a good entertainment. He is entitled to it. He should not be required to view a lot of advertising stuff. A manager, if he wishes, may plaster his walls with advertisements and fill up his program with them until it becomes valueless to himself or anyone else, but the screen is his stage. He should not permit the advertising slide any more than a dramatic theater should permit a sandwich man to walk on and spoil the realism of a performance. There is no objection to a few house slides, but the foreign advertisement has no place on the screen.

Card V. P.

The Calhoun, Minneapolis, sends in a couple of neat-looking programs. The one for the week of July 5th is better than that preceding it. In that one single line is given to the name of the house instead of the half line used in the earlier issue. The general typographical arrangement is bettered. Not all of the days are dated, as they should be, but this is probably an oversight, since six out of eight are properly tabbed. But a single page is used for the week's program, but they get all of the titles in and some description for four changes and get a good display with eight and ten-point display, a better display, in fact, than comes from twenty-four point on some larger pages. The secret lies in using few display lines and keep the rest of the type light. This is very simple. You merely do not use so much heavy display type and keep it for the best lines. The back page is used for the coming attractions and page two for house chat or some extra big underline. They have made so much improvement in the second issue that we want to see some more, though the second edition is about all the improvement they really need. They use good quality card stock cut vest pocket size.

An Author's Night.

Houses near the studio cities frequently have nights when some star appears in person, but Ashley Miller, of the Edison company, seems to be the first to appear as an author-producer, though Miss Martha Russell, of Essanay, appeared as author-actress. The producer idea is a good one. Mr. Miller played the Englewood theater. Miss Gladys Hulette and Edward Earle and Carlton King also appeared. There is no reason why the men who write and make the pictures should not share the interest with the players. Perhaps Mr. Miller has started something.

In passing, the management announced the coming of the players and their director in a very neat form. There was just one line of bold face type, the name of the house. The rest was all a clean eight point, only one page out of four being printed.

Hidden Coins.

The Majestic theater, Grand Junction, Col., used the cut-outs for The Broken Coin in a new way lately. The explanation follows:

NOTICE!

Commencing Wednesday, June 30th, and continuing every day for 7 days the management of the Majestic Theater will lose 50 broken coin pocket pieces each day throughout the city.

These broken coins will admit the finders of them to the first episode on July 7th. Watch for the coins on the street on the sidewalks—possibly on your lawn. Some of them may be wrapped up in paper or tied in the corner of a handkerchief – you may even find them in an old tin can, so keep your eye peeled. 50 of these coins will be lost every day for 7 days, commencing June 30th. They are the exact size of a dollar, and the color of copper.

This is an adaptation of an English circulation scheme, the original form using metal tokens which were deposited in all sorts of out of the way places. Then clues were given by means of a story or sketches, the tokens being redeemable for prizes. The Broken Coin cut-out works very nicely in this connection.

The house paper, The Movie Fan, also uses a misspelled word contest and there is a popularity voting contest. They must keep busy out there. If Mr. Decker does not mind, will he please tell us how he came out in his scrap with the local paper?

A Nice Man.

J. Calines, of the Amo, Detroit, is a man we like. He says he will expect to see a comment on his V. P. "in a few weeks" instead of asking for the very next issue. He writes:

> I sincerely believe that much of my success is due to constant advertising. How do you like the stock, and have I too much printing? I have a first-class printer and he assures me that this is A-1 quality tag paper.

Tag paper is manila paper, and does not suggest class, but it is better and stronger than cheap colored stock and does very well. A vest pocket must be able to withstand carrying, and stout stock is needed. We do not think that we would change.

Mr. Calines should tell the printer to date the days. There is a lot of type on the program pages, but it is kept light and so does not look as bad as it would were the page messed up with full face. It is clearly divided by rule, but it would be better to rule double above the days and single below the date line instead of having a hair line both above and below.

In the Saturday and Sunday dates a slight change should be made. Saturday reads, "Matinee and evening" and Sunday merely says "Matinee 1.30," giving the impression that there is no evening performance on that day.

The front page carries too much type. The ornament should be pulled out. An extended letter should be used to let the house name take the better part of a line with "Theater" in smaller letters below. The date should appear in the middle of the page, with white space above and below, the price scale should be made smaller and dropped to the bottom and the hours of performance placed just above this, the matinee announcement coming between the house heading and the date line. The spacing should divide the matter into four divisions instead of letting it run a solid page, as at present.

The inside pages can run as they stand with the changes suggested, and the back page underline is well handled. We like the line, "Get the Amo habit and drop in every evening." This is much better than merely "Get the habit" would have been.

Somewhat Eleborate.

Homer Croy sent in some East Indian programs a while back, but P. Poggenpohl, of the Empress, Gordon, Neb., sends in a dodger in American Indian, to wit, the Sioux language. The double line at the top merely says that it is a good moving picture show. The top line in the second bank stands for "time" and "Ten o'clock" and the second line adds "in the forenoon." The third of the smaller lines announces "A Quarrel Among the Neighbors" and the last two lines read: "The squatter—the man who lost his land." It looks like much more than this, but in spite of the traditional reticence of Poor Lo it is evident that he talks a lot when he has anything to say. Mr. Poggenpohl writes

Ite Owapi Naskanska

Mazaskanskan Wikcemna kin leanpahan ktelo.

Wicasa Wan Makoce Mano.

Ti on maki kiciahaye kiciyapi that they held the Indian Congress there, with more than five thousand Indians present for the week, and says "It was not necessary to do much advertising, these dodgers being sufficient. The Indian is a great moving picture fan and as during the week my entire program was injun I did a very good business."

It was here that Essanay made the Buffalo Bill pictures some time ago and we are indebted to him for some very interesting post cards of both events.

We want to add that Mr. Poggenpohl has an exceptionally tasteful letter head.

Getting the Can.

"Getting the can" suggests a loss of position, but H. T. Drake, of the Lyric theater, Fayetteville, N. C., got over twelve thousand cans and was happy. The cut shows the front of the house with a part of the collection yet to be removed. His idea was to work in with the mosquito campaign on the proposition that the cans, uncared for, might collect the stagnant water that would breed mosquitos, so a free admission was offered any child presenting ten cans strung together, the hole used in stringing them providing drainage.

In our forthcoming book on Picture Theater Advertising, we suggest the can scheme, but with a different sequel in that the cans reappear on front stoops with a length of cord and a tag that reads:

> Tie this can to your dog and head him in the direction of the Blank theater. The comedy today is funny enough to make even a dog laugh.

Having pulled the cans off the lots, Mr. Drake cannot very well put them back again, but here are two good can schemes.

In passing, twelve thousand cans should have some cash value.

Mr. Drake not only got the usual newspaper write ups, but was mentioned in the newspaper reports of the society meetings as doing this toward the cleaning up of the town. Any scheme that causes physicians and health officers to write the newspapers in praise of the idea is good press work and Mr. Drake sends in a couple of columns of the sort of stuff that cannot be bought. In addition the scheme will be adopted as part of the lecture of the state health officers. Be the first in your state to start something on this line.

An Improvement.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., improved its program when it went in for the running story program instead of the day program lost in a mass of advertising, but now they do even better by retaining this and adding a two column program by days, but undated. Assembling the program groups the attractions where they can easily be compared and then running stories lift up the more important of the features. It is a big advance over the old style program.

Three Sheet Frames.

The other evening we watched them change the lobby posters in the Bijou theater, Atlantic City. The sheets were framed in three or four inch moulding, a heavy frame that promised to be difficult handling, but they merely turned the moulding back on its hinges, opening up the boards so that the old paper could be taken out and replaced with new. The posters were attached to the board with thumb tacks at the margins, and the moulding was turned over this. Instead of a frame, the moulding was in four well jointed sections, each hinged to the back board independently. At each performance a slide was run announcing that Billy Reeves could be seen daily working in pictures around town and that these pictures would be seen first at the Bijou every Saturday.

Good.

J. A. Goldstein, of the Lumberg, Niagara Falls, writes:

> I submit the enclosed, same being my "initiation fee," as entrant into your department.
> I will be pleased to have your criticism of same, for, as you can see, it is our first number, and if there is room for improvement, I desire to get busy at once.
> I cannot close without referring to the good work you are doing through your department which has no doubt been the salvation of more than one exhibitor in his advertising perplexities.

The issue is an eight page four by six with the program on one page and the day set in letters one above the other at the left. This should be changed by widening the box (even at the cost of line space to the program proper) to let the "Mon" run on one line with the date beneath. It can be done and still give an eighteen em line for the program. Apart from this the program is smart, but not being on the third page, which is used for editorial, it should have been on the fifth and not the fourth page, as the reading matter now on the fifth would have been picked up from the fourth page more quickly. Mr. Goldstein sells more than half of his space to the outside advertiser and yet has enough room to do sufficient talking to his patrons, merely because he divides the space well. Evidently he is not superstitious, for there are thirteen advertisements. If you want a compact eight pager or are running a large four, perhaps Mr. Goldstein will let you have one of his for a pattern. It is a good one.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticized, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Censorships.

CENSORSHIP is becoming a vital question to the writer of photoplays. It is an issue far more close than most authors realize. The demands of the National Board may be understood and complied with, but the various state and local censorships are making it increasingly hard to sell stories.

The author not in close touch with the studios cannot realize this. He gets his stories back without explanation. He knows merely that he cannot sell. He does not know that he does not sell because some local body has the editor buffaloed. He blames his luck and not the censors.

To take a concrete example: Pennsylvania cuts out of comedies most kicks and knockabout stuff. Some of the comedies shown have been more or less vicious, but the censors make no distinction. You've three guesses as to what will be cut out—and then you lose. Naturally editors fear any comedy of extreme action. It might be passed, but there is not much use in taking a chance. A story is turned back. The author does not know why. He cannot know that it is merely the reaction of the censorship.

Censorship, if needed, would be well, but when it is made the excuse for a political job and the office is filled by some henchman of the party in power, it is far from being sane or intelligent. Presently we will arrive at a point where all heroes must be little Rollos and all heroines as angelic as little Eva, the well known friend of the brunette Uncle Tom. Complaint is made that stories grow weaker and less interesting. Few realize that the censors and not the authors are to blame.

It is only a question of time, if the censors are permited to continue, when it will not be posible to sell. It is time now to do something about it. The thing to do is to appeal to your state lawmakers. Educate others to do the same. Make the censorship deservedly unpopular or presently there will be no market for outside stuff. The studio writer, knowing the limitations, can get his stories through, but few if any of the free lances can write to conform to the many demands. Some may know that one censorship objects to comedy police. They may not know that another arbiter also objects to police in any form. They will not have a comedy policeman but will use officers with the result that their stories will be dropped.

At the present time there is hardly sixty per cent. of the product shown as released by the manufacturer. And stuff that is shown in one state may be cut out in another, each section of the country practising a different scheme of mutilation. The percentage is growing smaller all the time. Presently no one but the censors will see a story in the form in which it is released. And a story incomplete does not do the author justice.

Mimicry.

The monkey is an amusing animal, but it is seldom that he makes a good business man. Many script aspirants have the mimetic powers of the monkey but they seldom turn into authors, for they seek to replace thought with the imitation of thought. They search for technical terms. They overwork each new device they find, but they give nothing new to the old forms.

Three letters within a week state that the writers supply "directors' sheets" with their scripts. Of course a director's sheet is a very knowing and technical thing, but what is a director's sheet? We wonder if they really know. A man who didn't know much about pictures once wrote a book about them and because he asked a man who used such a sheet, he presumed it was a standard and so told it. Others who wrote books from this first one took the term over. It sounds interesting, so the carefully prepared director's sheet goes along to advertise the author's inexperience.

A few directors habitually use a skeleton outline of the script. They have good memories—or think they have—so they condense the action to memoranda and work from this brief form. Other directors, who are working from an original script which has been much changed, find it necessary to sketch out the new run of the action to avoid getting tangled in the changes. They would not accept the author's form of sheet in either case, for almost every script is subject to minor screen changes, and it is because of these changes that the slip is primarily made. Naturally the submission of such a slip is, on its face, a confession of ignorance.

Another sadly overworked phrase is "Cut." It is seen on some loaned script or on some sample script in a book. It looks very "wise," so in it goes. "Cut" is used in two senses. Where all of the scenes in one set are taken on a single strip of film, two or more scenes may be done together. Sometimes, too, the director wants to make two or more short cut backs of what was originally planned as a long scene. In the joining slip he briefs the action to the point where he wishes the scene to stop and writes "cut" to show that the film is to be cut there and that the rest is not to be used in that scene.

Staff writers use the word to indicate the positive and necessary termination of a scene at that point. If Nell goes out of the dining room into the kitchen the word "cut" may be written after "Nell exits to kitchen." It brings the attention of the director to the fact that the scenes must match up and that Nell cannot be seen going out of the dining room and then not be seen in the kitchen for a couple of seconds, but since the director does not need to be told about this, the word is used but seldom, though we believe that James Oliver Curwood ends each scene with that word.

It should be the aim of the author to get his script into such a form that it might be made without alteration or emendation, but it is not necessary to use all the studio terms to prove knowledge. It has an entirely contrary effect.

Trimmings.

If you are like many authors, you'll find, in going over your work, places where you might have added bits of business to good advantage. You are rather sorry that these good ideas did not occur to you at the time. They would have made the script better, but they hardly seem of sufficient importance to make it worth while to rewrite the script.

As a rule it is well worth while to go to this trouble if you are certain that the revision will help the story. Sometimes a script is bought for idea and sometimes it is bought because of some little touch that makes the story seem to be real to the editor. It may be a single bit of business that really sells the script; just some little thing that is not vital to the story and yet seems to give it a human note.

It's tough to have to recopy the script, but it is still worse not to sell it. Directors are not always able to get the full idea from the first hurried reading. Now and then a bit of business will give them a better idea of the story and of the author's capacity than the most carefully prepared story. The action seems to illuminate the entire script and to make it seem desirable. Put these bits of business in.

Wildcats.

Recent upsets in the film world emphasize the unwisdom of seeking a market for scripts with other than with the established companies. The wildcats mean to be honest, but they cannot pay unless they are themselves paid and when the market fails to be profitable the company goes under and there is no one to ship back the manuscripts to the impatient authors.

Sometimes the company is reorganized, perhaps more than once, and then the question of financial responsibility becomes so involved that expensive litigation is the only recourse. It does not pay to spend several hundred dollars for lawyers and court fees to recover the fifty or hundred dollars that might be awarded.

It is better to move slowly and safely and have dealings only with the established companies or those able to prove financial responsibility. This will limit the apparent field, but it will keep scripts to those companies likely to take and pay for them.

It is foolish to send manuscript, uninvited, to every company that has "Film" as a part of its name, and yet there are hundreds who take the tips published by some author's magazines and flood with their unfinished work studios that want no scripts of any kind and which has made no provision whatever for handling manuscript.

Many of the feature companies have no editor. They deal with one or more staff men and do not look to the outside. None of them want the average grade of story. They must get the best if they would hope to compete with others and cannot risk their success with amateurish work.

If you send to the new companies you must send only your best and since you stand a good chance of losing the script, it is not a good gamble.

Discords.

Unless you know a subject, do not try to write about it. In a recent two reel story that will not be released, much of the action took place in the home of a French nobleman. Coming home from the theater the party remove their wraps in the lower hall, precisely as they might do in an eight room house. The little daughter was permitted to roam around unattended and one of the characters became intoxicated on whiskey. These were but three of the little things which would have irritated those who know that in the homes of the rich there is not a community hatrack in the front hall, that French girls of good family are never permitted on the street alone and who know that absinthe and wine are more common than whiskey in certain circles. The story was written from the knowledge of the author and, knowing no better, he gave his puppets the same actions that form part of his own life. If he had been writing of Cleopatra he might have shown her helping the hired girl to get out the weekly wash. Write about people you know and know of the people you write about. A single jarring note will spoil the illusion and the editor who picks up a story in which some bloated bondholder starts for the office with his lunch in his coattail pocket is apt to drop the manuscript before the lunch gets out of the house. Show him that you write with authority.

Consider This.

Manuscript envelopes, like the cloak of Charity, cover a multitude of sins.

About Schools.

Most of those who have given their opinion of the schools have found them inadequate. A Florida correspondent drops into poetry. The effusion is printed verbatim and is offered without comment. It offers its own best commentary:

Moving Picture World,

Gentlemen

I supose you have herd the same old tune before from beginers but maybe not in poetry.

So here goes.

If the Weary World is Willing
Ive a little word to say.
Abought my sad exprince
Trying to write a photoplay.

Ive Wrote both songs and poetry
And Friction, a little Yes
But never have wrote a picture play.
Although Ive tried my best.

I answerd a ad in the paper
To a corspondence school
They said for $30.00 they wood learn me all the rules

Dear friends. Take my true advice
And let that school go by,
When they say they teach you all for money
You can make them out a LIE.

This May enterest outhers.

Full Scripts.

Not writing for publication, an author who got a staff position on his thirty-second script, says:

> Another place where you are dead right is about a beginner writing full scripts. I never write a continuity that I do not learn something that does not make my next script easier to write and better in technique.

This man wrote full scripts and got a studio job on the strength of his continuity. It does not follow that everyone who writes full scripts will get a studio job, but it does follow that the writer who can and does write full scripts of action will know more about writing than the cheater who writes synopses only.

It is impossible to write only synopses and know whether or not the story is the best that can be done. You must see the story form under your development. In these days of tank development for photographic film not many use the tray, yet there is something fascinating about the tray developing in seeing the white plate gradually stain, then color until the detail begins to come in and finally the whole picture is on the plate. Writing a script is much like that. To the true workman there is a real delight in watching the story form, and if you have it in your heart to be a good workman, the development of a story never becomes a task. There is always a joy in watching the story grow.

With the synopsis alone you have nothing of this sort. You turn out a suggestion for a play, but the story alone is no more a full play than is a mass of clay a finished statue. It is not the story you tell, but the manner in which you tell that story that counts for something.

Work synopses only in the first stage of your progress, and do only the synopsis until you learn what a plot is, but after that develop your story into complete action for your own information and benefit. Do not merely write that "Carl scales the cliff." Get busy. Invent the thrills that will make the climb up the cliff something gripping; absorbing. Then you will know just what value the incident has. Next time you write a cliff scene you will know better how to plan the action and you'll know before hand how that action will look.

Any job that is worth doing is worth doing right.

Neal on Anti-Climax.

Professor Robert Wilson Neal goes gunning for the anti-climax and corrects our suggestion that it is also an ante-climax by pointing out that it might be the slump of the falling action, past the climax. He treats the matter so comprehensively that we have nothing more to say than "thanks." The same simplicity and directness of thought that make Short Stories in the Writing one of the really useful handbooks stand forth in this, so give ear:

> Not speaking of suffrage, I am an anti; I am—in the spelling—for anti-climax, not ante-climax—not in the same sense. But I should not go so far as you went in conceding ground to the gentleman who wanted you always to spell it a-n-t-e instead of a-n-t-i. You put it, "An anti-climax is also an ante-climax, since it must come before the intended climax." Maybe I seem to be renigging on this; maybe not. I know we agreed thoroughly when we were discussing the suggestion, but I think we happened to talk about the preliminary crises, or climaxes, almost entirely, and did not bother to define anti-climax, because the term is well known and understood. But as a matter of fact, as you will no doubt agree again, the most deadly form of anti-climax is that which follows a fairly strong situation with a weaker one, producing the effect of bathos. Bathos in anti-climax is one of the main reliances of comedy in producing the humorous effect, but it is fatal in any way other form of drama.
> Naturally, the first test of any situation, to determine if it is anti-climactic, is to determine if it agrees with the spirit and action of the play as a whole. Whatever is inconsistent is in some degree anti-climactic. Thus, a situation that arouses the deep tragic emotions is inconsistent with a comedy purpose, and therefore results in anti-climax. On the other hand, an abrupt let-down from tragedy or drama to comedy level results in anti-climax. Evidently a great deal of the effect actually produced depends on the management of the incident, not on its nature. A director can turn a well-planned incident into anti-climax, just as he can sometimes save a poorly-planned situation from falling into bathos. Indifferent acting can spoil a situation in the same way—by failing to appreciate its true significance in the larger action, and reducing it to anti-climax. Anyone who has seen Warfield in The Auctioneer will understand how his acting not only preserves situations from being comical, but out of their comic elements brought forth a greater pathos.
>
> The next test for anti-climax is significance. The scene and situation must mean something, and mean it unmistakably in connection with the principal action. There isn't any use of showing Sister Susie sewing shirts for soldiers in a play concerning American labor, but there may be in showing her sewing shirts as a sweat-shop job. Another reason why scenes give the impression of anti-climax is, that their connection with the play as a whole is not made clear. Yet another is that the connection itself is remote; it may exist, but it is not essential. All this means, frequently, merely that the idea is not made clear. Sometimes it is too remote to be made clear without excessive explanation; so that proportion and emphasis and direct advance have to be sacrificed unless the idea is left obscure. Sometimes, on the other hand, the idea is good, but its connection with the rest of the play is not clear. To illustrate: Suppose Susie sewing shirts comes near the close of a play in which Susie has passed through tempestuous experiences, the idea being that the turmoil is gone and peace is hers. If, without explanation, we see Susie thus occupied, we are more than likely to be puzzled. But a leader will avoid this anti-climactic effect by making the connection clear: "Peace after turmoil," or an equivalent, would make all plain.
> In brief, incidents and situations may be anti-climaxes because they are inconsistent with the atmosphere or action of the play as a whole; because they have no real significance in the play; because their connection with the general action is not made clear, or because the connection is so remote that it cannot be shown without sacrifice of more important action or of other important elements of interest.

Be Explicit.

Brevity is a thing to be admired in a manuscript, but brevity does not mean merely shortness. If a situation may be conveyed in a line, that line only should be employed, but if seven lines are necessary to clearly explain a single piece of business, the space should be taken. Sometimes a small scene will require an elaborate explanation where a longer one may be dismissed with a line. It should be the aim of the writer to learn just what the essentials are and then use the essentials. It does not always happen that a script is rejected because some scenes are not clear, but the well defined script stands a much better chance of being accepted because it can be more vividly realized by the reader. Directors are coming more and more to appreciate the help an author can give, and to expect it.

Comedies.

Evidently polite comedies are not the successful successors to slapstick that it was supposed they would be. The public still seems to want lively action, but it wants some halfway reasonable excuse for the action. There is still a demand for lively action and this must be supplied if scripts are to be sold. Never mind what you see printed about the other sort. Watch the screen. That is a better index to wants than the not always reliable press agent.

Nothing New.

Just now the magazines are talking about the new color-music. Thirty-five years ago the same idea, in crude form, was advanced in the old Bunnell's Museum on Broadway at Tenth street, where they had an organ with a ground glass above, behind which the primary colors were flashed.

It is the same way with plotting. There may be little new, but the old can be elaborated to the point of newness, just as the red, blue and yellow of the Bunnell organ bears small resemblance to the "steel," "pearl blue," and other tints of the chromola. Get plots reasonably unhackneyed and then give them as new a treatment as you can.

The Difference.

Some typewritten pages may look like a script and yet not act like one.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Important! Operators Notice!

THIS department has received such an enormous number of kicks about the poor inspection of film that I am going to make you the following proposition. I am doing this at the request of one of the largest film manufacturers in the country. Where you find evidence of poor inspection, cut out the faulty part, or the poor splices, and forward them to me, with the data as to what day the films were received, and what exchange they were received from. You may either sign the letter, or sign your name on a separate slip of paper, and enclose a stamped, blank envelope. I will then forward the whole thing to the headquarters of the company handling that exchange, with request they investigate the matter, and remedy whatever is wrong with the inspection in their exchange. Now, please understand that I must have the following data: First, What make of film is it? second, Does it come from a Universal, a General Film, a Mutual, or an independent exchange? third, What day was it received? Don't mix up bad patches, or other faults, cut from several reels. If you take out faults from several reels put each one in a separate envelope and mark them with the name of the film, when the film was received, and what exchange it came from; or, if you cannot use so many envelopes, pin the pieces of film together and attach a tag; also don't forget the postage, because, while I am willing to do this, I cannot pay out two or three dollars a day in postage to accomplish even as great a good as I hope will result from this proposition.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 96.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence, will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What, in detail, is the effect of your projector optical system being out of line, and how would you proceed to line it? Illustrate your reply by sketch, if necessary.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 90.

The Roll of Honor on Question 90 consists of: Jos. H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Tex.; John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, La.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; C. A. Dann, Toronto, Can.; W. A. Burnett, Newton, Ia.; and Bert Meester, Hobart, Ind.

I have selected the reply of Brother Larmour for publication. The reply of Friend Solar was almost identical with that of Larmour's.

Reply to Question No. 90.

By M. W. Larmour, Waco, Tex.

The Question:

What is the practical effect, or effects, of poor contact between the carbon and carbon arm? Can needling of the carbon ever be traced to poor contact with the carbon arm? If it can, explain, in detail, why poor contact would cause such a trouble. To what other causes may needling be traced? What is it that causes the carbon to needle, or, rather, what happens to the carbon when it needles?

The Answer:

Poor contact between the carbon arm and carbon will increase the resistance, burn both carbon and holder, heat the carbon and thus will operate to increase whatever tendency there may be to needle, make the light unsteady, and lower the amperage at the arc. Poor contact between the carbon and holder increases the temperature of the carbon, and if the carbon be working at or near capacity would have decided tendency to cause its binder to disintegrate rapidly, thus producing needling. Needling may also be caused wholly and entirely by overload, or by an inefficient binder. When a carbon needles it means that the binder is burning away faster than the carbon itself is consumed, thus allowing the particles of carbon to gradually fall apart. The binder will be consumed faster where it is hottest, and this, of course, means near the point of the carbon. Needling results in carbon forming in a long, tapering point, and when that condition occurs it is difficult to handle the light and secure even illumination of the screen.

In this connection the editor would say that where needling is present the operator should first clean the inside of his carbon clamps thoroughly with a file, being careful, however, not to file any of the metal away, which might result in the carbons setting crooked. If this has no effect on needling, then try a carbon of another brand; if the needling still occurs try a carbon of slightly larger diameter. It is also well to make sure that your lamphouse is thoroughly ventilated, because with clogged ventilation the temperature inside the lamphouse is raiseu, and that in turn adds to the temperature of the carbon.

Wait a Little.

W. F. Bentley, Middlebury, Vermont, wishes to know the following:

> Are meniscus-bi-convex condensing lenses measured, to find their focal length, the same as are ordinary plano lenses; also should the same focal length be used when using meniscus and bi-convex as when using plano condensers—that is under the same conditions?

With reference to this query, will say that I now have the light ray matter in the hands of the printer. Its publication will begin in possibly three, and certainly not longer than four weeks. Until that time I do not care to give any further information on lenses, this by reason of the fact that I first want to have everything thoroughly tested by competent men, to the end that when the matter is given out it will be found at least approximately correct.

It Will, But—.

Raymond W. Cort, Pocatello, Ida., says:

> I have two Power's Six A projectors upon which I recently installed Gundlach lenses. Since putting on these lenses I find a travel ghost, due to shutter not being large enough to cover the entire lens during film movement. If I add 3/8 of an inch to the width of the main blade and cut 3/8 inch from the other two blades, will this eliminate the travel ghost, and what will be the general effect?

I assume that you have installed a lens with a wider aperture. You can make the main blade 3/8 of an inch wider and the other two 3/8 of an inch narrower, and in so doing will get a little more light and no travel ghost, but probably a heavy increase in flicker. There are several things you can do. First, cut a metal slide to fit your slide carrier, and in its center drill a hole about 1/4 of an inch in diameter. Place this slide in the carrier, open the machine gate and project the clear, white light (no film) through the objective when it is set so that the picture is in focus on the screen. Blow smoke through the light ray in front of the objector and you will observe that at one point it is narrower than anywhere else. The narrow point is where your shutter ought to be set. The travel ghost may also be lessened by pulling the lamphouse back as far as it can be gotten and keep other conditions right, but this would involve the lens combination and I don't care about going into that just now. You can also eliminate the travel ghost by stopping down the aperture of your lens somewhat by inserting a cardboard ring in the front end of the objective, placed tight up against the lens. You will, of course, lose some light by doing this, but not very much; you probably would not lose any at all to speak of if your condenser was the right distance from the film. I will give you all the dope on this presently; meanwhile you will simply have to have patience.

Hoboken Operators' Banquet.

Recently the editor received an invitation to attend an entertainment and reception given by M. P. M. O. P. Union 384, I. A. T. S. E., Hudson County, Hoboken, U. J. When the time came, this particular quill shover, while not exactly down and out, was decidedly under the weather. We called up Brother Sherman, president of Local 384, and tried to beg off, but it wouldn't work. We told him we were sick, whereupon he immediately volunteered to send a taxi, ambulance or hearse, whichever we thought would best meet the requirements. Now Sherman is not only himself, personally, a mighty fine fellow, but he also is a live wire, and an up-to-date union official; also the Hudson County operators, who compose the membership of 384, are themselves, individually and collectively, live wires, therefore after the threat of the hearse we decided there was nothing to do but appear in Hoboken at midnight, Wednesday evening, July 14th, and partake of the hospitality of the Hudson County boys, and the ghostly hour saw us bouncing over the cobble stones of that classic city on our two-wheeled get-there.

To say we were astonished would be to put it mildly. We said the Hoboken bunch were live wires, but we certainly did not expect to see a large restaurant, on the ground floor, literally packed full of operators, in, fact almost as full as the guests were when they finished the banquet, for it was not a cheese and cracker imitation, but the real goods, including that which made Milwaukee famous, or anything else you wanted—within reason, of course.

There was cabaret, music, singing and general high jinks interspersed with speaking. The guests of the evening were: William C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Co.; J. H. Hallberg, the economizer man; Mr. Blauvelt, Precision Machine Co.; J. C. Haunstein, Picture Theater Equipment Co.; Mr. Wilson, from the "House of Hallberg"; G. W. Foster, General Film Co.; Joe Abrams, Sol Abrams, Robert Saunders, and other members of Local 306, and F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World.

William C. Smith spoke on the advantages of affiliation with the organization, and drew a simile from another powerful organization which was well received.

H. T. Edwards, president of the Picture Theater Equipment Company, presented the members of the Union with a handsome picture entitled, "I Don't Belong to the Union." This picture is the work of an artist, and must be seen to be appreciated. The presentation was made by Mr. J. C. Haunstein, one of the "old timers" who has risen from the ranks, and now holds the position of manager of the P. T. E. Co.

F. H. Richardson spoke briefly on the benefits to be derived through organization; of the necessity for solidity of purpose and the injury done by union "politics"; also calling attention to the importance of the work of the operator, and the fact that a man who, in order to hold a position was obliged to be a competent electrician, a fairly good optician, a good mechanic, able to withstand 110 degrees of heat and project a good picture with anything a manager hands him, ought to be considered as worth at least a reasonable salary—say $40 a week.

The surprise of the evening came directly after the banquet, when Brother Hallberg, one of the two honorary members of the local, announced that a check for fifty dollars was waiting at his office for the treasurer. Friend Hallberg spoke on his great hobby, "Co-operation and Publicity," and his remarks were well received.

The officers of the union are: I. G. Sherman, president; Walter A. Bemis, vice-president; Edward Bordman, financial secretary; Dion J. De Titta, treasurer; Conrad Daubener, recording secretary; William Steiner, sergeant-at-arms; John J. Giles, conductor.

Great credit is due to the two hard workers on the Arrangement Committee, Brother Bemis and Frank Kirschgessner for the success of the affair.

The Hudson County Union is deserving of success. Under the able leadership of Brother Sherman and his brother officers, backed by an energetic membership, it has already accomplished wonders, considering the fact that it has only been in existence a few months.

An Odd Idea.

Arthur F. Stilson, Galesburg, Ill., writes:

> Again will I trouble you with one of my fool theories, this time dealing with light. Recently while experimenting a bright (?) idea popped into my noodle, as follows: Why not have a neutral carbon, one not connected to any source of electricity between the two live ones, so there would be two arcs and, consequently, twice as much light. I experimented to see if it would work, and the following theory or brain storm is the result.
> In looking through some electrical books I happened upon a chart showing the distribution of light around the arc, and, to use the exact words of the book, "comparatively little light is thrown off in a horizontal direction, the major portion going off at an agle of 45 degrees downward from the horizontal." My improved idea is this: to use three carbons as in the > sketch; two positive and one negative. The arc burning between two positives and one negative would make a light distribution as per the sketch I have marked No. 2, which would give twice the number of craters, and consequently twice as much light without using any more current.

Well, Brother Stilson, I am afraid it is a plain brainstorm all right. Your theory sounds nice, but, as a matter of fact, it would amount to a multiple connection, and I think you would find that in practice you would be unable to maintain but one arc because the least variation in resistance as between the two would cause one to take all the current. That would be one objection; there are others. The thing is interesting to look at, but that is all it amounts to I believe; moreover, about everything one could think of of this kind has already been tried out, and pretty thoroughly tried out, too. If I had one dollar right now for every scheme of this sort that has reached this office in the past six years I would have quite some additional figures in my bank book. I do not remember having seen this particular thing in exactly this form, but there has been what was to all intents and purposes the same thing sent in several times.

Alternating Current Laws.

The Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Rochester, N. Y., have called my attention to the fact that a manufacturer of a current rectifying device is advising that laws have been passed, or are about to be passed, in several states, prohibiting the use of alternating current for the projection of pictures.

I wish to say that I have made investigation of this matter and can find no ground-work whatever for such statements, nor do I believe the courts would uphold such a law if it were passed. There is no reason in the world for such legislation, except it might reasonably be claimed that the use of 25-cycle current might be held injurious to the eyes, due to the fact that its alterations are so far apart that there is often a visible flicker. Personally, I think projection with alternating current is poor practice and should be discontinued, but to discontinue it by force of law is something else again.

Placing an Invention.

Charles Chapman, manager American Automatic Slide Picture Machine Company, Dallas, Tex., writes.

> Would you kindly advise me as to the best way to place my invention on the market, as I lack the funds? I have a practical machine with which to do advertising. It will last fully fifteen years, as the construction eliminates all worn gears, etc. It runs at three different speeds, and has two ways of showing slides, with automatic cutoff and automatic blender. The machine is absolutely perfect in every respect.

My dear sir let me tell you there 'ain't no such animal." I used to think I was myself one of those absolutely perfect things, but have concluded that even I have one or two faults—strange but true.

What Brother Chapman has is a machine to automatically project a series of slides. The slides are placed in some sort of holder, and are moved down, one after the other, in front of the light, the change requiring five seconds, and the slides remaining in the light fifteen seconds, though I understand this speed can be changed.

It would be utterly impossible for me to give any opinion whatsoever, without first having examined the machine and seen it in operation. Where inventors have perfected some device, unless it be something really remarkable in its excellence, the only practical plan is to form a company with local capital. Friend Chapman lacks funds, therefore he cannot bring his invention to New York and demonstrate it, and even if he did he might fail to find a backer. I give this matter space because I get a great many requests such as this, and there is only one answer. If you have no money yourself, nine times in ten the only practical plan is to interest local capital. If you cannot do that, by what process of reasoning do you suppose you can interest outside capital?

Open to Argument.

Connecticut says:

> In answer to John Eeck, Hutchinson, Kan., having had a few years' experience on 550, I might suggest that he give 550 D. C. the preference against any of the lower pressures. Its illumination is extremely white, yet decidedly soft, producing a picture of excellent tone. For 40 amperes a ⅝ soft-cored positive and ½ solid negative is a better combination, or even ¾ positive and ½ negative, the object being to always keep an extremely short arc, thus getting the maximum amperage, and at the same time inclining the negative carbon to point if amperage is not high enough to cause it to pencil slightly. At the start, set the bottom carbon forward and just overlapping the top carbon (assuming each is a pointed projection carbon), or have the front edge of top carbon at the center line of the bottom carbon. This will cause the crater to form to best advantage. If the brother will advise his optical conditions, together with the make lamp he is using, also current fluctuation expressed in voltage (approximate) I will be able to fix him out.
> On 550 or 110 the essential feature of arc control is to keep your bottom carbon from rounding off, for in losing the point you also lose your arc control; this is doubly certain if the line load is disturbing your delivery. If he wishes to use higher amperage (I am using 60; have used 80, but the latter is too much load for my feed wires) more satisfactory results will be obtained from low amperage resistance units in multiple than from a single high-amperage straight series resistant. Car heaters (usually 10 amperes) are O. K., and he can most likely find six or eight in the junk at the barns. 110 or 220's in series are impractical as they are either not heavily enough insulated, or else their connections are poor and burn off, but whatever is used should, if possible, be placed in the open air, with just rain protection.
> May I ask that you omit name and locality? The reason for this request is obvious.

With reference to using 550 volts, I cannot agree with the brother. In the first place I cannot see why the light should be any whiter or softer, since the voltage at the arc must remain approximately at the same value it would if the supply were of lower pressure, and if he uses 550 D. C. through rheostats the waste would be enormous.

Using 40 amperes the wattage consumption would be 22,000, whereas the actual wattage used in production of light would be approximately 2,000, meaning a loss of 20,000 watts. Now, regardless of whether the exhibitor is paying a flat rate or not, I submit that it would be a shame to waste 20,000 watts of power to get 2,000. Another thing: whereas it is perfectly safe for an electrician to handle 550 volts, it is not safe for the ordinary operator to do so; he could get seriously injured, or even be killed. If 550 volts is used through a motor generator set then the initial pressure would make no difference at all to the light at the arc, the only difference being that, as I understand the matter, the high voltage motor is a little more economical than is its low voltage brother.

The advice concerning carbons is, I think, good. Many operators prefer two-cored carbons. I don't. It is easier to handle the light with two-cored carbons, but in my opinion the light is not as white, and as I have frequently said, the only excuse for using two-cored carbons is the lazy man's excuse, viz.: it's easier. What is said of the rounding off of the bottom carbon is, I think, right, and this is another one of the finer points concerning which the average operator has little or no knowledge. As to the multiple of small resistance units giving better results than the single high resistance unit, why I don't know, as I have never given that matter consideration. I would like to have the brother explain a little more in detail the reason for his statement that the multiple is better. I am inclined to think he is correct, but without giving the matter considerable thought I would not like to say just what constitutes my reasons for thinking so. I shall be glad indeed to hear from this correspondent again. Letters of this kind are welcome, whether I can agree with the propositions advanced or not. The points brought up are very practical ones, well calculated to stir up discussion, and through discussion that we usually learn something.

Amusing.

Recently I pointed the nose of my two-wheeler toward the mountains of Vermont, and through sunshine, rain, mud, wet sand, puddles of water, embryo lakes and various other difficulties negotiated 550 miles, about 150 of which were through the green mountains, incidentally climbing from Manchester, Vt., up to the top of Peru Mountain, and sliding down the other side. Half of the time Mr. Go-devil was sitting on his tail; the other half he was standing on his nose, but it was some ride, all right, all right, and, notwithstanding the difficulties, every minute of it was enjoyed.

In the course of events I stopped over night in Bennington, Vt., a place of much historic interest, and here visited the only theater thus favored on the entire trip, viz.: the Bennington Opera House. I was more than amused at the cavalier treatment accorded the editor. Some of the best managers in the United States, Australia, South Africa and even China have done this department the honor of consulting us with regard to matters pertaining to the projection in their houses. Presenting my card at the box office I asked for the manager. The lady coin gatherer very curtly informed me he was "in the house somewhere." Returning later, information was vouchsafed that the manager "was busy," so I bought tickets and went in. The house was fairly well filled; admission, 10 cents. I remained five or six minutes, during which time I saw a cold-blooded murder enacted on the screen, a man being shot down and falling dead in sight of the audience, followed immediately (this being the end of the film) by "Passed by the National Board of Censors." It was plain to be seen where decided improvement could be made in the projection of the picture, which was so poor that the lady with me herself suggested we leave. Passing out I made some remark to the woman in the box office, who apparently was the real manager, about the projection, whereupon her nose assumed an upward angle, and she said: "We don't care what you think," which is one way of talking to a patron who paid perfectly good money for admission to the theater. In three minutes I could have suggested changes well worth hundreds of dollars to that little theater, without it costing them anything at all for the advice and but little for the improvement, but of course one can't do good unless given the opportunity.

Pete and John.

Nashville, Tenn. (I cannot decipher the name of the correspondent) says:

> Will you kindly settle a dispute between Pete and John? Pete says vaseline in the cam does it harm and John says it does not, meaning, of course, a good grade of vaseline. Pete also says that carbons should be set jack knife. John told him he had better buy himself a Handbook and study up, and that he, John, had one and if he could not get another he would not take ten dollars for it.

With regard to vaseline as a lubricant for the geneva movement, the Enterprise Optical Company recommends, or at least did recommend, it for use in the oil well of their geneva. Personally, I have always regarded vaseline as rather a poor lubricant, and have never agreed with the Motiograph's recommendation. I prefer a good grade of oil. However, it cannot be said that vaseline does "harm." It simply is not as good a lubricant as good oil. Graphite in the geneva oil well does do harm, however.

Discussed.

New York City says:

> Recently a bunch of us discussed the projection department, and no fault was found with it, nor with the excellent work of its editor. In fact those of us who have the pleasure of knowing him personally, among them the writer, have found him to be a most friendly and sincere gentleman (Spare my maidenly blushes.—Ed.) and true friend to the operator. This morning I met a Brooklyn operator, who told me that, though you often wrote disparagingly of schools, claiming to teach moving picture operating, you yourself were teaching operators in such a school in 1910. Now I wish to ask whether or not this is true, and if you believe your scholars are good operators without serving a year as an apprentice?
> What can a fellow do if a non-inflammable film breaks and the cement on hand will not repair it, and no other cement can be had?

Yes, my brother, when I first came to New York City five and a half years ago, like every other mortal I had to earn my daily bread, and, being at that time comparatively unknown, landing a job was not as easy as it would be now. Mr. Taylor offered me a liberal sum to lecture one hour each day in his school. I had not, at that time, had any experience with operators' schools. Projection in New York City was simply vile. I thought that if it could be demonstrated that genuine instruction would be given, the New York operator would himself attend the school. I accepted Mr. Taylor's proposition, and lectured one hour each day in his school until I discovered that the operator did not attend, and came to the conclusion that the school proposition was not a good one. As soon as that decision was arrived at I quit. It was an error of judgment, and I hereby give permission to every operator who has never himself in all his life made a mistake to grab his hammer and get busy. However, I may say that some of my students then are now counted as among New York's best operators, though that was not true until they had acquired practical experience in addition to the grounding I gave them in theory.

As to the cement matter, why without any intent of handing you a bundle, I will say that under present conditions the careful operator will have a little non-inflammable cement on hand. If he has not, however, and he gets hold of a N. I. film he is in a pretty bad position, and I don't at the moment think of anything he can do, except if there was a sewing machine handy he could sew the film together, and if carefully done it would go through the machine after a fashion, too. My secretary looked at me with a haughty glare when I dictated that and remarked: "Who would have a sewing machine in an operating room?" Well, I guess that's right, but for the young lady's benefit I will say that a film is portable. Far be it from me to suggest that operating rooms be equipped with sewing machines. Seriously, if you have no N. I. cement I do not know of anything you could do which would be practical to do. You could add one part of glacial acetic acid to your ordinary cement, thus making N. I. out of it, but, like the sewing machine, the glacial acetic acid won't walk into the operating room under its own power, though you might be able to get it at a neighboring drug store.

A Matter for Argument.

William L. Hudson, Syracuse, New York, makes the following statements:

> During the last two years I have gleaned ideas of great value from the department. During this time I have invented and perfected a moving picture camera, and a projection machine, in which I have succeeded in eliminating many of the objectionable points contained in present machines. To know just what these troubles and objections were I went to the projection department, where every possible problem is presented for discussion. Take, for example, the question of flicker. I found, after exhaustive study and experiment, that flicker was due to a fixed law in optics, which law cannot be overcome. Flicker may, however, be reduced to a minimum by careful attention to local conditions. Speed, length of throw, current and exact width of shutter blades are factors which must subtract the time it takes for the shutter blade to pass from the common rotary shutter in this way: it opens and closes from the center, one curtain moves up from the center and the other down from the center. The speed is twice as fast as the ordinary shutter, and the distance traveled in opening and closing is one-half that of the shutter now in use, therefore I am able to add this gain to the interval of light. In other words the lens is covered and uncovered in half the time it takes to operate the standard shutter, from which we must subtract the time it takes for the shutter blade to pass from the bottom or top, or top to bottom of the lens. The result on the screen is very successful, and will reduce the flicker to the absolute minimum when cutting a narrow beam of light from a long focus lens. My shutter is rotary of course. My feed mechanism is a radical departure from the standard sprocket intermittent; it is absolutely positive and accurate. This point alone leads me to believe it is specially adapted to the projection of duplex film, where steadiness is of such exceedingly high importance if high class results are to be obtained on the screen. Operators who have seen my machine in operation have said that it produced the most steady picture of any projector made.
> The camera is designed on the same idea. It is small in size, being one of the lightest in weight. Am enclosing samples of film taken in some of my experiments. For a few months I shall be located in Syracuse, making a new model projecting machine designed for home and school use. Will be pleased at any time to have you look at the apparatus, see a demonstration of it, and to be favored with your criticism.
> Can you give me any information with regard to duplex film?

Friend Hudson started about things in the right way, but he didn't go far enough. From the projection department he gleaned certain facts with relation to the difficulties encountered, but evidently did not take much pains to find out what experiments had already been made in the endeavor to overcome these various troubles. With regard to the intermittent, I could not, of course, pass any manner of judgment without first having seen it, and studied its peculiarities. I will say, however, that modern mechanisms, if kept in condition, will produce a very steady picture, provided the film perforations are perfect—which is seldom the case. Possibly Brother Hudson has a big improvement in intermittents, but let me say it will be surprising if he has, because it seems to me almost everything imaginable has been already tried.

As to the shutter principle he describes, that sounds like the old Kinedrome shutter, which later, in another form, was used by the Motiograph, though these shutters ran at one revolution per picture, whereas, as I understand Hudson, his runs at two. The high speed, however, has been tried, witness the old model American Standard machine, and right now, one machine, the Baird, if I remember correctly, runs at one-half.

Well, Brother Hudson, I will be very glad indeed to examine your machine when an opportunity presents, but you are going up against a pretty difficult proposition when you alone undertake to produce a better machine than the combined efforts of trained men in the various moving picture machine factories are able to evolve. If you have succeeded in doing this you certainly are a wonder, but at that, if you have, this department will welcome you into the projection machine field with open arms. However, I lived for quite a time in that Grand Old State of Missouri, and with the most friendly feeling in the world I say you will have to show me. The film samples are very good, and the camera which took them must have points of excellence.

With regard to duplex film, why I have no specific information concerning it at present. If you will tell me exactly what you want to find out I will try and dig up the information.

Read This.

One or two correspondents have expressed doubt as to the benefit of operators sending in bad patches, mis-frames, etc., cut out of films. This idea seems to be held by those who misunderstood the proposition, and think I am going to take the matter up direct with the offending exchange. Nothing of the sort! In order to show how this matter is handled, and that we do get results, I will say that recently a Cedar Rapids, Iowa, manager sent in a piece of film containing a fault due to the printing machine. I forwarded the matter to the North American Film Corporation, New York City, under which the particular company at fault operated. With apologies to the North American Film Corporation, I print the following letter received from Mr. John R. Freuler, president:

> "This acknowledges receipt of yours of July 2nd, enclosing clipping which you sent from Cedar Rapids, Iowa. We agree with you that a little stirring up is positively needed in the Inspection Department of the producing factory. We are taking this matter up with the factory today, and calling their attention to the lack of proper inspection in a very forceful manner. No doubt when the party responsible for negligence of this kind is located, he will be a candidate for another job. We appreciate very much your calling our attention to this matter and forwarding the film clipping to us. Again thanking you, we wish to remain, Very truly yours,

So you see, gentlemen, it IS doing good. The complaints are not sent by me to the exchange—not at all. If I receive a complaint of poor inspection in, for instance, a General Film exchange, I send that complaint, together with the evidence, directly to the general manager of the General Film Company, New York City, and leave it to him to land on the offending exchange manager. That is what brings results, or at least ought to bring them, and has brought them already in some instances.

Head to Dry.

J. Reney, formerly a Winnipeg moving picture operator, but now an operator of a machine gun crank in that dear France, writes from some place that looks like in writing Hte Saane, saying:

"This is to remind you of a Winnipeg operator who is waiting for his patched head to dry before again taking his turn at the crank—of a gun this time. We have a continuous performance, open from August 2, 1914 to ??????? As a cure for nerves it can't be beat. Everybody is welcome. Step right up to the box office and get your enlistment. Plenty of excitement on the inside."

Brother Reney signs himself "J. Reney, convalescent." Well, I guess he finds shooting lead a little more exciting than shooting pictures, all right. We all hope that particular show will come to an early end. The projection certainly is rotten. I don't like it a little bit. There are shadows of death on the screen, and while the fire danger is not great in one way, it is very great in another.

A Sojer Man.

Harry T. Dobson, who, for some time, was a correspondent of the department, writes from Niagara Military Camp, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario, as follows:

> This is to let you know I am still alive; also able to read the World, which, by-the-way, I have sent to me here. Have quit operating. Am now a member of the 31st Battery, Canadian Field Artillery, and am in training here. This is one of the biggest concentration camps in Canada. We have some town. They take in the sidewalks at 9 P. M. There is one permanent show here, "Oh, so rotten"; also worse luck it is operated by a member of (deleted by censor). Also a black tent show which is good. R. L. Shank, a member of 173, is the operator. The Y. M. C. A. also runs two reels of junk at night; though it is junk its projection is pretty good; William Ayers of 173 is in charge. The main show has a Six A Power's, cranked; the tent show a 1910 Motiograph, and the Y. M. C. A. a Powers six head and a Six lamp. Current is 25 cycle, 110 volts and all the wires are No. 10, so you see what the men are up against. Suppose you would not mind a few pictures of camp life. Well, I will send them soon.

So Neighbor Dobson has quit operating to go out and get shot, maybe (let us hope not), in the cause of well, hold on! What in thunder is the cause any how? Really I don't believe I know what it's all about, and come to think of it, nobody else does either, so far as I know. Yes, Brother Dobson, I would be glad to have any photographs you feel like sending, and I trust that when you get to twisting the crank of a machine gun your projection will be absolutely punk; in fact, I hope you don't hit the screen at all, because I have an ingrowing prejudice against killing folks. It is the old strong-arm method, which we condemn in the union but praise in the nation. War is an advertisement of the fact that our Christianity is only a thin veneer; that the Golden Rule is a joke, and that our civilization is, after all, but one peg removed from savagery. Now, don't get the idea from the above that I am criticising Brother Dobson for enlisting. I am not. They are all doing it. It is the fashion.

> "The holy spirit guides aloft the shrieking shot and shell
> And Christian people shout with joy at thousands blown to hell."

Good Scheme.

C. A. Dann, Toronto, Canada, says:

> I am keeping a file of the department, and making a card index for the various subjects discussed therein. I give each page a number. The first page of the first number of the department I have on file being 1, the second 2 and so on. Then every separate article in each issue of the department I letter, beginning with "Manufacturers' Notice," "A," next article, "B," and so on. I then make out my index thus. By this means can quickly refer to the various articles on any particular subject.

This strikes me as being what our good friend, the Englishman, would pronounce "a bally good scheme, Old Top, doncher know." Referring to the card, 153 J would mean that assembling field coils of a motor generator is dealt with on page 153 of his file, article J; but it must be clearly understood that, while the pages of the file are numbered consecutively, the individual pages of each department issue begin A, B, C.

Wants the Best.

A. Lemmert, Cocoa, Florida, says:

> All I know about the picture business I owe to you. I noticed in a recent issue that you thought, but were not sure that stippling the alabastine before it dried might be beneficial. I find this hard to do on muslin stretched on a frame. If it were a plaster wall, or muslin stretched over a board wall, it might be accomplished. I notice the artist paints his picture on rough canvas. Now I would like to know what you think of the idea of taking very rough canvas, coarse grained, leaving the grain show after painting. I have a fine picture, as it is, on alabastine with a black border; but if any improvement can be made by rough grain instead of smooth I want to make it. What is your opinion? I am anxious for that lens dope you are getting out. This is a small town, but we want the best.

Well, Brother Lemmert, I am not at all certain about this stippling business on alabastine. Since printing that matter I have been going into the screen proposition considerable, and I am inclined to think there is nothing in that particular proposition. However, the only way to determine the matter would be by actual test, but if you have a good alabastine screen I guess I would let it stand. I don't believe there would be sufficient improvement by substituting rough canvas to make it worth while. You might, however, take a good, clean piece of gunny sacking, as large as you can get hold of, stretch it tightly on a frame, and coat it. Having done this, hang it on your present screen, project a picture, and view it from all angles. If you can get a fairly good sized piece of sacking the experiment ought to be pretty conclusive, and it won't cost you much of anything either, but some work, to do it. At the end of your letter you say: "Thanks for the many past favors. May you live forever." Now, look here, Neighbor Lemmert, forever is quite a spell, and I imagine after a couple of hundred years I would not be able to enjoy my go-devil, and then, too, I might be bald-headed by that time, and I don't want to be bald-headed. Taking these facts into consideration, I trust you will let me pass into the Great Beyond after I have fulfilled the allotted three score and ten and maybe a few more.

Light (Continued).

LET US now take the points of illumination, as in Fig. 23, with one of the points focused sharply. If now we interpose a piece of black cardboard, in which a small round hole has been cut, close to the lens so that this hole is near the center of the lens, we find that the brightness of the images is much decreased but that the image of the point which was out of focus is now much sharper. Let us refer again to our Fig. 23. Our images are not nearly so brilliant because much of the light which formerly came through the lens has been cut off by the piece of black cardboard; but as the cardboard has narrowed down the angle at which the light ray takes from the lens to the focal plane, we have narrowed down, or made smaller, our circle of confusion.

Up to this point we have only considered light as it emanates from a point, but now we are ready to consider any object which may be reproduced by a lens as an image. In photography, practically all images that we have to consider are delineated or formed in one plane; that is, either upon the flat surface of a photographic plate or upon a film stretched flat or upon a piece of photographic paper, as in a photograph, or upon a screen in a moving picture theater, so that no matter by what means we produce a photographic image it is practically always done upon a flat surface. Let us for the purpose of our analysis, consider any object or any image as being composed of a collection of a vast number of small points of different degrees of illumination, placed beside each other forming an infinitely fine mosaic which delineates the object or image which we have under consideration. To make this point clearer, inspect very closely with the naked eye, or better still, with a small magnifying glass, any half-tone cut in this or any other magazine or paper and you will see that the entire picture is formed by small dots of varying sizes which make up the picture. In the same manner we may consider any object or image as consisting of an infinite number of small points not necessarily arranged in mechanical order as in a half-tone cut. This mechanical sequence in a half-tone is merely a method of surmounting certain mechanical difficulties in photo-mechanical reproduction, the sizes of the dots representing the intensity of illumination of that particular portion of the picture which it represents.

There are many other processes, of photogravure too complicated for ordinary magazine production in which the dots are arranged in irregular order or in which the light intensity is registered by other means, such as the Mosstype, the Albertype and various photogelatine and lithographic processes.

We have alreary seen that all objects reflect a certain percentage of light. If by means of a lens we can focus the luminous points which delineate an object upon a flat surface, we must necessarily obtain an image of that object upon the focal plane, as in Fig. 24.

This image is always reversed and inverted; that is, like a mirror reflection turned upside down. By again referring to Fig. 24 we see the reason for this. All of the light rays emanating from A on the arrow, which strike the lens Y, are condensed and brought to a focus at the point a in the image. Likewise, all of the rays which strike the lens from the point B are focused at the point b in the image; in a like manner all of the other points on the surface of the arrow are delineated on the screen without rendering the diagram too complicated by trying to reproduce the path of the light rays from all of the other points on the arrow. We see that we have an inverted image of the arrow. If we move the screen a small distance in either direction from the focal plane the image becomes blurred and indistinct, since our points of illumination then become overlapping circles of confusion, as in Fig. 25. The image ab in Fig. 24 is termed an actual virtual image, because it may be focused upon a screen and to distinguish it from certain other images which we will consider later, which cannot be focused upon a screen and which are termed imaginary images. This image may be again focused by another lens which again inverts the image, as in Fig. 26.

Interesting Booklet on Camera Attachments.

A booklet describing special lens mounts and attachments for motion picture cameras has been published for free distribution to cinematographers by the C. P. Goerz American Optical Company, 317 East 34th Street, New York. Several types of accurate micrometer focusing mounts are illustrated allowing adjustment as fine as .005 inch. One type of these mounts allows a quick interchange of different lenses of varying focal length making it possible to take close ups with a long focus lens without having to move the camera position, it being possible to make the change quicker than it would be possible to move the camera up and readjust its level. Following the lens mounts are shown dissolving and vignetting shutters, square and round closing dissolvers lens hoods, double exposure boxes, double exposure and curtain fade out devices and lines of special alteration and design changes in cameras which may be done in their especially equipped shops.

The writer has used a number of different lens and mounts manufactured by this firm and has always found its products to be of the highest quality.

Some of these special double exposure and dissolving devices will be more extensively described in a later number.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

CARTOONS IN A LAUNDRY (Edison), July 14.—Gladys Leslie, Yale Benner and T. Tamamoto are the human actors in this one-reel comedy, which cleverly introduces three of Raol Barre's "Grouch Chasers." "Kelly's Kid Kabaret" and "The Suburbanite" are equal to the best animated cartoons drawn by this gifted artist.

FOR HER BROTHER'S SAKE (Kalem), July 16.—This Carlyle Blackwell and Alice Joyce re-issue merits such a distinction. A story of the California mines, the plot is dramatic, the scenes picturesque, and the acting excellent.

THE CHADFORD DIAMONDS (Biograph), July 19.—A one-reel crook drama, in which Augusta Anderson and Charles Perley play a pair of genteel thieves. The plot is quite clever, the crooks being tricked of their plunder at the finish.

A BAG OF GOLD (Essanay), July 19.—An uncommonly compacted little drama is told in this one-reel photoplay. The plot is founded on real life. Sydney Ainsworth, Jack Meredith, and Beverly Bayne, make all the points.

THE DISCONTENTED MAN (Lubin), July 19.—Produced by the Lubin western company, this one-reel drama offers lifelike scenes of mining life, an interesting story, and is well acted by Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett, L. C. Shumway, and others.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 57, 1915 (Selig), July 19, 1915.—Aquatic sports on the Charles River, leads the list. Other events include: Novel Fourth of July celebration, El Centra, Cal.; arrival of chimpanzee, New York; railroad accident, Rainer, Wash.; motorcycle race, Saratoga; new oilwell, McKeesport, Pa.; life savers, Chicago; first bale of 1915 cotton, Houston, Tex.; war pictures; Ida Elionsky swimming Hell Gate; scenes at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; head-on collision at Emeryville, Cal.

THE HIGHWAYMAN (Vitagraph), July 19.—A one-reel comedy, by Hal Reid, which permits Wally Van to prance through a series of fairly comic situations in his usual happy-go-lucky manner. He downs the villain and gets the girl, of course! Nitra Frazer, Billy Bletcher, and Hughie Mack, also take part in the proceedings.

A DAUGHTER OF EARTH (Biograph), July 20.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 317, issue of July 19.

THE SPOOK RAISERS (Kalem), July 20.—Another promising scheme for "raising the coin" goes wrong in this one-reel "Ham" and "Bud." They take to spook raising, but a big policeman takes a hand in the seance, and the two fakers take to their heels. Up to the "Ham" and "Bud" average.

A NEW WAY TO WIN (Lubin), July 20.—Another object lesson in the eternal truth that the road to a man's heart is through his stomach. This half-reel farce, written by Epes W. Sargent, has for its characters that famous comic triangle, a man, his wife, and wifie's mother. The plot follows familiarly amusing complications, the Lubin colored contingent being fairly successful with the acting.

A BARNYARD MIXUP (Lubin), July 20.—A Vincent Whitman cartoon comedy, this half-reel comic is on the same reel with "A New Way to Win." A shotgun, a farmer, a chicken thief, and a goat, do most amazing stunts. It will please children of all ages.

THE FOREMAN OF BAR Z RANCH (Selig), July 20.—Tom Mix and his western companions give a spirited performance of this one-reel drama. It is a bit of real romance, with the hero's life in danger, and a happy ending. A breezy photoplay.

THE LORELEI MADONNA (Vitagraph), July 20.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 319 issue of July 10.

THE FABLE OF "THE HOME TREATMENT AND THE SURE CURE" (Essanay), July 21.—Another of George Ade's sermons in little, this one-reel comedy, with its pithy inserts, has wit, humor, and a most impressive moral. Chas. J. Stine, Frankie Raymond, Albert Martin and "Pretty Peggy" Sweeny, make up the competent cast.

AT THE FLOOD TIDE (Selig), July 21.—A grim one-reel drama, acted by an excellent cast, and showing a number of beautiful scenes along the seashore. The story is human and sympathetic, the death of the half-witted fisherman being handled skillfully.

FOLLOWING THE SCENT (Vitagraph), July 21.—Fred H. James has furnished Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew with a neat one-reel vehicle for the display of their ability in refined comedy. The material is not particularly novel, but the Drews make it vastly entertaining. Bobby Connelly and his wink are also in the picture.

ON THE JOB (MinA), July 22.—The comic activity of George Ovey and the resourceful brain of the producer have made this one-reel farce seem novel as well as funny. The opening and the finish are both especially clever.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 58, 1915 (Selig), July 22.—Harry Thaw and the Thaw jury appear to be the most interesting news item of this number. Life saving test from Steamer Roosevelt in Lake Michigan; silver fox ranch, Holbrook, Mass.; flag raising in honor of Chicago White Soxs, and presentation of silver cup to pitcher Ed. Walsh; flood at Lowell, Mass.; on the battle line with the Serbs, near Petka; on the firing line in France, with the Germans; National Guardsmen building bridge, New York; photographing stone quarry, Rockland, Maine; and the Cunarder Orduna in New York harbor, finish the list.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF TOWSER (Vitagraph), July 22.—The use of an undertaker and three coffins, in this one-reel comedy, indicates that the author, William McLeod Raine, believes in original methods of creating laughs. He achieves his purpose, however, and a double wedding at the finish proves that Cupid sometimes employs strange emissaries. The cast and producing are excellent.

MAN'S GENESIS (Biograph)—Re-issue No. 7—July 23.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 2110 issue of June 26.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE POSSE (Essanay), July 23.—A number of novel situations and a pair of uncommonly bright youngsters make this one-reel drama worth while, aside from the opportunities it offers G. M. Anderson to play the good fairy to the children and their father. The climax is very effective.

HER IDOL (Lubin), July 23.—A one-reel adaptation of a western story by Virgie E. Roe, this photoplay has the benefit of a good cast, headed by Justina Huff and John Smiley. The theme is interesting, and Joseph Smiley has used excellent judgment in transferring it to the film.

MR. BIXBIE'S DILEMMA (Vitagraph), July 23.—This one-reel comedy starts with a snap and keeps everyone in it moving at a lively rate. William Shea gives a highly humorous performance of a gentleman who is locked out on the front steps, in his pajamas.

HIS CRIMINAL CAREER (Biograph), July 24.—In this one-reel drama, Charles Perley impersonates a gentleman who passes himself off as a criminal, on a bet, and narrowly escapes getting into serious difficulty. The reel is fairly entertaining. Augusta Anderson, Wm. J. Butler and Robert Nolan are also in the cast.

THE SECRET OF THE CELLAR (Edison), July 24.—Another contribution to the long line of "crook" dramas, this one-reel photoplay contains considerable new material and is adroitly put together. Sally Crute, Robert Kegerreis, Curtis Cooksey, Arthur Housman and Julian Reed are intelligently cast.

THE GIRL ON THE ENGINE (Episode No. 37 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 24.—One of these days the railroad company that employs Helen, will undoubtedly, make the young lady a suitable reward for the risks she has taken in the company's behalf. In the meantime, she goes right along risking her life, with a smile on her face. Her record suffers no loss in the present number.

WHEN WIFIE SLEEPS (Lubin), July 24.—Atlantic City is the scene of Billie Reeves' adventures, in this one-reel comedy. Billie and two pretty girls try all the amusement devices at the resort, and a lot of clean fun is the result.

THE HEART OF PADRO (Selig), July 24.—A very good plot and excellent acting by the entire cast make this one-reel drama a capital addition to the Jungle-Zoo offerings.

General Film Company Specials.

THE CROOKED PATH (Kalem), July 19.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 319, issue of July 10.

THE SHADOW AND THE SHADE (Selig), July 19.—Ellis Parker Butler, the author of this two-reel drama, has utilized considerable new material in constructing his story. The development is a trifle slow, but the novelty of the incidents prevents any loss of interest. The producing, and the acting of Lamar Johnstone, Stella Razato, and the rest of the cast, meet every demand.

JABEZ'S CONQUEST (Episode No. 3 of "The Adventures of Dominica") (Essanay), July 20.—An American, Jabez Slocum, is the hero of this two-reel instalment. Braga and Dominica try to rob him, but fail at their rather clever scheme. The picture is not a strong one, but has a respectable amount of entertaining qualities. Sheldon Lewis, Nell Craig, Ben Hendricks, Jr., and Jack Meredith, make the most of their opportunities.

UNDER TWO FLAGS (Biograph), July 21.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 78, issue of July 3.

THE STRANGLER'S CORD (Episode No. 1 of "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel") (Kalem), July 21.—The sensational incidents in this two-reel drama set a pace which the other numbers of the series will find it difficult to follow. The story is sheer melodrama, well acted by William H. West, Thomas Lingham, Ollie Kirkby, Marin Sais, and Charles Cummings. The production is artistic, the lobby of the Grand Hotel being especially elaborate.

WHEN THE LIGHT CAME IN (Lubin), July 21.—This two-reel drama, adapted from the story of Mildred Goodall, belongs to the best class of photoplays. The plot is out of the common and rings true, its strain being a sombre one. Ethel Clayton, Justina Huff, Joseph Kaufman, and Jack McCloskey, give it full acting value. Mr. Kaufman's production is up to his usual high standard.

DESTINY'S SKEIN (Lubin), July 22.—George W. Terwilliger's work as writer and producer of this three-reel drama has resulted in a photoplay of considerable merit. The material is not at all novel, but has been put together with skill and given a careful production. Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Kempton Greene, and Hazel Hubbard, comprise an adequate cast.

MOTHERHOOD (Selig), July 22.—If the author of this three-reel drama had shown greater familiarity with the laws of dramatic construction, his photoplay would have been much more impressive. His theme is a big one—big in human interest; but, it is hurt by the introduction of a number of conventional "stage" situations. A powerful play might have been made out of what is now merely a fairly entertaining melodrama. The acting of Bessie Eyton, Edward J. Peil, and the rest of the cast is earnest. The filming has been thoroughly well done.

ON DANGEROUS PATHS (Edison), July 23.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 320, issue of July 10.

IN DOUBLE HARNESS (Kalem), July 23.—The keynote of this two-reel comedy is the good taste displayed by the producer. The plot is slight, a young couple marry, go on their honeymoon and return home. This is told so truthfully and pleasantly, and the people introduced are such genuine specimens of well-bred, right-minded Americans, that a half hour spent in their company is an absolute delight. Tom Moore and Marguerite Courtot make a handsome bridal pair. Mr. Moore's production of the comedy is another feather in his cap.

THE SKY HUNTERS (Essanay), July 24.—Wm. Anthony McGuire, the author of this three-reel drama, has gone into the wilds for a bag of romance and brought home the game. The story will serve to entertain, if not convince, the picturesque scenes in the mountains being a great addition to the film. Edna Mayo makes a handsome boy, and Bryant Washburn and the other members of the cast do justice to their characters.

A PAIR OF QUEENS (Vitagraph), July 24.—William Addison Lathrop's two-reel comedy is a modern example of the clever satires that Ned Harrigan used to write on the life of New York City. The characters are but slightly exaggerated, and their doings are highly humorous. Flora Finch, Kate Price, William Shea and Hughie Mack deserve the claim made for them in this picture—the big comedy four.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

MARSE COVINGTON (Rolfe), July 12.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 832, issue of July 31.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SAFETY FIRST (Komic), July 25.—An exceptionally amusing farce comedy with a cast consisting of Fay Tincher, Max Davidson, Chester Withey, Frank Darien, Bobby Fuehrer, and Porter Strong. The story hinges around a conspiracy to rob a safe, and a successful and highly amusing attempt of a detective to trap the theives. The safe in which the money is stored is taken out of the window and lowered with the detective inside of it. Then an attempt is made to blow the safe up, ending disastrously for those without.

HER FAIRY PRINCE (Reliance), July 26.—An interesting picture in which a little girl (Violet Wilkey) mistakes an escaped convict for a Fairy Prince. In the end the unfortunate man becomes truly the Fairy Prince of the little girl, rescuing her father from being killed by an unscrupulous attorney, who was previously the cause of the young man's unjust conviction. The picture is especially interesting to children.

BETTY'S FIRST SPONGE CAKE (Beauty), July 27.—This comedy which is presented as legitimate comedy is rather too uncertain as to the probability of its situations. For instance, there is hardly a young woman living who would not know better than to add ordinary sponges in the making of a sponge cake. The idea is also not a little disgusting.

THE STRAW MAN (Majestic), July 27.—A child story in which a convict (Augustus Carney) escaped from prison dons the clothes and straw trimmings of a scarecrow, also mimicking its pose in hopes of eluding his pursuers. Some children in their play wind a rope about the scarecrow and as the man is unable to balance himself longer, falls, they run frightened away and carry the strange news to the farmer. The result is that the convict is again placed in the hands of the prison guards. A touch of pathos is added through some side play between the child Georgie and the convict.

THE DECEPTION (American), July 28.—Winnifred Greenwood, Edward Coxen, George Field, and John Steppling constitute the cast of this prettily produced picture. The story is of two young people who repaired to the mountains for much the same purpose, to get away from trouble. They meet accidentally, fall in love and marry, each in the belief that the other was born and bred in the mountains. The arrival of a mutual acquaintance on the scene is the first intimation that either has of the deception, which is taken in a happy spirit by both.

BILLIE'S RESCUE (Reliance), July 28.—This is an attractive and interesting comedy-drama, in which a little boy is unconsciously instrumental in bringing family affairs to rights. Through a ruse worked by his Uncle to make him believe he (the boy), is rescuing him from drowning at the bathing beach, an opening is made whereby the Uncle is able to bring about a reconciliation between himself and Billie's father, who is in financial trouble, thereby saving a serious situation.

GETTING THE GARDENER'S GOAT (Falstaff), July 30.—This intended comedy is not altogether satisfactory. A number of childish tricks are played by the gardener on an unwelcome suitor of the daughter of the house.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE PRETENDER (Reliance), July 24.—This two-reel production includes in its cast Elsie de Wolfe, Felix Modjeska, George Walsh, and Vester Perry. It is of moderate interest, and tells the story of a plan to impersonate the son of a wealthy man, who is on his way to take possession of a fortune left to him by his father. The conditions of the will make it necessary for the son and the ward of the deceased to marry in order to obtain the fortune, all of which makes the path of the pretender doubly interesting.

FATTY'S TINTYPE TANGLE (Keystone), July 26.—A two-reel farce comedy with Roscoe Arbuckle and others of the inimitable Keystone stock company. This production is a scream from first to last, is almost free from any taint of vulgarity, and can be highly recommended where a laugh is wanted.

TANGLED PATHS (Majestic), July 25.—There is considerable interest attached to this film, which is in two reels. Francelia Billington plays the feminine lead, and it may be said that she is especially charming in the role of Nell Summers. The story is of two rival suitors, and pals who go to the gold fields, the one knowing that the girl loves him. When the lucky strike is made the preferred suitor is shot in the back by the other, and left for dead. The remainder of the story is taken up with untangling tangled threads. Sam De Grasse, and Alfred Paget are the suitors.

THE NEWER WAY (American), July 26.—This film, although it appears to be more or less of an advertisement for electrical contrivances of all kinds, is at the same time a lesson for the farmer who may be lacking in the spirit of enterprise. It shows how a stone quarry was made to pay for the placing of electrical contrivances in every department of the farm, thereby establishing more sanitary methods of dairying, etc.

MILESTONES OF LIFE (Thanhouser), July 29.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 834, issue of July 31.

THE GOLDEN TRAIL (Broncho), August 4.—A two-reel story, featuring Richard Stanton, Louise Glaum and Margaret Gibson. This follows the fortunes of Johnny, a young boxer who is knocked out and deserted by a girl. He goes West, defends an old prospector and gets in on a good mining proposition. Both the bar room fight and the defense of the mine are well-staged. He falls in love with the prospector's daughter and wins her hand. The plot material is familiar, but the story is nevertheless quite pleasing.

THE PROMOTERS (Domino), August 5.—A two-reel number, dealing with the unique revenge of the hero on a mining shark who swindled an honest farmer. He lowers him into an abandoned mine and forces him to take up the worthless stock before releasing him. Walter Edwards, Elizabeth Burbridge, Louis J. Cody and others appear. The opening scenes in which the farmer is swindled are very natural and convincing. The story is entertaining and has a certain educational value for people who are inclined to plunge into reckless investments.

THE HEART OF JABEZ FLINT (Kaybee), August 6.—In this two-reel number an old theme is made very pleasing. It demonstrates the way in which a mean old skinflint is finally brought to see the error of his ways and he proceeds to spread his money about where it will do the most good. The miser, the old minister, the widow and other characters of the homely type are well presented. The story has quite a strong touch of heart interest and succeeds very well for this sort of a story.

North American Film Corporation.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY, CHAPTER 13 (American), July 26.—"An Interrupted Journey" is the title of this chapter of this excellent serial. Quabba, in an attempt to reach the coast in search of Arthur, at the request of Esther, is knocked over by a street car. The chapter contains more than one thrilling situation, and falls nothing short of being quite as interesting as previous chapters.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE FIGHTING HOPE (Lasky-Belasco), July 19.—Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 834, issue of July 31.

KILMENY (Morosco), July 22.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 835, issue of July 31.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

PATHE'S NEWS NO. 56, 1914 (Pathe), July 14.—One of the most interesting items of this number shows the Women's Canteen Society of England supplying the women of the munition factories with good food at cheap prices. The Southampton dog show, and the Caldwell, N. J. Historical pageant are also interesting items.

INTIMATE STUDY OF BIRDS NO. 3 (Pathe), July 19.—The black bird, the kingfisher, the thrush, and the sedge warbler are given prominence in this instalment of "Intimate Study of Birds." Needless to say, this series of studies on bird life is intensely interesting and instructive.

THE POLICE DOG GETS PIFFLES IN BAD (Pathe), July 19.—This is an excellent number of the Police Dog series and is the 6th episode. The dog and his friend Piffles get some rough treatment at the hands of a colored butcher who has been supplying the dog with bones which are repeatedly stolen from him by another of his kind

THE KANGAROO AT HOME (Globe), August 2.—An unusually interesting educational film showing the kangaroo in his various moods and haunts, and a few of his troubles. On the same reel with "Pekalongen, a Town in Java."

IN PEKALONGEN, A TOWN IN JAVA (Picturesque-Java), Aug. 2.—On the same reel with the above and showing instructive and interesting views in and about this quaint town.

BOLD, BAD BOYS (Starlight), August 7.—The theme of this comedy is not much different from the majority of Starlight films. The woman with a husband who does not appear on the scene until the end is the tool for many of the amusing situations of the comedy.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE, Episode 29 (Pathe), July 12.—"The Conspirators" is the title of this chapter in "The Romance of Elaine." Elaine is again met by the disturbing experience of being kidnapped and taken aboard a vessel from which she eventually escapes and is rescued by Jamieson. The "Romance" still hangs fire, and the interest of the story abates but little if any.

IN THE MESH OF THE NET (Balboa), July 17.—A three-part production in which the story deals with the adventures of a wife with a band of smugglers with which her husband is associated. The story is well constructed and interesting, and the picture is developed with considerable skill. Gordon Sackville and Joyce Moore are among the members of the cast. The production is a good one and to be recommended for its entertaining qualities.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE, Episode No. 30 (Pathe), July 19.—"The Wireless Detective" is the title of this episode, in which pretty Elaine dons male attire to good effect in her effort to solve some of the mysteries surrounding the wireless station. The episode is a good one and has a sprinkling of comedy along with its graver significance.

PRO PATRIA (Pathecolor), July 31.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 835, issue of July 31.

WHIFFLES AT THE FRONT (Punch), August 2.—This is a two-part comedy made at the Paris studios of the Pathe Freres. M. Prince acquits himself in a most comic way as Whiffles, who, in pursuit of a fascinating nurse, makes a desperate effort to stay at the front at any cost. The offering is one that any audience would like.

THE RIGHTED WRONG (Victory), August 7.—An interesting three-part drama in which a stolen will is the basis for most of the action of the play. The plot is a fairly good one, and the development of the theme in the picture, with an excellent cast handling the principal roles, is all that could be desired. The picture has been set artistcially, and is beautifully photographed.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 176 (Universal), July 21.—The Thaw jury, Harry Thaw and a mob of his cheering admirers, probably make up the most popular subject on the reel. Opening of the free swimming baths at New York; a head-on collision between two locomotives, and the unveiling of the Lincoln Shaft at Long Beach, Cal., are among other news items on the film.

PATERNAL LOVE (Laemmle), August 1.—This story, by Wm. Wolbert and Frank Lloyd, features M. K. Wilson, Gretchen Lederer and Marc Robbins. It is the story of a convict who comes to rob the home of his former wife, now married to a wealthy man. He finds his own child and they arrive on the scene as he is embracing her. The plot is not very new, but it is handled with good effect. The cast and photography are also pleasing.

IT HAPPENED WHILE HE FISHED (Nestor), August 2.—A comedy number, written by Peter B. Kyne, with Jack Dillon, Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes and Jane Waller in the cast. The fishing scenes are very attractive. The plot itself seemed rather "sketchy" and not very well put together, though it has elements of interest.

HER WONDERFUL DAY (Imp), August 3.—Frances Nelson and Jack Hopkins are featured in this little pictorial sketch by B. D. Garber. The romantic girl is entertained for a day by a wealthy young man. Her innocence saves her from harm. Just a pleasing little offering; the flower scenes are attractive.

THE PROOF (Rex), August 3.—Featuring Ben Wilson as a young club man who agrees to rob a house on a wager. His friends steer him up against an insane asylum and he steals the young nurse after some exciting adventures. The plot is not strong, but unusual and quite pleasing.

IN THE CLAW OF THE LAW (L. K. O.), August 4.—Fatty Voss, Peggy Pearce, Alice Howell and Harry Gribbon appear in this characteristic number. The plot is not strong and the humor is only fair. The settings and photography are better than usual.

LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK IN "SAVED BY A SCENT" (Powers), August 5.—No. 6 of the Lady Baffles and Detective Duck series. A typical number, introducing the "smellograph," a device for detecting criminals. Lady Baffles palms off her hireling as a lord, but Detective Duck saves the girl from him. A very fair low comedy number.

LITTLE EGYPT MALONE (Nestor), August 6.—Eddie and Lee are just out of college and have no money to get home with. They acquire a tent show and Lee impersonates an Egyptian dancer. The plot is light but the comedy is quite pleasing.

AROUND THE CORNER (Powers), August 7.—A comedy drama in which Sydney Ayres appears as an author in search of adventure. He befriends a young girl, the victim of a fake marriage, whom he takes to his apartments. Later he falls in love with her. The plot is not entirely new, but is well constructed and worth while.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

JEALOUSY, WHAT ART THOU? (Rex), August 1.—Two reels of a light comedy nature, featuring Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips as a pair of jealous lovers. Every incident is magnified in their eyes to feed the green eyed monster. While there is not a great deal of plot, the action is brisk and entertaining. Their troubles come to a climax at the masked ball, where both create scenes by suspecting the wrong people. After the unmasking all is made right.

THE SCARLET SIN (Broadway-Universal Features), August 2.—A strong subject in four reels, by Ada P. Clarke, featuring Hobart Bosworth, Jane Novak, Frank Elliott, Grace Thompson and others. Mr. Bosworth plays the role of a minister who leaves a city congregation to take up preaching in a mining district. His wife is untrue to him and runs away with a former neighbor. Later she returns, like a female Enoch Arden, to find her husband married to another; she dies saving their child from fire. The story has a full plot, is compactly built and stirs both the mind and heart of the observer. All of the acting is sincere and convincing. The scenes at the mine explosion are well handled. A good feature number.

THE GREAT RUBY MYSTERY (Gold Seal), August 3.—A two-reel number, written and produced by Otis Turner, and featuring Herbert Rawlinson, Wm. Worthington, Anna Little and others. The chief character is Sanford Quest, who figured in The Black Box series. He traces a valuable ruby, stolen by a German spy. The construction and plot are good and there is a surprise ending. This makes a pleasing mystery story.

MY TOMBOY GIRL (Victor), August 4.—A two-reel girls' school story, produced by Harry C. Myers. He appears, also Rosemary Theby and Charles Craig. The mischievous antics of the girl pupils are very funny. The pajama parade in the second reel is a little too frank in treatment; it is not exactly vulgar, but comes near being. On the whole the production will pass with audiences that are not overly particular.

OUT OF THE FLAMES (Big U), August 5.—A two-reel number by F. McGrew Willis, featuring Adele Lane, Edward Sloman and others. This is a story of a factory fire. The daughter of the former owner is employed in the place and barely escapes with her life. The opening scenes are rather complicated and it is not entirely clear whether the young husband is the right sort of not; later he turns out to be worthy of his wife. The fire episode is very realistic—one of the best of the kind seen in a long while. The number is not particularly new but has points of decided interest.

LEAH, THE FORSAKEN (Imp), August 6.—A three-reel number featuring Vivian Prescott, Wm. E. Shay, Wm. E. Welch, Frank Smith and Grace Lewis. This is a reissue of a story of Jewish persecution, some of the actors being of Yiddish descent. The place and settings are a trifle uncertain, but the period was probably in the early days of Manhattan. The plot is a strong one of its type, depicting the pathetic plight of a Jewish girl abandoned by her gentile lover as the result of the treacherous interference of one of her own race. The close, when Leah blesses her former lover and his family, has a pathetic touch.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES (Universal Special), August 2 (No. 7 of "The Broken Coin" series, in two reels).—After a scene with the owner of the mysterious hand, Kitty is made a prisoner and thrust into a dungeon beneath the palace. She evinces no fear of her jailor, but, true to her sex, shows a positive objection to the rats. The dramatic and the comedy elements are skilfully blended in this number, and the finish leaves the spectator anxious for the next installment.

POKES AND JABS in "Mashers and Smashers" (World Comedy-Wizard), Aug. 2.—A one-reel farce played at a lively clip and entertaining enough after its fashion. Mr. Pokes and Mr. Jabbs steal away from their wives for a swim in the pool at Palisades Park. Girls in attractive bathing suits and high diving are among the attractions of the picture.

Emily Stevens in "Destiny."

"Destiny" is the title of a new play, by Anthony P. Kelly, secured for the Metro program. The B. A. Rolfe Company will make the screen production. Emily Stevens will be seen in the leading role. This production will mark her second appearance under Metro auspices. Her last engagement was in the Rolfe production of "Cora." "Destiny" will be a Metro release for September.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

DESPITE the fact that many people are predicting that motion pictures have reached the zenith of success we find new companies forming almost daily for their production with a million or more capital. There must be something in it. Men with capital may be duped at times, but men with capital have some brains (at least some of them), and all of them cannot be duped all the time. Everything points to the motion picture as the magnet for investment in the amusement world, which naturally means that the pictures are the chief form of modern amusement.

The advancement made in recent years in the filming of stories told by writers who a few years ago completely ignored the pictures, has won a wide-spread attention which will not die out within a time that can be scaled. The people are only beginning to realize what lies beyond the screen. It is not the projection from the machine that now absorbs, what was a flash of fiction is really a projection of truth dug out by days and weeks of hard work by the directors and performers at the expense of a deal of money expended by the promoters. The public is at last beginning to realize that, after all, it takes the same amount of money, if not more, to properly place a story upon the screen as it does to accomplish the same purpose upon the stage. This realization accounts for the readiness of the public to pay today for motion pictures what they formerly paid for regular stage productions.

* * *

The only hold-back to a complete victory of the motion picture is the ever-present thought on the part of a certain percentage of audiences that because of the absence of speaking parts motion picture work is mere play. Throughout histrionic history there has been no time when applicants have not worried managers in person or by letter for an opportunity to show their ability. So it is with motion pictures, only the applicants have multiplied. In former days the speaking of lines was a detriment to many who would persecute a manager. As lines are not required in motion pictures the belief in an in-born talent has become so strong that everybody out of school and out of work feels that the art is becoming bankrupt for want of their talent. Note the Charlie Chaplins that are appearing at some of the theaters. Note the expressions on the faces of some of the houses when we say that good pictures would serve a better purpose than this system of Bowery amateur nights.

It is no credit to managers who ridicule motion pictures as an excuse for not spending a reasonable price for a good service of them in face of the fact that they dupe innocent and irresponsible people to give idiotic representations of what appears in the pictures. So far as the pictures are concerned imitation is endorsement and each repetition makes the picture a stronger attraction.

I heard a representative man say yesterday that at this time of the year he should have had orders on hand for paper covering thirty shows, yet his orders in hand only cover ten shows.

Coincident with this is the fact that regulars are going out to nearby cities and towns to play parts on trial, their remuneration being slightly above the railroad and hotel expenses, the expectations being season contracts. If the plays "go on the dogs" the player gets his contract with the usual two weeks' clause.

* * *

Was there ever a beter outlook for the "canned drama?" And yet the powers that be in the regular field pretend to have the severest contempt for it.

One prediction may be safely made. That is, when there is a rejuvenation of the regular profession the predominent parties in the much-despised "canned" play will have a hand in it. The associations created between the regular players and the promoters of the "canned" article have been such as to imbue complete confidence of the former in the latter, and should there be a formidable revival of the old-style of theatricals the picture promoters will have first choice.

A very prominent stage actor said the other day: "I could make much more, by far in reality, than I am getting now, but, do you know, the work, the environment, the associations, the advantages of home life, and many other considerations make me feel at home in picture work. So far as the public is concerned I feel the same satisfaction. They may not hear my voice, but they see me. If my work is good they must appreciate me, and that being the case why should I not do for them as well at home as upon the road. And, my dear boy, I feel a gratitude for the motion pictures, even should I take the road again. But for them what would have become of many people of the profession. I admit that at one time I abhorred the thought of motion pictures. Today I look upon the producers as among the greatest benefactors the profession ever had. Their studios have many times shed rays of hope when the close of contracts have brought the deepest gloom."

The United States Supreme Court is to be called upon again to pass upon the constitution of enactment of laws directed against motion pictures. Some of the supporters of censorship agitation are trying to cloud the mind with the contention that the final result will serve as a strong point in their behalf. There is no phase of the matter that has bearing upon the consorship question. The Deputy Collector of Customs of Newark, N. J., refused to allow the importation of the Willard-Johnson prize fight pictures that were taken when the fight took place at Havana, Cuba. The owners of the films made an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of Philadelphia to have the Newark authorities restrained from preventing the importation. The court has decided that the law against the importation of fight films is constitutional and now the owners are going to the court of last resort. It is purely a case of how far the United States Government can go in framing its regulations regarding importations. The question was pretty thoroughly discussed when the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures were put on the circuits for exhibition and the owners of those pictures concluded not to expend the time and expense that would be required to test the law, so that the present case is the first to go up to the court of last resort. The enactment of the law was due to bitter racial feeling in various parts of the country because Johnson, a negro, became pugilistic champion of the world. Since Willard, a white man, has become the champion the owners of the pictures claim the feeling which led to the enactment of the law has taken a reverse and now there is a great demand in all parts of the country for the pictures showing how the white man regained supremacy. Many people in close touch with the customs business and acquainted with the laws bearing upon it adhere to the belief that the only way to beat the importation restriction is to have the law repealed; that when Uncle Sam puts his foot down upon importations, whatever they may be, it is a pretty stiff proposition to run against him and make him take his foot off; but there is a chance of inducing him to change or revoke the law. One expert has expressed the opinion that even then the present importation could not be made because the shipment and the bringing of the films to this country took place while the law was in force and a change would only apply to future importations. The owners of the fight films contend that an effort to have the law repealed would consume so much time that the drawing power of the films would have been reduced to a minimum. This line of argument seems quite reasonable to those acquainted with the value of films depicting topical subjects and, through experience, know that to get adequate returns prompt exhibitions must be made.

In discussing the matter at a Broadway hotel the other night an optimistic manager of burlesque shows said the law was a good one because it prevented fake fights for revenue from the motion picture privileges. He regretted that the same ends could not be attained with less drastic measures because motion picture reproductions of fights are big drawing cards for burlesque shows. He then surprised those present by declaring that should the present law be declared unconstitutional, or be changed, or revoked, he would like to become owner of the old Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures. Barring the supplanting of the present champion, he said, an arrangement by which the old and new pictures could be combined would result in enormous returns. In explaining more fully he said it was simply putting the punch into the new and old by showing how the white man lost and won the world's championship. This manager may not be far amiss. His idea is certainly original.

Donlin Plays in Bush League.

Famous Ball Player Gets Support of Winsted Team and Fans in Making Picture for Arrow Film Corporation.

THIS is mainly the story of how Mike Donlin, ball-player, actor and all around goodfellow, became a bush-leaguer for a day. How he played right field on a Class D team and instituted a brand new holiday for the easy-going folk of Winsted, Conn. In the memory of the oldest inhabitant—and they live a long while in the clear air of Litchfield Hills—there never has been a day quite on a par with July 24, 1915. Turn to that date on the town hall calendar and you will see "Donlin Day" written across the figures; on wayside trees you will find remnants of Donlin placards and in the files of the one and only Winsted newspaper appears the one and only reporter's account of what happened.

Probably it reads something like this: "Our ball park was filled with a gala throng on Saturday afternoon when Mike Donlin, late of the New York Giants, played with the home boys against Meriden. We were beaten 4 to 3, but that wouldn't have happened if the umpire hadn't called Mike out when he slid for home in the last half of the ninth inning.

"It was the biggest sporting event ever known in these parts and we had lots of visitors in automobiles and horse-drawn rigs from Meriden and Torrington and other near-by places. Some of them—meaning the visitors—came to see the ball game and others came to see how a moving picture was made. We had a double bill for one admission and it was very enjoyable.

"The writer has been covering the shows in town for many years, but he never knew how hard it was to make moving pictures until Albert S. Levino brought Mike Donlin and the other players of the Arrow Film Corporation to Winsted. Our young men and young women pitched in and helped all they could by filling the stands and cheering and everything whenever the director asked them to. The picture ought to be very realistic, and we may say on good authority that it will be booked at the Opera House along about Thanksgiving time."

The Winsted reporter guessed right when he said "Right Off the Bat" ought to be a realistic baseball picture, and he might have added that it bids fair to be an unusual one in that there will be no attempt to show the inside workings of a baseball club and in all the five reels there will not be a pistol, a telephone, or an automobile. Moreover, on the authority of Mr. Levino, and he should know because he wrote the scenario, it may be stated that the production is innocent of theft, home-wrecking, murder and similar diversions that keep our judges and juries in employment. "Right Off the Bat" is going to be a crime-free story presenting the career of Donlin from boyhood to manhood and a berth with the New York Giants.

W. E. Shallenberger is president of the Arrow Film Corporation; Mr. Levino is secretary and treasurer and between them they discovered, in Winsted, a veritable virgin garden for the making of photoplays. Winstedians vouch for the statement that during all these years producers have passed them by without once utilizing their wonderful country. When Mr. Levino installed his troupe at the Park Hotel, the mayor gave him the keys to the town. Everything was his to photograph and the people rather liked getting into the picture. They would work for an hour on the inspiration of a bottle of ginger pop and a bag of peanuts.

Mr. Levino needed two sure-enough ball clubs to show how Donlin passed from the bushes to the Polo Grounds and the captains of the Winsted and Meriden teams said, "At your service. We'll act for a while and then play our game." So Donlin entertained the eighteen ballplayers at luncheon before going to the park where Director Hugh Reticker, Assistant Director Charles Mather and Cameramen Henry Bredeson and C. W. Van Ranst were waiting. Donlin won the game—the moving picture game—by stealing home. And oddly enough fact came within an ace of duplicating fiction, all in the space of a few hours.

As previously mentioned in the Winsted reporter's description, Mike tried to steal home and tie the score in the bona fide league game. It was the proper play under the circumstances and he never realized that the camera was recording his slide until after he had been called out. Probably this bit of genuine action will be used in the picture in preference to the earlier scene that may lack an equally spontaneous spirit—the spirit that caused the Winsted fans to raise Donlin on their shoulders and boost him into the cheering crowd in the grandstand.

While "Right Off the Bat" is essentially a baseball picture, it is much else besides. Days were spent in finding choice locations for scenes used in the romantic passages of the story. They should carry the atmosphere of the quaint New England town and the splendor of mountains in which all save the studio interiors have been photographed. Director Reticker had an able company at his disposal, including Claire Mersereau, Fan Bourke, Rita Ross Donlin, Mabel Wright, Charles Mather, George Henry, Thornton Friel, George Sullivan, J. Arthur O'Brien, Frank Frayne, Jr., Frances Walton and Mrs. William Taylor. John J. McGraw appears in the scene showing Donlin being engaged to play with the Giants.

There is one part of this story that can't be written because it has nothing to do with Mike Donlin and his career. But without this other part there would have been no story. It concerns Mr. Shallenberger and his new Marmon car that is trained to pass everything on the road. Mr. and Mrs. Shallenberger made room in the car for Mr. Van Ranst and two representatives of the moving picture press, and under the guise of an assignment, the picture writers enjoyed a glorious trip that was like nothing save the best sort of a vacation.

New Downtown Theater

The Reliable Company Secures Lease on Park Row Property and Will Build a Six Hundred Seat House.

VERY few motion picture theaters are to be found in the downtown district of New York, mainly for the reason that it is not profitable to build anything less than a skyscraper where ground is worth almost its weight in gold. A project has been recently put across, though, that will give the downtown fans a modern picture palace. It was promoted by David Weinstock, at present manager of the Bijou at 11 Park Row. A new company has been formed called the Reliable, of which J. Weinstock is president and H. J. Freedman is secretary and treasurer. This company has secured a twenty-one years lease to the property at 31 and 32 Park Row at a yearly rental of $27,500 per annum. Possession will be given on May 1, 1916, and the work of construction will be started immediately thereafter.

Plans are now being drawn for a six-hundred seat house of the latest type of construction. There will be a center lobby with stores on each side and on two floors above the theater proper will be office space. The auditorium will be ample in area to afford perfect ventilation at all times and the equipment will be the latest in every detail.

David Weinstock, the present manager of the Little Bijou at 11 Park Row, will be the general manager of the new house and the company.

FAMOUS PLAYERS FOR THE NEXT QUARTER.

The months of September, October and November will be marked by a number of interesting releases from the studios of the Famous Players. Here they are: Mary Pickford in "Madam Butterfly," "The Foundling" and "Twisted Paths"; Marguerite Clark in "Molly Make-Believe" and "The Prince and the Pauper"; Pauline Frederick in "Sold" for August 5; "The Fatal Card" in September with Hazel Dawn and John Mason as co-stars. Hazel Dawn will appear in November in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

Sam Bernard, famous comedian, will appear in October in "Poor Schmaltz." John Barrymore is scheduled for September in "The Incorrigible Dukane" and "The Three Elks" and in November in "Are You a Mason?" Charles Cherry and Gail Kane will appear jointly in "The Mummy and the Hummingbird." Marie Doro will appear in "The White Pearl" in September.

METRO MIDSUMMER FEATURES.

The Metro Pictures Corporation is well fortified against the heated term. Thus far its midsummer output has been of excellent quality. Its latest release is from the new Quality Pictures Corporation and its first release, entitled "The Second in Command," in which Francis Bushman and Marguerite Snow appear. Following this will be Dorothy Donnelly in "Sealed Valley," a Metro Picture scheduled for August 2. Popular Plays and Players will release "The Vampire," in which Mme. Petrova is featured, on August 9. After this will come Ann Murdock in "The Royal Family," from the Dyreda studio, released August 16. Other productions are "When a Woman Loves," Rolfe, with Emmy Whelan; "Her Great Match," featuring Gail Kane; Emilie Stevens in "Destiny"; Harry Kolker in "The Bridge"; Henry Bergman in "An Enemy to Society"; Francis Bushman in "The Silent Voice" and Edmund Breeze in "The Song of a Wage Slave."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

"HEARTS ABLAZE," a story of the Cloister and the Court, is the feature picture of the Vitagraph theater program this week. "Hearts Ablaze" was filmed from an original story by Eugene Mullin, and depicts appealing scenes in which the supposed ward of a Prime Minister upholds the People's Party and lends her assistance to oppose their unjust taxation in opposition to her guardian and her King.

The drama was produced by Lorimer Johnston with a cast including L. Roger Lytton, Julia Swayne Gordon, Leo Delaney, Zena Keefe, Charles Wellesley, Frank Currier, Garry McGarry, Nicholas Dunaew, George Stevens and Rose Tapley.

The Vitagraph photoplay in chapters, "The Goddess," of which the two parts of Chapter Thirteen are shown, is of more than usual interest because of the plot of the society leader, Mary Blackstone, to murder Celestia. "His Bunkie," a military romance with Texas and regular United States troops as the background, features Eleanor Woodruff, Darwin Karr and Ned Finley. Kate Price and William Shea are seen in "She Took a Chance," a story that starts with a prize pig and ends in a sausage factory. Wally Van and Nitra Frazer present "His Fairy Godmother," a horrible dream of a rarebit fiend, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew are appearing in "The Cub and the Daisy Chain," an amusing story of a terrible mistake made by a young reporter.

Mary Pickford at the Strand.

Mary Pickford is appearing at the Strand theater this week as Alice McCloud, the leading character in "Rags," produced by the Famous Players Film Company. Unlike Miss Pickford's former successes, she is not only seen in rags, but, towards the end of the picture, in stylish clothes. "Rags" is one story in which the little star is permitted to bridge the gap between utter poverty and riches. The play was produced by the Famous Players Film Company. The Strand Topical Review this week contains an interesting lot of the latest news pictures from the entire civilized world. Some beautiful and interesting travel studies recently photographed and a new educational feature are also shown.

Miss Autumn Hall, the violinist, whose artistic playing created a profound impression at this theater a couple of weeks ago, is back for a return engagement, and Miss Alice Hoffman, the well-known soprano, who was the soloist with Sousa's Band on its trip around the world, is the vocal soloist for the week. The Strand Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Carl Edouarde, render an excellent and varied program.

Ina Claire at the Broadway.

"The Puppet Crown," Harold MacGrath's widely known romance, is being presented in picture form at the Broadway Theater this week, with Ina Claire in the leading role. Miss Claire, who is supported by Carlyle Blackwell and a well-selected cast, proves an excellent choice for the star part. The Broadway Animated News, South American Travel Pictures, and the usual number of short comedies complete the program.

Matinee for Children.

A. L. Shakman, president and managing director of the Eighty-First Street theater, New York City, extends an invitation to the different homes and institutions for children in New York and Brooklyn to attend the matinees during July and August as his guests. There will be no charge of any kind. The children will be well taken care of and will receive seats in the orchestra.

JESSE RALPH IN PATHE'S "THE GALLOPER."

Jessie Ralph, who has scored many hits on the stage in character parts, will be seen in Pathe's Gold Rooster play "The Galloper," by Richard Harding Davis. Donald Mackenzie, who is producing the picture for Pathe, feels that in her he has made a real acquisition since Miss Ralph is one of those rare players who believe that acting is a profession that requires just as much hard work off the stage as on, and studies every part she has with the view of getting every bit out of it of which it is capable. Miss Ralph had important parts in the following well-known recent New York plays: "The Revolt" in support of Helen Ware; "A Rich Man's Son," "Help Wanted," "The Price," and "After Five." Mr. Mackenzie's cast for "The Galloper" is an exceptionally strong one, being headed by Clifton Crawford, and the pictures will be finished before August first, for release in the fall.

The Kalem Viewpoint

William Wright Is Staunch Advocate of One, Two and Three-Reel Pictures—Sees Danger in Feature Production at Expense of Short Subjects.

By Lynde Denig.

THE Kalem Company is an organization in which the officers spend much time in directing the production and marketing of photoplays and little in talking about what they have done and intend to do. William Wright, in accord with the policy of his fellow officers, believes that the output is strong enough to attract attention without a great blowing of horns, and has consistently avoided talking for publication unless he had something definite to say. At the request of The Moving Picture World he consented to outline the attitude of Kalem in these days of new ideas, new ideals, new programs and business conditions that President Wilson might describe as "spotty."

William Wright.

In reading the remarks of Mr. Wright, it is well to bear in mind that they are the outcome of practical experience covering many years, during which he has studied the needs of the exhibitor and how to supply them. He knows the problems of the man who makes pictures, of the man who sells them and of the man who offers them to the public; and in acting as spokesman for the Kalem organization he made it clear that he had all three factors of the business in mind.

By way of introduction, Mr. Wright said, without any hedging or qualifications that might obscure his meaning: "Many changes are taking place in the motion picture business at this time—some of them of material interest to the exhibitor, but the majority of them a detriment. The exhibitor is hearing a great deal about the fine programs that are to be offered to him in the course of time, and is told that pictures never before equalled are to be supplied, and by accepting these programs his business will be doubled; in fact, the motion picture Utopia will be reached."

When asked to specify more in detail the conditions being faced by exhibitors, Mr. Wright continued: "We are hearing of small houses closing up all over the country. In many instances, possibly, this closing is legitimate, due to the erection of larger and more pretentious picture theaters. Frequently, however, it is due to the continuous change in policy practised by the newcomer or inexperienced exhibitor. Where the service of the exhibitor has been made up entirely from the product of the old line concerns and care has been used in the operation of the house, business has continued on an even basis, and today that man, although operating a small theater, is still in the running and realizing a comfortable profit. Comparisons are odious, but the time has arrived to call a halt on extravagant claims and the exhibitor should be set right.

"We believe that a certain percentage of the trade has gone to extremes on so-called 'features,' many of them, in fact the majority, of questionable value, and, as we have repeatedly said before, we think it is only a question of time when the enormous majority of exhibitors will go back to the old program and no subject will be run where the length is greater than four reels, unless the story is of exceptional quality, absolutely requiring a greater length, and these subjects will be run only in the very largest theaters."

"On what lines, then, is the Kalem Company shaping its policy?" we asked.

"Believing that a strong program, consisting of one, two, three and four-reel subjects, will ultimately rule, Kalem Company has for several months been expending great efforts and unlimited money to produce unexcelled pictures; and we contend Kalem is making the best average one, two, three and four-reel subjects on the market—the best stories and the best productions; and you don't have to take our unsupported word for it, either. Exhibitors who are running all of the Kalem issues know our statement is absolutely true. Those who are not running all Kalem releases need only ask their friends who are running the Kalem five weekly issues.

"In support of this statement we ask: In what program can you find a four-reel subject equal as a money-maker to our release of July 12, 'Midnight at Maxim's'? What comedies even approach those in which are featured Ham and Bud? Where can you obtain a one-reel feature picture to compare with our 'Hazards of Helen' railroad stories issued on Saturday of each week? And we challenge the world to produce an average line of two-reel subjects to equal the episodes of 'The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel' series, which started Wednesday, July 21. And who is making three-reel subjects equalling in quality our 'Broadway Favorites' releases?

"To use an old and worn-out adage, 'the proof of the pudding is in the eating,' Kalem Company is not making promises, but calling attention to existing conditions, and conditions that every exhibitor knows to be a fact.

"In booking the Kalem subjects, the exhibitor is not forced to deal with a half dozen different agencies, but can secure the entire Kalem output from any branch of the General Film Company, or from the Greater New York Film Rental Company, and all in the regular service, without extra charge; that is our slogan: 'Feature films in regular service,' and legitimate advertising helps. Through the General Film Company and the Greater New York Film Rental Company exhibitors can secure advance advertising slides, handsome 8 by 10-inch photographs of the principal incidents in our multiple-reel subjects and the best line of four-color lithographic posters on the market.

"One might think that Kalem had departed from its usual modesty in speaking so forcefully in the first person; but 'truth is ever modest,' and we propose to advise the exhibitor where he can obtain the product his business demands. We have very ambitious plans for the future, but in line with the Kalem policy we will not announce them until they are accomplished facts, although we can safely assure a continuance of the release of the best average one, two, three and four-reel subjects made in any part of the world."

Whatever the nature of the plans of the Kalem Company for the coming year, however elaborate and expensive the features, exhibitors may be assured that there will be no slighting of the one, two and three-reel subjects. Recent developments have not led Mr. Wright to alter his opinion about the lasting need for strong dramatic and comedy films that can be run in twenty or forty minutes. Referring to this point, he said: "Pretentious theaters making a bid for the favor of former stage patrons are, of course, increasing rapidly in our larger cities, and it is fitting that the chief attractions in these theaters should be in multiple reels; but even here I think four thousand feet is quite enough. I have seen many of the five-reel productions presented at our most advertised New York theaters and think that I am safe in saying that eighty per cent. of them would have made better entertainment if cut to four reels. The photoplay whose strength warrants more than that is a rarity.

"But, to return to the single, double and triple reel and their certain place in the market, I would suggest that skeptics hunt out the average exhibitor, ask his opinion and then spend an hour in studying the habits of the audiences more necessary to the industry than the comparatively few recruits from among devotees of the stage. Picture audiences always have been and presumably always will be in the main comprised of transients—men and women with an idle hour that may be passed pleasantly in watching a photoplay. Most exhibitors find it absolutely necessary to cater to these people, and to do so satisfactorily a program of short subjects is demanded.

"Yet it appears to me that some producers are coming to regard the short subject as a conventional, cut-and-dried affair that may be turned out in machine-like fashion while the best efforts of the organization go into the making of features. This is wrong in principle and likely to be harmful in results, just as harmful as would be the indiscriminate publication of uninteresting and carelessly written short stories, on the theory that the people purchased the magazine because of the serials. Unless producers issue pictures that will hold the transients of whom I have spoken, many exhibitors will be forced to close their doors, and the Kalem Company always has appreciated this fact."

Discriminating Express Rates

Allowances to Carrying Companies Will Hit Exchanges on Small Shipments.

EXHIBITORS and exchangemen will be subjected to a considerable additional transportation expense as a result of the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the plea of the principal express companies of the country for permission to transpose two of the three factors which go into the making of the rate basis.

Some weeks ago the Commission held a hearing for the purpose of considering the plea entered by the Adams Express Company, the American Express Company, the Southern Express Company and Wells Fargo & Co. to be allowed to increase their revenues in this manner. At this time the companies convinced the Commission of the inadequacy of their present revenues and of the fact that they were operating at a loss. The various shippers of the country felt that if it were shown to the Commission that there was absolute need for higher rates, the plea of the companies should be granted, and, therefore, no opposition was entered.

When the present rates were adopted to take effect on February 1, 1914, the greatest reduction was made in the charges on small packages. Thus it is that under the new order the greatest increase takes place on packages weighing from one to five pounds, which is five cents. The increase on packages weighing from six to twenty-nine pounds will be four cents; thirty to forty-nine pounds, three cents; fifty to seventy pounds, two cents, and from seventy-one to ninety-one pounds the increase will be one cent. The increase is entirely wiped out when the weight of a single package is 100 pounds.

The increase is arrived at in the following manner. The present express rates are composed of three factors: First, an allowance of 20 cents per shipment for collection and delivery service which does not vary with the weight or distance. Second, a rail terminal allowance of 25 cents per 100 pounds, which varies with the weight but not with the distance. Third, the rail transportation per 100 pounds, which varies with both the weight and the distance and also varies in the different zones. The express companies asked permission to transpose the first two charges or factors. The effect of this would be to increase the collection and delivery service allowance five cents per shipment and reduce the present rail terminal allowance at the rate of substantially one-twentieth of a cent per pound. This reduction increases with the weight of the shipment, whereas the increase of five cents remains stationary. Thus it is that the one hundred pound rate is not effected.

Second-class shipments will take an advance of 75 per cent. of the increase, for the second-class rates are one-fourth lower than the first-class rates.

Quite a burden will fall upon the motion picture interests of the country. Exchangemen and the exhibitors who are located outside of the large cities will feel the change perhaps more than any others. The increase on single shipments will not be great, but to the exchanges paying charges one way the aggregate will be large. For instance, a single reel and carrying case will weigh about fifteen pounds; a three-reel shipment will weigh about thirty pounds, and a four-reel shipment slightly under forty pounds. It is estimated that ninety per cent. of the shipments leaving the exchanges will be thirty pounds or under, and that all will be subjected to an advance of from three to five cents per shipment. It is estimated that the express companies will receive an extra revenue on first-class shipments under 100 pounds in weight to the extent of 3.93 cents per shipment. From Washington alone the additional expense will run between $75 and $100 per week at this time.

It has been figured that the express companies will haul during the year 1915, 119,544,043 first-class shipments. Had the new rates been in existence from the first of the year they would have received an additional revenue of $4,700,471.77. At an increase of 1.97 cents per shipment, the 20,191,646 shipments of second-class matter of less than 100 pounds each would have yielded an additional revenue of $362,162.41, or a total additional revenue from both classes of more than five million dollars. NEW V-L-S-E OFFICE AT CINCINNATI.

The V-L-S-E announce the opening of a new office at 138 West Seventh street, Cincinnati, in charge of R. S. Shrader. Mr. Shrader is of the hustling type of salesman, and since coming to the V-L-S-E, has given excellent proof of his ability. As recently announced, Mr. Shrader is the man responsible for the exceptional booking in Cincinnati for an eighteen days' run of "The Island of Regeneration."

Mary Miles Minter, Metro's Latest Star

THE Metro Pictures Corporation in signing Mary Miles Minter for a term of years, with an option of renewal, has acquired a most endearing little star. In referring to that quality of personality called magnetism, she possesses it to an unusual degree. Women, young and old, go into raptures over her. Metro intends to make her the greatest screen celebrity of America, and will concentrate all its efforts to realize that place of honor for the youngest star of the screen.

Mary Miles Minter.

She has been screened only twice in her short career. Once in "The Fairy and the Waif" and quite recently in "Always in the Way." In this latter picture she displayed unusual accomplishments before the camera. She showed on the screen that she had duplicated her success as a stage star. Mention the play "The Littlest Rebel" to anybody who has seen it and there will come from him an exclamation of satisfaction that a remarkable little actress named Mary Miles Minter interpreted the star role.

Little Mary Miles Minter now has a prominent place in Metro's long list of stage and screen celebrities, among whom are: William Faversham, Ethel Barrymore, Edmund B[illegible] Mme. Petrova, Emmy Wehlan, Martha Hedman, G[illegible] K[illegible] Florence Reed, Lois Meredith, Edward Connelly, [illegible] Donnelly, Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow, [illegible] dock, Emily Stevens, Hamilton Revelle and Henry Kolker.

Miss Minter has always been successful on the [illegible] to a winning personality and personal magnetism that is unusual in one so young. She first came into the height of her stage success in the title role in "The Littlest Rebel," which was seen at the Liberty theater, New York, in November, 1911, and presented by William and Dustin Farnum. After the New York run she appeared for an entire season in this play on tour.

Her first appearance was made in 1908 at the age of seven, with Nat C. Goodwin in his production of "Cameo Kirby," playing the part of the baby girl Toinette. Montgomery Phister, one of the best known dramatic critics of the country, said of her performance in the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune, "she was charming beyond description."

PRAISE FOR KALEM PICTURES.

The following interesting letter has been received by the Kalem Company from Gwynn & Byar, proprietors of the Lyric Theater, in Texarkana, Texas:

"We want to congratulate you on the big improvement in your recent releases. Some time ago we fought our exchange to keep from showing your pictures. To be honest, the Indian stuff you were releasing possessed absolutely no drawing power, but, on the contrary, had a tendency to drive away regular patrons.

"'But times have changed. We now demand all of the Kalems we can get on our programs. We haven't had a bad one in months. We are certainly glad that you saw the handwriting on the wall in time. We find that a number of other producing companies seem to be losing sight of the regular release and putting their best efforts on features. This is a serious mistake. We have been using extra high priced features two and three days a week for the past two years and have come to realize that it is all a mistake. The feature has ruined our business. We have discontinued using same and gone back to a regular program of four reels. We find it decidedly more profitable and better appreciated by our patrons. The big multiple reel feature will be the death knell of the picture business if it isn't discontinued.

"'Again congratulating you on the big improvement in your releases, and wishing you every success,

"'(Signed) Gwynn & Byar'."

Spokes From the Hub

By Marion Howard.

THERE are a few citizens of the Hub who have not yet seen "The Birth of a Nation," chiefly because they are unable to secure seats for want of the price, so it was refreshing to note a large party of young students at the Monday matinee, present as guests of a Back Bay society woman who purchased a block of seats feeling, as she said to me later, that she had done a good bit of educational work. Near the youngsters I saw Mrs. George A. Hibbard, who has been "in harness" in stock for several seasons with no time to take in the films. She is here on a holiday and incidentally filling a special engagement at the Castle Square. "What do you think of this picture play?" we asked. "It is splendid and I wish I had time to take in all the films now being shown here, but why such a protest against this particular one? It is history personified and seems like the last call in film work."

It was at the Park during "The Little Pal" with Mary Pickford as the heroine that a criticism was made in my hearing which I want to pass along for the producer's eye. In a scene where the wife of the hero joins him in far off Alaska where steam pipes and other heating appliances are minus, she appears in a diaphanous gown of white muslin, low necked, bare arms and low shoes, all so inconsistent in such a temperature with no fire in sight and nothing but snow outside. "Hubby" is tucked up in bed weighted down with blankets and the "Little Pal" is decked out in a long fur coat, only her face and hands visible.

We had "The Arab" here not long ago and a fine production it was, but there was a ludicrous feature not lost on the audience and not "down on the bills." While the horses are galloping over the soft sands we were regaled with imitation sounds of hoofs going over hard roads. A detail of far more importance is the way the United States flag is hung on walls with the Union on the wrong side, as evidenced in "The Woman" in the house scene. Can one imagine Speaker Clark sitting in front of a flag bunched up, the field wrongly placed —this in the Capital of the United States? Never! Regulations and good taste should come to the rescue of those staging the pictures. There is but one way to hang "Old Glory" and that is the right way, easily learned of any Army or Navy officer. Why such incongruities anyhow? Get a censor of "props" before the grind!

Speaking of the flag and its effect on the auditors arousing enthusiasm and encouraging respect for it, I went to the Boston theater as guest of that prince of good fellows and blushing bridegroom, Francis Ferguson, only to see that Caroline Nichols and her players had new business. At the close of the American Fantasia when "The Star Spangled Banner" is played, the orchestra and leader rose with the audience, a large flag was hoisted on a pole, and, aided by electricity, became a motion picture. The effect was electrical, too. All such bits give dignity to any performance.

Bostonians are delighted over the prospect of seeing Benjamin Chapin in "Uncle Abe" for he is a favorite and has given his remarkable impersonation of Lincoln here before thousands.

Last night I took a friend along to the Park to see "The Clue," a powerful play in which Japan and Russia play the principal roles and which portrays the sacrifice of a Japanese hero in the cause of his country, though the scene of the story is laid in England or some other neutral country. We were too late to see the listed cast but my friend exclaimed, "Well, of all things, if that isn't our old friend 'Charlie Mackay' playing the hero." I disputed her knowing that the aforesaid Charlie and his wife No. 2 were running a stock company in Ontario, Canada. The likeness was startling and it proved to be Edward Mackay, his brother (the talented son of a splendid sire, F. F. Mackay of New York), and whom we too seldom see round here. "Charlie" was quite a favorite when playing leads at the Castle Square, but he got into the marital limelight and forsook the Hub long ago. His first wife was the pretty daughter of Lynn Boyd Porter of Cambridge and she is now the wife of "Bob" Edeson, who is, happily, in the picture game. Mackay married Lillian Kemble, his associate in that company. In "The Clue" I noted Ernest Joy—he of the McKinley face, the erstwhile husband of Jessie Busley, who failed to find him a "Joy forever." Blanche Sweet figured as the heroine—nuf sed.

I wonder if the producers realize the object lesson they are giving in the films depicting women at work in the factories abroad, doing work entirely new and hitherto performed by the men in the trenches. Boston suffragists go in droves to see these films and consider them a great advertisement for the cause, inasmuch as the women are making good, their country needs them there, as well as in the home, and the silly cry, "woman's place is the home," is now relegated to the past. The war has certainly developed a few things for the alleged "weaker sex" who are not only making munitions but are sending the men to the front without a whimper. "Men bear arms, but women do better—they bear armies," said a pretty good politician of late.

Much to the delight of a large audience at the Boston theater Sunday night we had our first look at "The Opened Shutters," the dramatization of Clara Louise Burnham's book written soon after she became a Christian Scientist. My one regret was that this film was not announced in advance in order that the devotees might see the story worked out in such a convincing manner. I venture to say that this film alone would fill any theater once its lesson is told in the advance advertisements. The Hub has the largest Christian Scientist church in the world and every one of its 5,012 seats are occupied twice on Sundays and again on Wednesday evenings. "The Opened Shutters" is by all odds the best of the uplift films yet seen here, though we are yet to see "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," written by Mrs. Burnett, a convert. Fortunate indeed were the producers to find a man who could so impersonate Mr. Thinkright (his popular name) and not overdo it. No one in my immediate neighborhood had read the book and I was glad to say it could be found in the Public Library. This is one of many cases where the film advertises the book and becomes a missionary thereby.

As a companion film we had "Kindlings" with all its sordid details, but oh, what a lesson it all was, especially to the "Easy Street" patrons, for it portrayed scenes right here in our East Side. To my mind such pictures ought to be presented more frequently for they set folks to thinking and we hope investigating.

Thousands will flock this week to the Boston to see dainty Miss Minter in "Always in the Way" for she made a tremendous hit here during the long run of "The Littlest Rebel" with the Farnum brothers.

John Craig has abandoned his idea of showing films of the matinee audiences but has something else in view as evidenced in his production of "Shenandoah" when he introduced a splendid film of Sheridan's ride which intensified the interest greatly.

Not to be outdone by the Screen Club of New York I am going to organize "The Film Club" here for women who are devotees of the silent drama. Why not? On all sides we hear chatter, debates, disputes, criticisms, and small talk about this and that series of films. Therefore we better discuss sanely, listen to the producers who we will ask to be our guests, to the actors (both sexes) and do our part as patrons to encourage debates and attendance at the best theaters where horseplay is not permitted. There are plenty of film houses for that sort of thing. This club is not to be "high brow" (perish the thought) but semi-Bohemian, meeting Sunday evenings at some attractive place, and I have a dandy list of notable women already enrolled. There are theater clubs, drama leagues, why not a film club? Later, letters will give you more spokes for this new wagon to which we hope to hitch many stars of the films.

For the fifth time I went in to see "The Birth of a Nation" and took a friend along just to watch her expressive face, as she was from the South. "My dear," she said, "how can any mortal fail to see the great lesson in patriotism right here in that battle—the flag ever present—held so high." And yet she was born under the stars and bars! She had a good cry over the Lincoln scenes and declared that the man who spoke of the Griffith films as "miles of filth" ought to be horsewhipped, and she looked as if she'd like the job.

Once again members of the Professional Women's Club turned out to see Florence Reed in the new film, "Her Own Way," a marked feature of which was the group of children perfectly groomed, dainty in the extreme and absolutely unconscious apparently of being snapped. The Hub has not had such an elaborate setting in and out of a private residence this season. A parrotty woman behind us said "no wonder the head of that family went to pieces, just see that peacock strutting around; why, all these kids will be spoiled, and see the 'glad rags' of the wife." She utterly failed to catch the spirit of those staying it that way, to illustrate the folly of living beyond one's means.

Last night I dropped in at the Modern to see "Graustark" with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne, a dandy pair, indeed. A gushing young thing behind me exclaimed, "Say, but that lover is James K. Hackett, all right; guess I know him when I see him." Her escort silenced her by calling for a program despite the fact that Bushman's name was emblazoned outside the theater and shown on the screen in advance. Come to think of it Bushman is not unlike Hackett in facial play. This reminds me of the fact that when Ernest Joy, the "white" politician in "The Woman," was last seen here many noted his very close resemblance to the late President McKinley.

Most fortunate were the Universal film folks in purchasing the entire wardrobe of the defunct Boston Opera Company. I met Max Rabinoff there clinching bargains for Pavlowa to wear in the films.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' ENGAGE JOE HUMPREYS

Famous Master of Ceremonies Will Have Charge of Field Exercises at Big Outing at Brighton Beach.

THIS week's principal announcement from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Greater New York is that the organization has engaged Joe Humphreys, as master of ceremonies at the Gala Carnival and Field Day exercises to be given by the New York exhibitors at Brighton Beach Race Track, Saturday, August 21st. Mr. Humphrey's name has been identified with most of the great athletic and sporting movements that have taken place in America for at least ten years past. He has been master of ceremonies at most of the large prize fights that have been held in America and he has acted in the same capacity at large field day gatherings of many of the most prominent athletic clubs in America.

Lee A. Ochs, President of New York League.

Further Progress of Field Day Preparations.

The work done by the New York Exhibitors in preparation for the Gala Carnival and Field Day at Brighton Beach is beginning to show results. William Sweeney, president of the Chicago Exhibitors' League, sends in a letter of encouragement and says that the Chicago exhibitors are preparing to send a delegation to New York to attend the Field Day gathering. J. P. Masters, proprietor of the Elite, Alhambra, Lillian, Princess and Majestic Theaters, of Bowling Green, Ky., has written that he will be present with Mrs. Masters and a delegation of Kentucky exhibitors.

Photoplayers Entering Names for Contests.

Edith Storey of the Vitagraph Company has sent in a challenge to race any other lady photoplayer on horseback. King Baggot has come in with a challenge to any other photoplayer for the running broad jumping contest. The running broad jump was a specialty of Baggot's when he attended the Christian Brothers' College in St. Louis. Guy Coombs, leading man of the Kalem Company, is the first photoplayer to send in his name as an entry for the hundred yard dash contest. Mr. Coombs also issues a challenge for a broad sword combat with any moving picture actor. Mr. Coombs was formerly an instructor of swordsmanship at the Institute of Dramatic Arts in Washington, D. C. Earl Williams and Miss Anita Stewart of the Vitagraph Company have agreed to act as judges of the ballroom dancing contest open to the public. They will also participate in the prize dancing contest for photoplayers only.

Little by little a splendid program is being worked up and as novel contests are thought out the commonplace affairs are being dropped. The league is still desirous for receiving suggestions for novel and comical contests for photoplayers and the public. All such communications should be addressed to Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, 110 West 40th street, New York City, by whom they will be greatly appreciated.

The early receipt of such suggestions will, it is needless to state, add much to their value.

LEAGUE CONSTITUTION CHANGES.

Amendments Made to Laws of Organization at San Francisco.

Page 4, Article 3, Section 1.—In the ninth line strike out the word "four" and substitute the word "two." Add a new clause reading as follows: "All officers who hold office for a period of one year from date of election or until their successors are duly elected and qualified."

Page 6, Section 4.—After the word "seal" strike out "the salary of the secretary shall be $1,200 per year" and insert the following: "The secretary shall receive such compensation for the ensuing year as may be allowed by the National Executive Committee." Wherein this section refers to the amount of bond strike out the words "of $5,000" and insert "In the amount ordered by the National Executive Committee."

Page 7, Article 5, Section 1.—Change to read as follows: "There shall be a convention of this League annually, during the months of June or July, at such place and on such date as may be designated by the National Executive Committee."

Section 2.—Eliminate "The Convention shall determine where the next National Convention shall be held," and so that Section 2 shall read "The Executive Committee shall make all arrangements for such National Convention."

Page 9, Section 5, Article 6, amend to read as follows: "In states where there is no organization an individual wishing to become a member of this League may make application to the National League, and, upon qualifying, become a member thereof. Upon the establishment of a Branch in his state his membership shall be transferred to such State Branch."

Page 9, By-Laws, Article 1, Section 1, change to read as follows: "The Executive Committee shall meet semi-annually; time and place of meeting to be selected by majority of the Executive Committee."

Insert new section, Section 2, reading as follows: "Special meetings of the Executive Committee may be called at any time by the President upon written request of majority of Executive Board, when, in their judgment, such special meeting is necessary."

Change Section 2 to read "Section 3;" Section 3 to "Section 4;" Section 4 to "Section 5."

Page 10, Article 2, Section 1.—Strike out the word "active."

Page 11, Article 4, Section 1.—Strike out "Committee on Location of Next Convention."

Page 12, Article 5, Section 1, change to read as follows: "Each State Branch shall be entitled to five delegates at large and five alternates at large, and one delegate and one alternate for each twenty-five members in good standing.

Article 5, Section 1A.—Each local shall be entitled to one delegate and one alternate, to be elected by said local at least sixty days prior to the State Convention. All delegates' credentials to be signed by the State President and Secretary.

Page 14, Article 10, Section 1.—The nomination, election and installation of officers in their respective order shall take place during the annual Convention at such business session as may be set by the Convention.

Page 15, Article 14, Section 1, change to read as follows: This Constitution and By-Laws may be amended by a majority vote of the members present, at a regular meeting of the National League.

MARY NASH PROVES VERSATILE.

Mary Nash, star of Knickerbocker Star Features, is proving the versatility of her artistic nature in a feature drama now being produced "The Tides of Time." Miss Nash is called upon for romance at age of twenty, a struggle with poverty in middle life and a valiant battle for justice for the struggling poor. She handles the character at the age of sixty with remarkable daintiness and has won the name of the "Sweet Old Lady" in the studio. At the age of eighty she shows the triumphant evening of life with those whose long lives have been unselfish and humane.

Stereoscopic Motion Pictures

By C. Francis Jenkins.

STEREOSCOPIC projection, that is, stereoscopic pictures projected in some practical manner so that the audience sees them in all the wonderful depth and roundness of life, has been the dream of photographers since Daguerre made his first pair of stereoscopic "tin types." Perhaps no other problem in photography has so baffled investigators. It has engaged the attention of the most brilliant minds, but it has not yet been solved. By solution I mean that no practical, commercially useful method has been discovered. It seems to be a far more difficult problem than photography in color.

Since motion pictures have attained world wide use, the opportunity for large financial gain permits of a correspondingly large expenditure in initial investigation, and doubtless this problem will be taken up by motion picture engineers sooner or later and with sufficient financial backing to insure that persistent investigation which most nearly guarantees success.

It is likely, therefore, that the following summary of experiments made by the writer covering a period of years, some of them original and some of them an effort to bring the work of others nearer the goal, may be worth recording.

It will probably be conceded that stereoscopic projection will never be publically acceptable until the results are attained without compelling each individual of the audience to employ some sort of device before his eyes. The pictures should appear stereoscopically whether one views them with one eye or with both eyes.

Heretofore, there have been four principal methods followed by those attacking the problem: (1) By employing polarized light. That is projecting a right eye picture and a left eye picture onto the same canvas, the right eye picture being projected, for example, with light polarized in a horizontal plane and the left-eye picture being projected with light polarized in a vertical plane. A small analyzer is then furnished each observer, the effect being that the analyzer would prevent the polarized light of the left eye picture from entering the right eye and vice-versa. Therefore the right eye sees only the right-eye pictures and the left eye only the left-eye pictures and a perfect stereoscopic motion picture is obtained. However, aside from the annoyance of wearing spectacles to see the picture, there is a very large loss of light.

(5). A somewhat newer method consists in projecting the pictures through a grating hanging in front of the screen. This grating as it was actually made and used consists of vertical threads having a uniform diameter, from end to end, and so spaced that the distance between the adjacent threads is the same as the diameter of the thread. The two pictures are then projected from lateral positions some distance apart, depending on the distance from the projecting machines to the screen. This grating has the effect of splitting up the projected picture, say, the right-eye picture into vertical slices with a shadow of the thread lying between each adjacent vertical picture segment. The left-eye picture when projected is also cut up into little vertical slices, each of these falling on the screen where the shadow of the string of the other lantern lies. The result is a composite picture consisting of alternate right-eye and left-eye segments across the whole screen. One may, therefore, view this picture in such a way that the right eye will see the right-eye segments and be prevented by the threads from seeing the left-eye segments, while the left eye sees all of the left-eye segments and similarly is prevented by the threads from seeing the right-eye picture segments so that one is able to see, unaided, a perfect stereoscopic picture. But the difficulty in this particular case is that the pictures can be seen stereoscopically only from certain zones in the audience, whereas, everywhere else in the hall the picture appears blurred and "fuzzy." So again we fail of the goal.

On the advent of motion pictures it was soon discovered that carrying the camera on a railroad train, a boat, an automobile or any other suitable vehicle with the line of sight of the lens at right angles to the line of travel would produce stereoscopic pictures. The writer has some really beautiful pictures made in this manner some eight or ten years ago in one of the National Parks, which show rocks, trees and water falls, etc., in wonderful beauty of form and location. This same idea was carried out by putting the camera on a wheeled platform and drawing it along as the pictures were being made.

A still more recent method, which, however, is scarcely more than reversing this process, is to move the background while the camera remains stationary.

This last scheme gives a stereoscopic effect so far as depth of picture is concerned, but the apparent roundness of the objects in the foreground is entirely a mental delusion because we imagine solidity, roundness and other characteristics, for we remember their shapes as we see them in daily life, and so the deception is more or less perfect.

Of course, in the latter two methods, i. e., putting the camera on a moving vehicle and photographing at right angles, and the other of moving the background, require no other apparatus than the ordinary single-lens camera; but are of limited application.

In employing the other methods, the object must be photographed from two points of view laterally displaced, say 3 inches apart, perhaps. This is sometimes done by using two cameras side by side or two mechanisms and two lenses in the same camera and on two films, which are afterward printed on one or two positive films. The other method consists of a series of prisms, and a single lens and single negative film, in the camera, and printed direct. In this case there is a prism both at the right and left of the lens. Just in front of the lens are two smaller prisms located one above the other and crossed. These latter two prisms are reciprocated vertically so as to bring the image into the lens alternately from the right and the left. See U. S. Patent No. 606,993.

BACHRACH JOINS WORLD FILM FORCES.

Henry E. Friedman has been assigned to the North Carolina territory by the Washington, D. C., office of the World Film Corporation, for it is believed that by having one man in so large a territory better results can be obtained. For this same reason Alan J. Bachrach has been given the State of Virginia, and F. B. Spurrier, assistant manager for this territory, will give special attention to the Maryland business.

Mr. Bachrach is the latest addition to the field forces of the World Film Corporation, for he made his initial visit to the Virginia exhibitors within the past fortnight. Heretofore he has been engaged in the exhibition rather than the placing of motion picture films. During the past six years he has served as a manager for the Brylawski interests, in Washington, D. C.

He started in the film business in July, 1909, when he gave up the photographic studio he was then conducting at 1331 F street, northwest, Washington, to assume the management of the Pastime theater on Pennsylvania avenue, near Sixth street. In September, 1912, he was transferred to the Casino theater, at Seventh and F streets, where he remained until last April, when, upon the expiration of the lease the house was vacated by his employers. He then became manager of the organization holding the district of Columbia license for the Spiegell slides, remaining in that capacity until associating himself with the World Film Corporation.

Mr. Bachrach is a native of Baltimore, Md., and was born in that city November 18, 1881. He is a graduate of the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute class of 1898, and is well known and extremely popular in both cities.

Selznick Highly Endorsed

World Film Corporation Issues Detailed Financial Report That Shows Business to Be in Flourishing Condition.

THE executive committee of the World Film Corporation, headed by Milton C. Work, of Philadelphia, and including George B. Cox, George A. Huhn, Jules E. Broultour, Joseph L. Rhinock and Briton N. Busch, has given to Lewis J. Selznick, its vice-president and general manager, a strong commendation. In a complete report, the committee said: "With the assured continuance of the services of Lewis J. Selznick as its vice-president and general manager, the possibilities of the World Film Corporation are now most potential." The letter in detail that was sent to the stockholders of the World Film is as follows:

"This covers the first year of the operations of the World Film Corporation and its producting companies, of which it owns all the capital stock. The figures show that the total profits were $329,025.08, practically all of which was earned during the second half of the year. It is obvious that it requires considerable time to place in running order an organization so complex; it is, therefore, most gratifying that all expenses were met during the first six months, and that each monthly report during the second half of the year improved upon its predecessor.

"The World has allowed the sum of $371,279.34 and the Peerless $80,264.65 for depreciation. The Peerless has not figured as of any value properties used in a completed picture which may be utilized in future plays, with great resultant saving in cost of production. The earnings of the World and the companies owned by it are now upon a basis of over $500,000 per year, and with the present line of business should steadily increase. The World will not, however, limit itself to the character of business carried on during its initial year. Contracts for foreign operations have been concluded, and the returns from this new field are just beginning to come in. These contracts are for pictures previously used in this country. From them the World, during its next fiscal year, will receive a minimum net profit of $200,000. As soon as business conditions abroad become normal this amount is sure to be greatly increased. A number of other new features, including a weekly release of high-grade comedies and a weekly news service are about to be introduced.

"The most important, however, of the recent extensions of the World is a contract concluded within the past few weeks with the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, a $3,000,000 company, recently formed, with the financial backing of Messrs. Ladenburg, Thalman & Company, of New York, and managed by some of the most able film men in the country. For a period of ten years the Equitable will release through the World one feature and one comedy per week, the World to receive a handsome percentage of the gross receipts as compensation for the services of its distributing organization. This contract means that the World, without any risk on its part, and without appreciably increasing its overhead, has acquired a new department which is sure to add materially to its profits. In accordance with the understanding reached at the time of the making of the contract, Lewis J. Selznick, General Manager of the World, has been made vice-president and advisory director of the Equitable. This assures complete harmony between the two corporations."

Malcolm Duncan in "The Money Master"

MALCOLM DUNCAN, the sterling juvenile actor who contributed so largely to the great success of George Kleine's film version of "The Spendthrift," by Porter Emerson Browne, and who is also a member of the all-star cast which interprets the forthcoming Kleine feature "The Money Master," had long been considered among the "truly arrived" on the speaking stage before he made the acquaintance of Cooper-Hewitts and the clicking camera. His first appearance on the professional stage was made under the auspices of the late Richard Mansfield, whom he supported for two seasons, being entrusted with important roles in each one of Mansfield's repertoire of masterpieces. Later on Mr. Duncan came under the management of Charles Frohman in the support of Virginia Harned. Then followed seven seasons with the Henry B. Harris forces. During this time Mr. Duncan played leading parts in such remarkable successes as "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Talker," and "The Third Degree," as well as a number of other prominent productions. Shortly before his advent into the moving picture field, Mr. Duncan was leading man with Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske.

Malcolm Duncan.

As "Monty Ward" in "The Spendthrift," Malcolm Duncan's work attracted the attention of the exhibitors and newspaper critics and completely won the hearts of the thousands of "fans" who flocked to see this great Kleine success. His artistic rendition of an important role in "The Money Master" has more than justified the praise which followed his first moving picture appearance.

Charles Seay Joins Equitable

CHARLES M. SEAY, who was one of Edison's leading directors until a short time ago, has signed a contract with the Equitable Motion Picture Company, and will direct the making of five reel "atmosphere" pictures which will be released through the World Film Corporation. Mr. Seay's first photo drama in his new capacity will be the producing of "Blue Grass" into a screen version of the popular Southern play by Paul Armstrong, in which Thomas Wise, the star in "The Gentleman from Mississippi" will play the lead.

Charles M. Seay.

Perhaps some of the best pictures Mr. Seay has produced are Southern plays, full of the atmosphere and romance of the country south of the Mason and Dixon line. His success is without doubt due to his familiarity with his subject for he is a Southerner born and bred. Mr. Seay was born in Atlanta, Ga. He entered the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., with the avowed intention of becoming a doctor, but he changed his mind after the second year, and came out with a B. A. degree instead.

The stage interested Mr. Seay intensely, and he became an actor. After a number of years on the legitimate stage he worked in this city with Proctor. Stock motion pictures were just coming in, and Mr. Seay watched them very intently. He learned a great deal about trick pictures from those shown at the Proctor houses, and when, six years ago, he became a motion picture director with the Edison company, he used his knowledge in his first and most spectacular picture, "Fantasma."

Mr. Seay's greatest pleasure is in producing homely plays of heart interest and which smack of the soil.

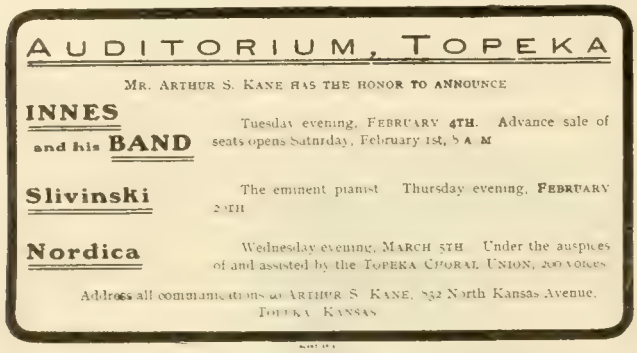
"It is my ambition to produce only American plays dealing with American people—because they are the only kind of people I know anything about," says Mr. Seay. "I was born in a little town and lived in the backwoods for years, and I think the most popular picture, the one which reaches and touches every one, is the picture of everyday human experience."

WARREN JOINS CRYSTAL.

President Joseph A. Golden, of the Crystal Film Co., is engaged in addition to this other work, in strengthening his studio force. the most recent additions being Edward Warren as director of features, Robert Olssen as camera man, with Arthur H. Battey, a well-known New York newspaper man, in the publicity department. Mr. Warren is one of the best and most favorably known directors in the business, and as his first production will be one of a series of five-reel features under the title of "Divorce," with Miss Hilda Spong as the star, his introduction into the Crystal studio is confidently expected to mark a new era in the artistic record of the company. This feature is one of a series which will be released on the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation program by the Triumph Film Corporation. Others, which were also produced at the Crystal studios, include "The Price," with Helen Ware as the star, "The Master of the House" with Julius Steger in the leading part, and "The Penalty," in which Miss Spong takes the principal role. These releases are scheduled for late in September and will be followed by Miss Spong's presentation of "Divorce."

LOOKING BACK.

Under the caption, "On Second Thought," which was given in 1901 by Arthur S. Kane, then city editor of the Topeka Daily Capital, when Mayor J. E. House started his column on the editorial page of that paper, has been discovered the following:



AUDITORIUM, TOPEKA

MR. ARTHUR S. KANE HAS THE HONOR TO ANNOUNCE

INNES and his BAND — Tuesday evening, FEBRUARY 4TH. Advance sale of seats opens Saturday, February 1st, 9 A. M.

Slivinski — The eminent pianist. Thursday evening, FEBRUARY 25TH.

Nordica — Wednesday evening, MARCH 5TH. Under the auspices of and assisted by the TOPEKA CHORAL UNION, 200 voices.

Address all communications to ARTHUR S. KANE, 532 North Kansas Avenue, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Arthur Kane, who has been away for ten years, is on from New York, where he has a big job at a big salary. It is just as well, however, not to mention the matter to your wife. If you do she will wonder why you haven't a big job at a big salary.

We occasionally call attention to remarkable feats, which is by way of working up to one performed by Kane. Kane was the impresario of the first Nordica concert given in Topeka. He sold 4,200 tickets at a dollar a head and, on the only occasion in history, put up the "S. R. O." sign in the Auditorium.

PROMINENT PLAYERS WITH EQUITABLE.

Three well-known stageland stars are engaged at present at the Equitable studios at Flushing, L. I., in five reel pictures which will mark the first releases of Equitable Motion Pictures through the World Film Corporation. William Courtleigh, the well known actor who has recently returned from Chicago, where he played the role of the Russian tenor in "The Song Bird," is playing the lead in Marc Edmund Jones' photodrama, "Life's Crucible," which is being directed by Isadore Bernstein, the director general of the Equitable. Robert T. Haines, the distinguished actor who has starred with Madame Modjeska, Richard Mansfield and with numerous other famous players, is making his bow to the silent drama in the sociological and political five-reel photoplay "Human Cargoes," which was written and is being directed by Walter McNamara, remembered for his production, "Traffic in Souls" and "Ireland a Nation." Thomas Wise, the star in the popular play, "The Gentleman from Mississippi," has been engaged to play the lead in "Blue Grass," an adaptation for the screen of the play by Paul Armstrong. This southern picture was started Monday by Charles M. Seay, one of the new directors.

Contracts have been signed with two other well-known players, who will appear in the immediate future in an Equitable photodrama. Florence Reed is to play the leading role in "The Cowardly Way," a social drama, which is to be directed by John Ince. Kathryn Osterman is to star in a light comedy, which is being written especially for her.

It is to be the policy of the Equitable company to have a permanent stock company of experienced players who will support the various stars who will be engaged especially for each picture. Miss Clara Whipple, George Soule Spencer and Roy Applegate have already been chosen for this company.

MACKENZIE TO PRODUCE PATHE'S "MARY'S LAMB."

Pathe announces that Richard Carle's famous play "Mary's Lamb," which will feature Richard Carle himself and be put out as one of the new Gold Rooster plays, has been given to Donald Mackenzie to produce. Mr. Mackenzie will start work upon it within the next few days on the completion of his work upon "The Galloper," Richard Harding Davis' play, now being filmed in the Pathe studios.

BAMBERGER GOES TO V-L-S-E.

Leon J. Bamberger has resigned as Washington representative of the World Film Corporation, to accept a position with the V-L-S-E.

Mr. Bamberger has succeeded in making an enviable reputation for himself during his connection with the World Film Corporation, and comes to the Big Four with a host of friends and well-wishers.

Alfred H. Moses, Jr.

THE newer men who are entering the film industry as motion picture photographers will do well to keep their eyes on the efficiency record hung up by Alfred H. Moses, Jr., the Thanhouser photographic expert. He joined the company in 1910 and in all these years of incessant work in all kinds of climates and lights there have not been four instances where retakes were necessary for reasons which might in remotest way be laid to photography. In hanging up this record for other camera men to shoot at, Mr. Moses injects an element of competitive endeavor into the work of all camera operators. His efficiency is the fruit of painstaking labor and thoroughness. He took to photography in 1888, and has given time to every branch of it. He is the inventor of the "Multi-Exposure Camera," "The Baby Simplex Projector," as well as all the articles now being manufactured by the Simplex Photo Products Company. He is an electrical expert as well as a machinist, having built and operated mechanism from electric bells to power plants. Mr. Moses is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institution of Technology and worked on the original Lumiere cinematograph in 1905, when Keith brought it over and Moses was his technical expert.

Alfred H. Moses, Jr.

In speaking of Moses' record Edwin Thanhouser says: "I have always been an admirer of consistency and consistency is something I have always tried to practice. I can hardly think of a better example of consistency in a man's work than the efforts of Alfred Moses in motion picture photography. To be at all times dependable—to know that you can count upon a man's work in not only certain conditions but every single time—this is model efficiency and the record of Mr. Moses is truly a remarkable one for consistency."

Mr. Moses is a Southerner hailing from Louisville, Ky. To him goes the credit of conceiving the automatic dissolve and he is now at work on a natural color process which will undoubtedly revolutionize some phases of motion picture photography. He has always been the recognized technical expert of the Thanhouser Company and yet for all his accomplishments he is modest and unassuming. "The value of work," says Mr. Moses, "lies in the satisfaction of having done it well." That being the case, he must be enjoying plenty of satisfaction.

The secret is out. Now we know why some people are successful. Pete Schmidt of the Morosco forces is fond of celery. Celery's a nerve tonic. We never knew before that celery was one of the factors in picture successes.

Arthur Cozine

ARTHUR COZINE, one of the players of juvenile roles with the Vitagraph Company, traces the landing of his ancestors on American soil from the early part of the Seventeenth Century. In 1623, John Cozine, and three brothers, were sent out by the Dutch West India Company, with a direct view of colonizing, under command of Cornelius Jacobea Mey, and settled in New York. Forty-four years later, after the English had taken possession of New York, Colonel Francis Lovelace appointed John Cozine commissioner of eight cartmen and this commissionership was a stepping stone to the fortune that descended to his heirs. Later, considerable of his fortune, that represented real estate, was turned into cash through purchase by the Chandlers and Astors.

Arthur Cozine.

Arthur Cozine, one of the younger members of the family, was born in Brooklyn, New York, April 6, 1894, and is a descendant in direct line from the John Cozine who landed in New York in 1623. He attended the public schools of Brooklyn and finished his education in a private high school. He first went to work for his father, but moving pictures were an irresistible attraction and the business suffered, as every moment he could get away from work, he spent at the Vitagraph studios, watching the modus operandi of motion pictures. When the late William V. Ranous picked him out of an army of extras to play a "bit" opposite Lillian Walker, in "The Lady of the Lake," he determined then and there to devote all his time to posing before the camera.

Recognition came slowly, but his advancement was none the less sure and when he was selected by Director George D. Baker to play juvenile leads opposite the late John Bunny, his status as a full-fledged motion picture actor was established. A few of the pictures in which Mr. Cozine is seen in prominent parts include "In the Land of Arcadia," "The Buddy Series," "Fixing Their Dads," "Heavy Villains," "Boys of the I. O. U.," "The Jarr Series," and "A Night Out," with May Robson as the star.

Garfield Thompson.

GARFIELD, or as his friends know him, "Garry" Thompson, one of the best known scenario authors in the country, has been engaged by World Film Corporation for a place in its scenario department at the company's studio, Fort Lee, N. J. In earlier life Mr. Thompson had considerable naval and military experience in various parts of the world. About sixteen years ago, he entered the theatrical profession in which he remained until 1911, his last engagement being that of the leading male role in the circus play, "Polly of the Circus," which was written by Margaret Mayo.

Garfield Thompson

He then left the theatrical profession and entered the motion picture business, joining the Reliance and Pathe companies, with whom he became a leading man and later a recognized free lance scenario writer. After about a year and a half, he devoted all of his time to writing photoplays and during 1914 he wrote the scenarios and directed the productions of several well known screen stars. For the last six months Mr. Thompson has been writing the scenarios for the Fox Film Corporation, including such pictures as "The Plunderer," "The Devil's Daughter," and "Dr. Rameau." His first success was "The Reincarnation of Karma" which was produced by the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Thompson is to write the scenarios for the various directors of the World Film Corporation.

Bigelow Cooper, Edison Players.

AS BEING born is not of interest, we must hustle Bigelow Cooper to the point where he met his first Waterloo, it being Waterloo, N. Y., where he was taken from Springfield, Ohio, and startled that burg at the age of three by scandalously mimicking, in the town hall, the star of the "exercises" who was just then exercising on why curfew shall not ring tonight. Then and there he noisily notified the assembly that when he was a man he was "going to be a that."

Bigelow Cooper.

One day, on his way home from a Chicago high school he was asked by a pleasant stranger, who proved to be the captain of "supers," if he would like to go on the stage. He would. That night he joined Caesar's army, dazzled by the glory of armor, sword, pink tights and M. Antony. Escaping from school finally, he spent some years in western companies, gaining more skill than fortune, but laying a good foundation. Mr. Cooper's early stage training was acquired in the companies of McKee Rankin, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, and Nance O'Neill. He was also a leading member of the first stock company at the Murray Hill theater, New York, and the following four years in the companies of Jacob Litt, appearing as "Tony Jack" in "The Woman in Black;" "Small Bottles" in "Chimmie Fadden;" Captain Heartsease in "Shenandoah," and Lord Woodstock in "Sporting Life." After a season with J. K. Emmett, Mr. Cooper spent some time in the companies of Aubrey Mittenhal, the Shuberts, A. H. Woods, Joseph Santley, and Laurette Taylor. During the season of 1910, he was with Daniel Frohman's company in "The Thief," playing Raymond LeGardes. After Dillingham's production of "Sentimental Sally," and in "The Confession," Mr. Cooper bethought he saw in motion pictures a future for his wide experience and training. And he was right, for four years in the photodrama, with Edison exclusively, has brought forth, from the best known critic, in writing of the feature, "The Tragedies of the Crystal Globe," the remark: "The Portrayals of Mabel Trunelle and Bigelow Cooper are in keeping with what will long stand as one of the finest examples of its kind ever shown on the screen." This in spite of the difficult illusion to produce of living three different lives in three greatly different periods, in that play.

A Chat With Alec. B. Francis.

"HOW did I happen to go into picture work?" Alec. B. Francis repeated my question. We were sitting on the outdoor stage of the World Film Studio swinging our legs over the edge. Mr. Francis took a thoughtful pull from one of his best friends, his pipe, and continued:

"Five years ago, I realized what a future there was before the camera, and I went into picture work while the going was good."

"But you went into it from the stage, didn't you?" Mr. Francis was asked.

"Yes, rather, but I didn't go into it as a side issue, as so many stage people do to-day. I went into it for good and all, giving up the stage entirely. It was quite a leap in the dark you know, as most of the actors in those days looked down on picture work as something beneath them. But . . ."

Alec. B. Francis.

"You had the courage of your convictions," the man-who-asks questions finished the sentence.

"Exactly, as I said before I looked ahead."

"Are you sorry that you went into picture work?"

"That is a foolish question, and you know it."

Mr. Francis has played countless parts for the screen, playing every variety of character. So when the World Film Corporation Company decided to put on the famous William A. Brady play, "After Dark," it was universally decided that Mr. Francis should be featured as "Old Tom." He was the man for the part, as he would be able to portray the different phases of character; first as a young army officer in the Philippines, then descending in the scale of deterioration of character until he is nothing but an old drunken sot. He must then show his regeneration into a self-respecting man. This part needed a splendid actor and a man of great experience. Do you wonder that it fell to the lot of Alec. B. Francis?

During the last year, we have seen him as the crusty and gout-ridden Lord in that delightful play, "The Wishing Ring," in which Vivian Martin was starred. We saw his splendid work as the unhappy speculator, Cressler, in "The Pit," in which Wilton Lackaye is starred. We saw his artistic characterization of Bill Avery, the reformed crook in the Robert Warwick picture "Alias Jimmy Valentine." His last part was the portrayal of the forgiving and pathetic father in "Woman and Wine," with William Elliott.

"It Happened While He Fished." Lots of things might happen "while he fished," so Horace Davey, director of the second Nestor comedy company, has taken it for the title of his latest Universal release. The regular Nestor company appears in his offering.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON

WORK OF AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LECTURER IN NORTH DAKOTA.

IT IS interesting to note the work being done by the Agricultural College of North Dakota in a line of effort where the moving picture has again demonstrated its value above all other modes of illustration.

A. P. Hollis, who has been employed for the past couple of years by the Agricultural College of North Dakota, has, we are told, traveled 13,400 miles through the state, delivering a series of lectures under the head of "Rural Life and Education," and with sub-titles of the following significance: "Making the Most of Farm Boys and Girls in the Farm High School" (a study in consolidation); "Health and Disease on the Farm;" "Earning and Learning" (a study in educational co-operation of farm, home and school); "Agricultural Clubs and Contests;" "An Agricultural College in Action," and "Riches from Rubbish."

Heretofore these lectures have been illustrated (with the exception of the last one) by means of lantern slides, the projection lantern being carried by Mr. Hollis with him on his journeys. This year, however, the moving picture has been added to the lecturer's accessories.

Among the reels of film used by him in illustrating his remarks are some which have been made by the Agricultural College. These show the general activities on the College Campus, views of its buildings, and the various phases of outdoor instruction. Another portion of the film shows the construction of the cement silo. And still another illustrates Professor Bolley's work with the flax wilt of the state, and methods of detecting and treating the disease.

Mr. Roy Corbett, a student instructor in physics, has taken all of these pictures and developed the films in a specially equipped room in the Engineering Building, under the direction of Professor Keene, Dean of that department.

In addition to the College films, Mr. Hollis makes use of other films that sometimes suit his purpose better. Among these is one of the Elk Valley Farm in North Dakota, which shows 200 mules drawing 50 binders on a big bonanza farm. "From Grass to Glass," made by Rex, has also been used extensively by Mr. Hollis.

At the various institutions throughout the state where these lectures are given, such as school directors' meeting, teachers' institutes, farmers' institutes, etc., the attendance and interest in the lectures has been noticeably increased since the installation of the moving picture as an illustrator.

It is an interesting and praiseworthy fact in connection with the traveling lecture course of the Agricultural College of North Dakota, that in the event of Mr. Hollis, or any of the other lecturers of the college, who occasionally assist in the work, finding it impossible to fill a desired date, it has been the habit, where a lantern is available, to send a printed lecture and illustrations free to responsible parties who will pay the transportation both ways, and guarantee damages for loss and breakage.

TRIED AND PROVED.

A RECENT article on "Solving the Problem," while very necessary for the vast majority of churches, proved unnecessary for the Grace Church of Elgin, Illinois, for there they have solved the problem, with similar results experienced in several other churches in the larger cities.

The results attained, the experience gained, together with the opinions of those most concerned, are worthy of record as, perhaps, they may prove helpful to many others to whom the problem of the pictures in the church is still a dubious one.

It appears that in the Grace Church an equipment was installed for trial purposes, and Biblical pictures were shown on Sunday evenings; the official members of the church then met for a free and full—and critical—review of the situation, with the following results:

The exhibiting of religious pictures had set people talking about the Bible, especially the children, who grasp the idea readily when they see it worked out in the pictures; furthermore, increased questioning upon Bible topics was most noticeable, and that the enacted scenes were doubly effective.

It was only natural that the discussion of these pictures in particular led to a review of the moving pictures in general. The conclusions arrived at by this body of local church government, as tabulated by them, are repeated here:

1. That pictures are just what one makes of them.
2. That they are popular, and an effective means of conveying ideas.
3. That they are educational and can stimulate religious thought as effectively as any other line of thought.

Another point emphasized was that the church exhibitions were in no way competitive with the moving picture houses, the scheme being one peculiar to the church in adopting the latest and best methods of attractive and illustrative teaching. As a result of this meeting, the decision to make the moving picture work in the church a permanent one was reached, and orders covering the expenses were given.

The influence going out from church centers such as this will have a marked effect upon the growth of moving picture work in the churches, helping to overcome the greatest hindrance—that of cost.

GROWTH OF MUSICAL CULTURE.

"Moving pictures are restoring the taste for good music. Ragtime has been a pest; the public has been surfeited with it; the introduction of the pipe organ into the moving picture houses is working a marked change in musical appreciation."

The above statement was made at the Michigan Music Teachers' convention recently by Mr. Ernest Skinner, of Boston. Mr. Skinner is a noted church organ builder and is therefore a great authority upon the subject. He further said:

"Managers put in organs primarily as a matter of economy to do away with the more expensive orchestra. They have now found that organ music more easily and readily follows the pictures on the screen than any other form of music. Fortunately, also, even if unwittingly, they have at the same time been of great service in the musical education of the masses."

The popularity of "popular music" has become a fallacy. Theaters throughout the country have noted a falling off in their patronage because the grade of music was not high enough. Others have found excellent musical programs an added attraction. Many organs are now in use even in the cheapest trade, while many managers are discovering that a big organ, a broad program and an organist of excellent standing are fine mediums for attracting the public. Thus the moving pictures have added to their record of educational qualities that of better music and purer musical taste.

British Notes.

THE HOME OFFICE has today, July 12, sanctioned the employment of female operators in motion-picture theaters subject to being fully qualified. The increasing shortage of male labor is alone responsible for this admission of women to an hitherto prohibited vocation.

Film manufacturers and renters of this country have been canvassed by the Exhibitors' Association with a view to the three factions adopting a definite policy for the maintenance of an open film market. The Exhibitors' Association is already determined to support the open market system for films under 2,000 feet in length, not that the association is opposed to the exclusive, it is too late in the day to discover prejudices against such a deep rooted custom, but it is openly stated that the exclusive films is not necessarily destructive to the open market films and in support of this contention a resolution encouraging the production of high-class exclusiveness has been passed. A general conference of manufacturers, renters and exhibitors is being convened to discuss these points.

The Trans-Atlantic Film Co (Universal) are rapidly nearing the completion of a Dickensian drama, "Hard Times," which their newest director, Thomas Bentley, has prepared and recorded in the immediate vicinity of London. Bransby Williams, a talented specialist in the impersonation of characters from Dickens' works and with a long career on the English legitimate stage, took the role of Gradgrind and opposite him is Miss Dorothy Bellew, a former Clarendon star. After the completion of "Hard Times" Mr. Bentley will leave London for Universal City.

The unapproachability of the British Government upon departures from the ordinary routine of events is proverbial and the sheer audacity of a mere moving picture exhibitor engaging the Admiralty to assist him with his program could not be regarded other than an unthinkably impossible proposition—even by the good people of Missouri. Yet the unexpected always happens, particularly if you happen to be in Leeds. Here the manager of a suburban theater petitioned the Admiralty for assistance in advertising a naval film he had booked. His reply consisted of one of the first class military bands, that of the Royal Marines, sent up specially to the theater from Manchester to await instructions. The band stationed for the week in the city at Government expense was undoubtedly the star attraction and every day it "played up" the crowds a mile and half to the theater in question. In conjunction with the naval recruiting film on exhibition the manager was also supplied with the official booklets for recruits for the navy and these with an advertisement of the show printed behind proved a unique adjunct. The only unfortunate circumstance associated with this enterprising event appears to have been its enormity, for only about one-twentieth of the people attracted could be accommodated. Before leaving Leeds I might introduce another advertising stunt I heard of in the Yorkshire city. The manager of a local picture theater had his program upon a recent occasion composed entirely of Flying A and Hepworth products, featuring amongst other players Vivian Rich and Elizabeth Risdon. Now it happens that in this particular locality the pillar boxes for letters have not yet been modernized with the initials G. R. which the last succession to the throne of the Kingdom necessitated. Some bear the insignia V. R. and some E. R., according to whether they were installed during the reign of Victoria Regina or Edward Rex. Armed with a can of white paint and favored with a very dark night someone whitened each monogram on the red pillar boxes and added a perplexing question mark. It was not until the people of the district had appeased their curiosity by a visit to the kinema that they understood that V. R. also were the initials of a charming Western photoplayer and that E. R. also stood for a celebrated English artiste. But over the scene the manager had with the local postal authorities it is better to draw a veil.

The Hepworth player above referred to, Elizabeth Risdon, is, by the way, now collaborating with Maurice Elvey of the London Film Co. in an elaboration of the Biblical legend of Esther. The settings of the film have been executed in a masterly and imposing manner and the finished film promises fair to be the masterpiece of the Diploma Film Co.

* * *

It would be interesting to know what has become of the numerous patents taken out in Britain and America during the past two years in connection with talking pictures. The few of these that have reached the commercial stage, not more than half a dozen in number, so far as this country is concerned do appear to have been the success anticipated. In fact I do not know of a single exhibitor booking a repetition of any one of them although each process has had its round in turn. Evidently the British and Colonial Co. have an optimistic confidence in the synchronized film and gramophone for a new production of theirs, "The Taming of the Shrew," is to be presented through the dual medium.

Mexican Notes.

Chihuahua, Mexico, July 18, 1915.

CONDITIONS at the present, insofar as they affect the moving picture exhibitor in this country, vary with different localities. In that territory south of Zacatecas and along both coasts, conditions should steadily improve, while here in the north, conditons will probably become worse. The ill effects of successive occupations and evacuations of a city by loosely organized bands, are felt by all, and worse so by the exhibitor, whose business ally, we might say, is the great mass of peaceful citizens, whose interests are harmed by this constant warfare. With the transfer of the theater of war to the north, business here will undoubtedly suffer, and this, coupled with the very low value of the fiat money, does not tend to make exhibitors very optimistic. However, most picture men seem to think that at last the beginning of the end is in sight, which, being the case, is worth any sacrifice to secure.

A recent attempt by authorities to saddle on local picture shows a new tax, was defeated by exhibitors. The tax in question was based on a misinterpretation of the Mexican "Timbre" law, which assesses a percentage tax on sales, clearly meaning sales of merchandise only. Local officers construed this as applying to amusement enterprises, because, forsooth, they sold entertainment! The theater men took the matter up with Licenciado Francisco Escudero, Villa Minister of the Treasury, who ruled that under an edict issued by the old Diaz government, amusement enterprises were exempt from any direct federal taxation. At last! The theaters had, for a wonder, escaped one kind of taxation.

Briefs.

Robert Swain, manager of the Carpa Pathé, of Torreón, Coahuila, was in this city recently on business connected with that enterprise. Mr. Swain reports good business, but, like other Mexican picture men, complains of the high rate of exchange.

A rumor was current in theatrical circles last week that the Alcázar was to be sold. Upon investigation the rumor proved to be well founded. A group of Guadalajara amusement men are interested in the deal. They propose to change the house into a combination refreshment parlor, picture show and music hall, such as the Salón Rojo of Mexico City, and others found in nearly every South American city.

The Teatro Herrera of Torreón has definitely shut down. The Powers 6 A projector and the Gold Fibre screen have been shipped to this city and installed at the Cine Club. The Herrera was one of the largest picture houses in Northern Mexico, and its failure was due primarily to mismanagement.

A picture show has been opened at Cusihuiriachio, this state, and is doing splendid business. "Cusi" is the center of one of Mexico's richest mining districts.

A recent shortage of coal forced the temporary suspension for a few days of the local light and power plant. All the picture shows were dark during that time, that is, all except the Alcázar. Manager Fred Williams, ready for such an emergency, had installed a power plant and the Alcázar showed to packed houses.

In order to alleviate the sufferings of the many wounded now in the improvised hospitals in this city, arrangements are being made to give periodical moving picture entertainments. The programs at these shows will be made up exclusively of comedies.

"Seven Sisters"

Marguerite Clark Is Star in Famous Players' Production of Popular Play by Edith Ellis Furniss.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITH the always charming Marguerite Clark in the role of Mici, the fourth of the seven sisters, and a wealth of beautiful scenes to attract the eye, the photoplay adaptation of Edith Ellis Furniss's comedy should enjoy a fair measure of popularity. Lacking something of the humor that characterized the stage production, the Famous Players were especially fortunate in being able to offer compensating attractions in the winsome personality of Miss Clark and a thoroughly artistic production, directed by Sydney Olcott. The diminutive star has appeared in stronger stories, but whatever the picture's shortcoming in its entirety, there can be nothing but admiration for the interpretation given the delightfully mischievous Mici.

It may be recalled that the plot is based on an Hungarian custom that requires the marriage of the daughters in a family according to their age. In the instance of Mici, this is rather unfortunate, for her three elder sisters have failed to attract eligible suitors. They attribute the continuance of their spinsterhood to the annoying pranks of the younger sister and think to better their chances by packing her off to a convent. But Mici soon scales the convent wall and attends a masque ball where she meets a dashing young lieutenant. The vicissitudes in their love affair are many and varied, when Horkoy undertakes to find husbands for the marriageable sisters that objections to his wooing of Mici may be removed.

Ensuing complications are numerous and occasionally humorous, and at all times the picture is cleverly acted with a laudable effort to differentiate the characters. Miss Clark is supported in the principal roles by Conway Tearle, Lola Barclay, I. Feder, Jean Stewart, Edward Mordant and George Renevant.

Gest Returns from California

Says That Geraldine Farrar Has X-Rayed Her Soul in the Pictures.

MORRIS GEST, who is personal representative of Miss Geraldine Farrar, has returned from California, where the prima donna has been acting at the studios of the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company at Hollywood. Mr. Gest has been on the coast for nearly two months with Miss Farrar, and is enthusiastic over the pictures in which she appears. These pictures will not be released until October, but in the meantime a private view was held at Hollywood just before his departure. Arriving in New York, Mr. Gest had a long conference with Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Company.

"The work of Miss Farrar in the moving picture plays taken the last few weeks," said Mr. Gest enthusiastically in his office at the Princess theater, "promises to revolutionize the entire art of the moving picture world. They are unquestionably the greatest achievements yet accomplished for the screen. Her very soul has been laid bare in some of the emotional scenes. In fact, I may say that Miss Farrar has practically X-rayed her soul before the camera. She is simply a revelation of what an artist can do before the camera in the way of pantomime and facial expression."

Miss Farrar will remain in Hollywood until Aug. 10, when she will return in her private car and go to the mountains for a rest before beginning her concert tour in the Fall.

"The Toast of Death"

Four-Reel Mutual Masterpicture, by C. Gardner Sullivan, Produced Under the Direction of Thos. H. Ince.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

CHIEFLY remarkable for a marvelous interpretation of character by Louise Glaum and for both consistency and beauty of treatment, "The Toast of Death" shows high skill in methods of construction and is admirably typed. Berschell Mayall as Captain Drak and Harry Keenan as Yar Khan add materially to both the dignity and charm of the action, but Louise Glum's performance is one of rare fascination, where the actress fits the role as if she had been created for it, or as if it had been written with a dominant idea of giving her the opportunity of her life. Only once in a great while do we have the pleasure of watching such a harmony of natural qualification with its artistic means of expression, one in which there does not seem to be a jarring note.

While photodramas like "The Toast of Death" are far from attaining the ultimate, they are bound to rank above the average when there is sincerity and intelligence shown in all three departments of photoplay production, the creative, the directive and the interpretative. The melodramatic tendency of most of them can be softened, as in this case, by picturesque treatment and by one or more delightful personalities in the cast. The worst flaw of this one lies in its title, one so destructive of suspense that we soon know what the end is to be. Men so careful, so capable in their general work, should keep in mind that the title may count heavily against a picture that would otherwise keep people watching to see how it all turns out up to the moment of crisis. The feature will prove a winner in spite of its principal fault.

Might Have Been an Artist.

It is little known that Harry Myers, Director of the Victor Studio of the Universal Film Company at Coytesville, N. J., at one time thought seriously of pursuing painting as a life vocation. He has worked at various times in pastels, oils and water colors and in addition is a caricaturist of no mean ability. The peacock panels displayed in "The Prize Story" one of Mr. Myers productions is an excellent example of his artistry.

THE story of a girl in search of her ideal, published in book form by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., "Infatuation" is unique in portraying the girl's success through unswerving perseverence and dauntless courage. Her idol is shattered as a rule when she finds that it is made of clay, but so much depends upon her own character that she makes the most of the material in hand when, as in this case, it is in her to do so. Margarita Fisher interprets the role of a young and inexperienced heiress, who rejects suitors of social standing and runs away with an actor of talent somewhat prostituted at times by alcoholism. He has genuine ability, but is such a weakling in yielding to bad habits that his best expression of himself is made at one-night stands. He makes a conquest of the brave young girl while on his travels and induces her to elope with him.

She insists upon marriage, and he has no reason to regret his union with the plucky and persistent little morsel of affectionate femininity who loves him fondly from the outset. Her husband's career is seriously hampered by her own father. The latter attempts to bribe her to return home and her husband to give her up, but they two constitute an entire army entrenched securely in love, and the father's schemes are thwarted at a time when extreme poverty is trying the souls of the young couple beyond ordinary fortitude. The father finally capitulates out of sheer admiration for their powers of resistance, and he becomes their ally at a crucial moment. A good story, of hopeful theme, "Infatuation" should win.

"A Bunch of Keys"

Hoyt's Merry Comedy in Five Parts, by Essanay, with Wm. Burress, John Slavin and Jane Keith in the Principal Roles.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

A BUNCH OF KEYS" had a prolonged stage success in the days when Hoyt's plays were in high favor. Its many humorous incidents, of the slapstick variety, made former ardent admirers yell themselves hoarse; but that type of comedy has been imitated so often since then, with such astounding modern developments, that the present generation may show a tendency to look upon Hoyt's comedies as tame. Hoyt never permitted vulgarity or indelicacy in his stage productions, a something that redounds to his credit in these days of ultra liberties.

Essanay's production in films of "A Bunch of Keys" has the real Hoyt atmosphere. For me the five reels had very few uninteresting spots and many that evoked explosive laughter. To the excellent assignment of the characters in the cast is attributable much of the mirth that will be raised. Wm. Burress, as Littleton Snaggs, the designing old lawyer, who seeks to gain control of the hotel willed by their uncle to Teddie, Rose and May Keys; John Slavin, the steady beau of Teddie Keys, whose two sisters are trying to oust her from her share in the hotel; June Keith, as Teddie Keys, the tomboy and ugliest of the three sisters, and Wm. Castelet, whose side-splitting impersonation of Matilda Jenkins, the ancient widow who has been jilted by Snaggs, form a strong comedy quartet.

Indeed no one who sees these pictures can fail to wonder at the extraordinary athletic escapades of Burress, Castelet and Slavin. How they escape broken bones and other physical injuries will, perhaps, be lost sight of, because of the mirthful state of mind of the spectator.

Miss Keith, the clever little comedienne of the production, has done so well in the part of Teddie Keys that she has been retaind by Essanay as the new star of that company. The scene in which she throws old Snaggs into the fast-flowing river, and afterwards rescues him when he is carried down stream over a rushing cascade, will provoke boisterous merriment. Her quick changes from the character of Teddie to that of a domestic in the hotel and then to the role of a chipper young drummer prove her title to versatility.

Another strong point that will commend this Essanay production to favor is the care devoted to the settings. They are decidedly rural, as Hoyt intended them to be, and Essanay had the scenes taken in several small towns of Michigan, where the members of the company spent several weeks during the production of the comedy.

The main motive of the comedy is to defeat the scheming Snaggs from securing an interest in the hotel owned by the three Keys sisters. Snaggs is the executor of the estate and holds the will, but will not permit any of the sisters to read it. He falsely tells the sisters that the will contains a clause which reads: "The homeliest of the three sisters is to take possession of the hotel property, and the first strange drummer to arrive at the hotel is to decide which girl is the ugliest." This he has planned with the hope that Teddy, the ugliest, may take him for a husband, but she loves Grimes and will have nothing to do with the lawyer. In the long run it turns out that Grimes gains possession of the will and it is discovered that Snaggs lied, as a clause of the will reads that the sisters may divide the property equally if they care to. The final scene shows Snaggs, captured for life by the widow Matilda.

"A Bunch of Keys" will be released through V-L-S-E, Inc., Aug. 16.

Blanche Sweet a Vivacious "Becky."

The vivacious and high-spirited Blanche Sweet has found a role decidedly to her liking in the part of Dorothy in "The Case of Becky," the new production which carries the names of "Lasky-Belasco" as producers in which she is appearing before the camera in the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal. Edward Locke is the author of the play, Margaret Turnbull the scenario author and Frank Reicher, the producer.

In this production Miss Sweet appears as a young woman with a dual personality. As Dorothy she is sweet and good; as Becky she is ugly and wicked in appearance and temper. The reason for this human phenomenon is attributed to prenatal influence as her mother, who died when Dorothy was a child, had been the hypnotic subject of her father.

Ince Directing Orrin Johnson.

Orrin Johnson, the estimable Broadway star, has arrived at Inceville and begun work, under the supervision of Thomas H. Mr. Johnson is interpreting the difficult role of D'Artagnan, yet Mr. Ince has entrusted him with the task, in full confidence that by his supreme talents he will be able to do it justice.

"Shadows of the Past"

Four-Reel Edison of Fine Treatment and Exceptional Characterization.

AN old-fashioned story in many respects, "Shadows of the Past" is decidedly up to date in the way it is handled and distinguished for fine character of interpretation. Honors in this respect easily go to Bigelow Cooper as the elderly husband in high social standing united to a young and beautiful wife with a "past" that is successfully hidden during the better part of their wedded lives. Cooper gives a most dignified and consistent performance of his role, never for a moment intruding those little theatrical artificialities which marred his otherwise good playing some years ago. He preserves an "atmosphere" that gives plausibility to the tale and makes an impression that is bound to be humanizing in its effect.

Mabel Trunelle becomes the more attractive in personal appearance as the course of Time silvers her hair, and she is strong in the emotional scenes, but her role is a difficult one, not replete with opportunity, and it is overshadowed toward the end by the sweet compassion and true nobility of her husband. It is balm to our weary souls that those who err are not painted as creatures without redeeming traits of character, that they have it in them to pursue honorable lives and respond splendidly when circumstances permit them to do so. Most of us are tired of seeing women pictured as incurable weaklings, because we know that woman's weakness lies in her affections, themselves a source of strength under normal conditions. Marc McDermott is staggering as a one-eyed villain, and the rest of the cast is highly efficient.

"Marrying Money"

Excellent Comedy Picture Is Produced by the World Film Corporation With Clara Kimball Young as the Star.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"MARRYING MONEY" may be placed among the best of the recent stage comedies that have found their way into pictures. Director James Young, of the World Film Corporation, had a good story to begin with and he amplified it admirably, bringing in many incidental bits of business that combine the elements of freshness and humor. And to make the most of the incidents arising from the plot of "Marrying Money," he had in Clara Kimball Young, one of the few actresses whose gifts are such that she may turn from drama to comedy and score equally in either sphere. A more fortunate combination of story, star and production is seldom met in a feature offering.

The main thread of the play, written by Washington Pezet and Bertram Marburgh, has been followed with sufficient accuracy; but the scenes likely to be best remembered by an audience are due to the ingenuity of Director Young and the expressive acting of Miss Young, who handles subtle comedy with great adroitness. She makes Mildred Niles a young woman of charm and spirit, and what is more unusual in photoplay heroines, blesses her with an obvious sense of humor. Chester Barnett, William W. Jefferson and Winthrop Chamberlain are others in the cast that enters whole-heartedly into the spirit of the comedy action.

It is to the credit of the director that he avoided conventional methods in making his comedy scenes, and evidently aimed to close each reel with something of a climax, such as one expects to find on the stage. Many of the scenes are laid on or in the neighborhood of a beautiful estate that furnishes just the atmosphere needed for a fashionable hotel. It is here that Mildred Niles meets Ted Vandeveer, each believing the other to be wealthy. The story keeps building up a thoroughly humorous situation in which the couple elope, followed by the most antiquated of automobiles. After an expensive honeymoon they discover that their combined resources are insufficient to meet the hotel bill and are unable to leave until Vandeveer receives an unexpected fortune. The closing scene, showing the happy couple in an automobile drawn across a railroad track and blocking a train, is capital.

est in the character of the artist, who goes blind and suffers years of loneliness before the reconciliation with the wife who believed him to be dead. Stewart Baird, an actor of distinguished presence and a forceful method of emphasizing the dramatic moments in the picture, was a wise choice for Eastman. He dominates the scenes in which he appears and altogether gives a well balanced performance.

For the rest, it is an efficient company for a photoplay of feature pretentions, including Justina Wayne, Lowell Stuart, Orlando Daly, Helen Mulhuland, J. Arthur, Maud Granger and August Balfour. Miss Granger is especially successful in giving a telling character sketch of the embittered spinster, who begrudges others the happiness that she herself is denied. The story is clearly developed to show the influences working to separate Eastman and his wife, the most active of these influences being the ill-natured Hester.

In dramatic power, the production reaches its best moments in the final reels when the artist's son has grown to maturity and the runaway wife has married a wealthy man, believing that the death of her first husband has left her free to wed again. While there are few novelties in the development of the plot, it holds the interest, is logical enough according to melodramatic standards and rises to a genuine climax when Eastman and the woman who deserted him are unexpectedly brought face to face. The story is brought to a happy conclusion in the closing scenes.

"MY LOST ONE"

Villain Steals Musician's Wife and Then His Manuscript Opera—Happy Resolving of His Difficulties Follows.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS stolen musical manuscript situation has been used quite a number of times, as all know. This, in itself, means little; for the offering if newly worked-up and dramatically interesting, will go the better for that. "My Lost One" is worked-up freshly in a three-reel production by the Vitagraph; but it is weak dramatically and fails to make itself powerfully felt as a really live screen happening. The trouble lies in the method used in getting "freshness."

Scene from "My Lost One" (Vitagraph).

In the first place, the heroine is not, as is usual, a sweetheart, but the musician's wife. This is a step away from the melodramatic toward realism; but it is also a step away from entertainment; because it makes it harder to sympathize with even the hero to say nothing of the heroine. Then the punishment of the villain in this picture lacks dramatic sting. When it is brought home to him, by the confession of his go-between (the reason for which we do not know) that he is a thief, he is merely discharged in a meeting of the opera house's board of directors. If he had been pelted with eggs in the theater it would have been, not so realistic, but more melodramatically satisfying. A musician is not like a banker or an engineer. If he can make music, he needs no perfect reputation. This picture does not show us how the punishment was made to get under his hide. He is just a blocked out, melodramatic villain, not a human being.

In the picture conduct we find brilliant, telling moments rather than a continued and even effectiveness. For instance, that moment when the erring wife comes home to her sick and despondent husband, after the scene in the theater when he calls to her, she finds that the impresario had stolen the great opera that he is claiming as his own, and with impressive acting goes out to find and accuse the villainous thief. But there is nothing notably impressive in the way she confronts him. We also find that the supers often show an unconvincing deadness. Take that scene in the theater when the genius with his little daughter has come to hear his own music and sees his wife on the stage singing it. He makes a scene at which the audience around him, as he rises from his seat, takes little real interest in what he is doing till he falls overcome; then, as at a sharp command from the director, one and all rise as one and rush to him.

As compared with many pictures that this reviewer sees, this is a pretty fair offering; but chiefly because of lack of imaginative liveliness in the story, and also because of uneven direction of both the principals and the supers, it falls below the Vitagraph A standard and finds a sure place only in its C standard.

"MAX AND HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW."

Something Original in the Way of Two-Reel Comedy and Staged in the Swiss Mountains.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Pathe Exchange, Inc. has at least one comedy gem for its forthcoming program, and that is "Max and His Mother-in-law," a two-part production with Max Linder and two feminine members of the Pathe European Stock Company.

Max's mother-in-law, according to the picture, is very large and very fat, and very clinging. Max himself is somewhat small in proportion. Max's wife is a dutiful daughter, and insists on humoring Mamma's every wish, even to the taking her along as accessory baggage on the honeymoon, which brings them to the mountains, where skating, bob-sledding, and skiing are the chief methods of recreation.

There is a great deal to be told about what happened that really baffles description, and against which anything that the ordinary imagination could conjure up would fade into insignificance. The grand finale comes when Mother-in-law dons the skis, and son-in-law gives her a gentle (?) start down the incline. This once she is forced to take to the road alone. A road which ends after a leap over a housetop in almost complete, head-foremost immersion in a snow bank, with only a pair of fat lower extremities mounted by a pair of skiis to mark the spot.

Scarcely less amusing is the removal of Mother-in-law by Max and the faithful wife and daughter, from the snow bank to the railway train, which is at first believed to be the best method of transportation, but which is obliged to be supplemented by a horse tied to the rear end of the train, upon which Mother-in-law and one remaining ski are placed with much difficulty. And the end of it all is when the horse breaks loose and runs off with his burden to his stable.

"THE DAWN OF FREEDOM."

Fine Picturization for Pathe Exchange, Inc., of Story Based on Era of Strife Between Switzerland and Austria.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story from which this production was made was written by Walter Turczinski. The picturization is apparently true to that portion of the history of Switzerland which it is intended to portray, and has been developed in so thoroughly human a fashion that the appeal of the picture is universal. The heart of the ordinary individual goes out to the Swiss maiden Monica, whose bravery saves her former lover from death at the hand of an Austrian, and whose humanity reaching even further, saves the Austrian who has been wounded by her gun, from a counter attack by Peter the lover. Her battle with her passion for the Austrian kept a prisoner in her home is quite too human to be unattractive, and the romantic surroundings in which the play has been set, the quaintness of things and the softness and beauty of the photography displayed in the production are all a part of the almost unconscious appeal which the picture makes.

The fine characterization of the work of Turczinski has, it is true, given a large opportunity to the artists chosen to interpret the four leading roles; but it must also be acknowledged that to these artists and to the director is due the credit of an intelligent interpretation of the main idea, the uselessness of the hatred of nation for nation. The love story and its sad ending in the death of both parties only serve to emphasize in an individual way the fact in its larger application.

The production was made by the Messter Films of Berlin, and will be released in the near future on the program of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

American Correspondent Film Co.'s New Offices.

It is of interest to note that the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., producers of the famous A C F Real Life Pictures have removed from 30 East 42nd street to a fine suite of offices in the Candler Building, at 220 West 42nd street, sixth floor.

President M. B. Claussen is delighted with the new offices and was among the first to witness a trial movie performance in the firm's new gold screen show room. The staff of the A F C Co., both at Stamford, Conn., and the Candler Building are still alive with eager enthusiasm for the forthcoming public appearance of the greatest war feature of them all, the "Battle and Fall of Przemysl."

A second feature film entitled "Germany in War Time," showing the stupendous operations of the Empire and depicting the amazing preparedness of the Kaiser's forces, is also in process of development at the A F C plant and announcement of its release can be expected any day. An Italian frontier feature is also under way.

"The Last Drop of Water"

A One-Reel Biograph Re-Issue, Produced on the Great American Desert by D. W. Griffith.

This story was suggested by the lines to Sir Philip Sydney, who, upon the field of blood, dying, gave the last drop of water for the sake of brotherhood. That in itself is enough to make an interesting story for a one reel picture. Add to that, the many spectacular scenes enacted on the desert and the result is a Biograph picture that is well worth re-issuing.

Scene from "The Last Drop of Water" (Biograph).

In this picture, the hardships of travelling on the desert in the early frontier days is vividly depicted. The realism is convincing and the story is told in a manner which bespeaks the Biograph's policy to get as much action as possible in a one reel picture. It cannot be denied that there is, by far, more action in this one reel picture than one generally finds in a two reel picture nowadays.

For the big spectacular scenes we have an attack, by Indians, on a caravan crossing the desert, whom the troops disperse in a running fight. For the strong dramatic scene, we have two men on the desert in search of water. One has fainted from thirst when he is found by the other, who gives his last drop of water, and subsequently his life, in order that the other might continue in the search for water. Both are exceptionally well done.

Blanche Sweet plays the lead, with Charles H. West and the late Jos. Graybell sharing the honors. W. Chrystie Miller, W. J. Butler have small parts, while Mack Sennett is seen in the earlier scenes as an extra.

As a whole, "The Last Drop of Water" is on a par with "The Battle At Elderbush Gulch," "Fighting Blood" and "The Battle," previous Biograph Re-Issues.

"EVIDENCE" TO COST $30,000.

In adition to the $5,000 which the F. Ray Comstock Film Corporation paid for the moving picture rights of "Evidence," the play of English manners which is now being produced under the direction of Edwin August at the Kinemacolor studios at Whitestone, it is estimated that the finished screen drama will cost the company about $30,000. In one scene—a ball room scene—the entire cast of the Winter Garden will go to participate in the dance; also in that part of the picture which presents a wistful little allegory which Mr. August has written and introduced into the stage version of the play. Another of the scenes required for its correct setting an old fashioned English Inn. Since there were none to be found within easy distance, the director ordered one built on the banks of the Sound at City Island. When the scene was photographed, it took five minutes after the rehearsal had been completed. Many of the exteriors are being taken on the grounds of the estate of Commodore Benedict at Greenwich, Conn., where the company has been spending much time this last week. "Evidence" will be completed next week, but it will not be released through the World Film Corporation until September.

WALTER EDWARDS IN AN ALASKAN STORY.

Though it possesses an unusual title, "The $100,000 Bill," in which Walter Edwards next will be starred by the Domino-New York Motion Picture Corporation on the Mutual Program August 12, is expected to be acclaimed one of the very best melodramas ever made by the Thomas H. Ince forces. Supporting Mr. Edwards in the cast are Ethel Ullman, Leona Hutton, Lewis Durham and Robert Kortman. Mr. Edwards produced the picture from a scenario by J. G. Hawks and Thomas H. Ince.

COL. HEEZA LIAR FOOLS THE ENEMY.

Our funny friend, Col. Heeza Liar, in the forthcoming Pathe-Bray release "Col. Heeza Liar Fools the Enemy," invades the scene of war with some exceedingly laughable results. In war as in peace he is easily a champion fun maker. In this cartoon comedy we see him as war correspondent, dodging the shells as though he bore a charmed life. As a fitting climax to a number of startling episodes he out-Herod's Herod and drives the enemy from their trenches by a new kind of asphyxiating bomb.

BURNING OF BLOOM CENTER.

Rural Village Built by the Selig Company to Provide a Thrill.

BLOOM CENTER was the complete rural village erected by the Selig Polyscope Company, at Los Angeles, for the purpose of furnishing the locale for the "Chronicles of Bloom Center," a rural photoplay series, soon to be released. The village was erected at the cost of thousands of dollars. There was the general store and postoffice, the Methodist Episcopal church, the Melodion Hall, the barber and blacksmith shop—in fact every essential to make perfect the true rural hamlet that is so numerous in the Middle Western United States and which supplies the population that is the bone and sinew of Uncle Sam's Domain.

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center" is something different. The same characters disport themselves through the entire series, which consists each of a two-reel comedy. Home talent theatricals, the county fair, the "home coming" celebration, in fact everything that has attracted the attention of the ruralites figures in some way or other. Each picture play is complete in itself.

It was found necessary in concluding the "Chronicles of Bloom Center" to burn the village. The torch was applied, and as the villagers disported themselves after the manner ordered by Director Marshall Neilan, thousands of people formed an interested audience. The town pump was the only fixture that remained after the flames had gotten beyond control of the "Fearless Fire Fighters Company."

Burning of Bloom Center.

Colonel William N. Selig made a trip to the Pacific Coast to view "Bloom Center" before and after its destruction. He was present with a party of distinguished guests when the flames held sway.

"BOLD EMMETT, IRELAND'S MARTYR" (Lubin).

"Bold Emmett, Ireland's Martyr," is a one-act comedy drama, written by Sidney Olcott and produced by him among the hills and dales of old Ireland. The play is enacted during the stormy days when Robert Emmett tried vainly to free Ireland. It tells the story of a young Irish couple who became involved in the attempt at revolution and are saved through the intercession of a British officer, who had been shot in ambuscade, and whom they had nursed back to health.

In the cast are Miss Valentine Grant, Sidney Olcott, Laurene Santley, P. H. O'Malley, Jack Melville and Robert Rivers. The photography is superlative and some of the scenic environments are beautiful beyond description.

"WAKING UP FATHER" (MinA).

A lively farce results from the compromising actions of Jerry, the principal character in this one-reel comedy which will be released Thursday, Aug. 5, on the General Film program.

Jerry starts the ball rolling when, being hungry and without means to satisfy it, he enters a restaurant and while the attention of a diner—an officer—is distracted, pours a large portion of tobasco sauce into the unsuspecting cop's coffee. The "hot stuff" has its effect when the policeman takes a long draught, and just as Jerry hoped, the diner dances wildly from the place, leaving his full meal for Jerry's consumption.

Leaving the restaurant, Jerry proceeds aimlessly through the streets, and after several interesting interruptions, stops at a grocer's shop, where he obtains employment. The proprie-

The result of this action proves very disastrously for Jerry, who is in the end placed under the care of officers.

George Ovey plays Jerry, and he has the assistance of Goldie Colwell, Louis Fitzroy and Janet Sully.

ELSIE JANIS IN "NEARLY A LADY."

In presenting Miss Janis in "Nearly A Lady," Bosworth, Inc., offer a vehicle for her that differs from previous film subjects in which she has appeared, in that it affords her dramatic ability plenty of opportunities to assert itself, besides displaying her in many sparkling comedy situations. The subject is a romantic comedy-drama and various stirring scenes have been portrayed by Miss Janis in a manner that will even surprise those who are familiar with her wonderful versatility.

The background of the story offers the beautiful out-door country of the West as well as the polished society settings of the East and in staging this film the producers have taken particular pains to give Miss Janis the proper atmosphere in which to work. Some of the most elaboratae scenes were taken in the famous $250,000 swimming pool and palm garden of Edward L. Doheny's town house in Los Angeles. Many of the palms seen in the picture are importations from the Doheny plantation properties in old Mexico and have rare tropical beauty. Other scenes showing life on a big Western ranch display a striking contrast and lend a natural beauty to the play which greatly enhances its general merit.

In addition to giving the star particular opportunity to show her real worth as an actress, "Nearly A Lady," shows her in several new feats, including expert swimming, lariat manipulation and horse-back riding. A lariat dance by Miss Janis, which is embodied in the story, surprised even the cowboys who appear in the picture, as did several exhibitions with the rifle.

Supporting Miss Janis are such well known film artists as Myrtle Stedman, Owen Moore, Frank Elliott, Harry Ham and Roberta Hickman. "Nearly A Lady" will be released on the Paramount Program, August 19.

LILLIAN LORRAINE, THE NEW PICTURE STAR.

Lillian Lorraine, who is to star in the forthcoming latest Pathe-Balboa serial, "Neal of the Navy," was born in San Francisco, in 1892. Like a number of others of the popular stage favorites of the day, she made her debut before the footlights at a very early age, playing "Eva" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" when she was only four years old. Subsequently she took a child's part with a stock company at the old Central theater while attending the public schools. At the age of fourteen she left San Francisco for New York, just three months before the big earthquake. She obtained a small part in a musical comedy under Richard Golden almost immediately on her arrival. Her next engagement was with Eddie Foy in "The Orchid," half time in chorus and half doing a small part. Because of her striking personality Mr. Foy soon took her out of the chorus and gave her a song. The impression she made resulted in her being given an engagement in "The Great White Way," with Blanche Ring and Jeff De Angeles. Her first real chance came when she was engaged by Florence Ziegfeld to appear in support of Anna Held in "Miss Innocence." The next year saw a further advance in that she was featured in the "1909 Follies" with Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth. She remained with the "Follies" for the next three years, being starred in the "Follies of 1912" when Nora Bayes dropped out.

LEVERING, KNICKERBOCKER PRODUCER, IN PARADISE.

While filming the feature drama "The Tides of Time" for Knickerbocker Star Features, Joseph Levering, the director found himself doubly occupied in the Paradise scenes, for a crowd of about three hundred, a third of whom were children, gathered in the City Park to watch the process. While the crowd was orderly, it was necessary for the director to move the spectators for each scene and keep a good supply of guards and policemen on duty to prevent the paradise scene of angels being disturbed by the incoming of modern earth beings.

"THE CEREMONIAL TURQUOISE" (Reliance.)

Charles West is featured in the two-reel Reliance production, "The Ceremonial Turquoise," while the feminine lead is played by Irene Hunt. The noted Reliance-Majestic Indian players, Dark Cloud and Eagle Eye, have strong parts, too.

"The Ceremonial Turquoise" begins with a quarrel between Reinhardt, a German member of a jewelry firm, and his French partner, Du Boise, over the world war. After the quarrel the German is found murdered upon the floor. The Frenchman is arrested. Relations between the partners had been strained for a long time. Reinhardt had even broken off his daughter's engagement to Du Boise. Reinhardt had been murdered with a pair of desk shears which were found after the murder in the Frenchman's coat in the closet of the office.

Amy, the daughter, played by Irene Hunt, is convinced of the innocence of Du Boise. She finds that a case had been robbed of a valuable collection of turquoise. A minute examination by Amy of the floor discloses the presence of strands of coarse, black hair near the right hand of the murdered man. The hair had evidently been torn from the head of the murderer. She decides that it may be that of a Mexican or an Indian.

The girl's further inquiries develop the fact that the firm owns its private turquoise mine in New Mexico and that the taking of the mine from the Indians had caused rioting.

A clerk informs her that just prior to the murder a dark man of good appearance had looked over the stock of turquoise and had purchased a few small stones.

Amy decides to go to the mine in New Mexico. Here she finds the Indians holding a mysterious ceremonial in which the stolen turquoise are prominent as symbols. She is accompanied by the Sheriff and a posse. The Indians resist and take refuge in their adobe dwellings. They defend themselves with rifles. John Lubo, the half-breed leader of the Indians, played by Dark Cloud, is mortally wounded. He confesses to Amy that he murdered Reinhardt when the proprietor of the shop tried to interfere with Lubo's stealing of the turquoise.

This confession frees young Du Boise.

INDUSTRIAL FIRST ON SCENE AT EASTLAND DISASTER.

In less than fifteen minutes after the steamship "Eastland" with its thousanads of passengers aboard had tipped over on its side one of the Industrial Moving Picture Co.'s camera men was on the scene taking motion pictures of the event.

Harry Birch of the Industrial camera force followed the fire engine expecting to cover a fire. When he reached the scene it proved to be one of the most horrible catastrophes this country has ever known.

While a heavy rain fell throughout the entire day the picture shows exceptional photography. Every scene is very clear. In portions of it the heavy downpour of the rain can be distinctly seen. The detail of the picture is very sharp considering the conditions which the pictures were taken under.

The Chicago Tribune will release this picture and has offered to donate the proceeds to the relatives of the victims of the disaster.

"THE PURSUING SHADOW," ON LOEW'S CIRCUIT.

"The Pursuing Shadow," the first of Tom Terriss' productions to be released through the Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., has been booked by Loew's Circuit. The first showing of the picture in a Loew theater will be at the 59th Street Circle theater on July 30.

Picture Playhouse Film Company report a large demand for this production, as it is a highly artistic feature in every way and shows to a high degree the unusually good acting of Mr. Terriss.

"THE FAIRY FERN SEED" (Thanhouser).

It has always seemed quite proper to accord extended space to large productions, solely for the reason that their very magnitude warranted it; but it is not often that a one or two reel picture gets more than its proportionate share of space.

However, one of Thanhouser's recent two-reel films has been so favorably received that an additional bit of comment here at this time may not be amiss.

The title of this release was "The Fairy Fern Seed" and it measures up to what has come to be called a standard for short films of the better kind, solely because it does not falter in plot or action. Mrs. Thanhouser wrote the scenario, Carl Gregory looked after the photography, and Jack Harvey directed. Gregory's double exposure work in the second reel is quite unusual and exceedingly well done. This was Harvey's last picture before he joined the Universal's staff and he has left a splendid example of his painstaking work.

A capable cast, headed by Ethel Jewett, does some sincere work that gains in effectiveness as the story progresses. Miss Jewett, by the way, is showing a steady improvement in her interpretations. She seems to enter into the spirit of her parts as a real screen star should.

"JIMMY ON THE JOB" (Beauty).

The trials of an auto salesman when business is dull are set forth in "Jimmy On The Job," the newest American "Beauty" comedy drama to be released August 10.

Of course, these trials literally are surrounded with romantic adventure, thrills and laughs, or there would be no excuse for the story. Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell, famous as the stars in "Beauty" films, play the leads and are ably supported by Lucille Ward and a host of others. Jimmy Vernon, auto salesman, hasn't sold a car in weeks. He is summarily "fired." Then he meets with Mabel who wants Daddy to buy her a car. Jimmy, like funny old Abe Kabbible, proceeds to give sample rides. Meanwhile Jasper and his wife, have sold the hay and come to see the city's sights. They fall into the hands of "con" men and are only rescued, together with their bulging wallet, by the prompt arrival of Jimmy and Mabel.

It is a great day for Jim. He sells a car to Mabel and one to Jasper and is promptly reinstated in his job. Then he and Mabel blushingly admit that she is to become the Mrs. Jimmy.

"VICTORINE" (Majestic).

Dorothy Gish is presented in a decidedly novel comedy-drama and role in "Victorine," a Majestic two-reel production, featuring Miss Gish. "Victorine" is based upon Julian Street's well known story, "The Goings-On of Victorine." For its production Director Powell hired a circus, sideshow and freaks that all needful atmosphere might be in the picture.

Dorothy Gish in "Victorine."

Victorine is the performing partner of a knife-thrower in the sideshow. As such she is his animated target.

She is in love with the Strong Man. The Angel, who is a "nice boy" who has drifted into the amusement enterprise, worships her. He is clean and manly but Victorine has eyes only for the Strong Man.

The knife-thrower becomes drunk. The Angel forbids her to perform with the wielder of the knives. The Strong Man, however, locks up the Angel and orders the contrary. Victorine stands against the board background to allow, as usual, the knife man to outline her figure with knives thrown from a distance.

The man of knives being intoxicated, loses his skill and the girl barely escapes injury when the Angel who has freed himself interferes. He flings himself before the girl and receives in his body a particularly wild throw which probably would have maimed her. Of course the Angel does not die. Victorine and he find that their attraction is mutual.

Miss Gish is supported by Ralph Lewis as manager of the sideshow; William Hinckley as the Angel; Walter Long as the Strong Man and Mae Gaston as a tight-rope walker.

"WHEN LOVE IS MOCKED" (Selig).

The beauty of a picturesque French village, the trouble a worldly woman can make and proving the greatness of mother-love are all included in "When Love is Mocked," a Selig Diamond Special in three reels, released Thursday, Aug. 12, in regular service. Written and directed by Geo. O. Nichols, this Selig Diamond Special is pronounced by authorities as being one of the best dramas released in many months.

Almost every scene in this Selig Diamond Special is a perfect and beautiful picture. The interior and exterior scenes are carefully and wisely chosen and the views of the ocean are wonderful.

Anna Luther assumes the character role of a French woman who comes from Paris to a small fishing village, and wins the love of a young fisherman (portrayed by Eugene Pallette). Lillian Hayward plays the part of the young fisherman's mother, who plots to save her boy from the wiles of the worldly woman, and return him to his sweetheart, Yvonne. The final scenes in this Selig Diamond Special are of a most unusual character, the action being guaranteed to cause surprise to the most blase audience.

Champion Independent Exchanges

Standard Program Organizer Returns to New York from Western Trip with Contracts to Supply Every Territory Visited.

CONVINCED that individual exchanges allowed to operate without being dictated to by a governing body are in a better position to flourish than offices established throughout the country under managers selected by a parent organization, H. M. Warner, Secretary and Treasurer of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., returned to New York with contracts to supply the Standard Program to independent exchanges in every teritory visited during his two weeks' absence from New York.

"What appeals most strongly to the many film men with whom I discussed the program," said Mr. Warner while commenting upon his trip, "is the fact that the man handling Standard Pictures in every territory must necessarily be a responsible exchange man with his own capital invested in his own enterprise. This makes it incumbent upon him to deal with his patrons so as to give his business permanence by representing his goods exactly as they are and charging for them in accordance with their true value. In other words, he is not a manager drawing a fixed salary from some distant office, which is liable to shift him or discontinue his services at any time and is driving him continually to show immediate returns on the pictures forwarded to him. Upon his present dealings depends his future success as an investor and his reputation as a business man. Under these conditions he must demand productions that meet with the approval of the theater owners and he must charge for them according to their worth and without being controlled by prices fixed at some point where conditions are entirely different from those in his own territory. This compels him to exercise his best judgment in determining the needs of the theaters and causes him to use his best efforts to select the subjects that will help him to maintain a well balanced, high-class service."

"THE VAMPIRE" (Metro).

"The Vampire" will be Metro's release for Aug. 9, with Mme. Petrova in the star role. This is an original play by Lee Morrison and is produced by Popular Plays and Players. A sensational scene introduced shows an automobile running wild with three occupants. The car reaches the brink of a precipice and by its own great velocity is plunged over the precipice and falls 300 feet below, turning over in its descent. Two of the occupants are killed, while a third, Jeanne Lefarge—the role impersonated by Mme. Petrova—is seriously injured. Jeanne is taken to a hotel. In her convalescence she meets a married man and falls in love with him. He conceals from her the fact that he is not single and as his only chance of winning her is by marrying her, he does so illegally. The strength of the play comes when Jeanne is awakened to her situation. She decides then to avenge the wrong done her upon all mankind and becomes known as a vampire.

Seeking refuge in Europe, Jeanne meets in Paris a young attache of the American legation. With two men conspirators she secures from him important state documents. The young man being completely under her control, she is about to effect his ruin, when she finds she has fallen desperately in love with him herself. He is engaged to a fine young woman, but prefers to make Jeanne his wife. He argues with his father, who protests. When the father learns the woman is none other than the one he had married some years before and deserted, he denounces her as an adventuress. Jeanne wrings from him the admission before his son that he had shamefully wronged her. In pity for the boy, when she understands that he could not marry her with her past always before him, she accomplishes the difficult deed of reuniting the two young people, but not without great anguish of heart for herself. In the end Jeanne reforms.

"FATHER LOVE" (Komic).

Fay Tincher and Edward "Komic" Dillon's troupe of comedians turn to satire in "Father Love," a new Komic comedy. Miss Tincher is of course featured.

"Father Love" is laid long in the future when women rule in name as well as in fact. Archibald is an unhappy husband who is neglected by his wife. He is obliged to stay at home and wash the dishes and care for his child, while Frances, his wife, spends her time at the club.

Fay, the chauffeur, pities Archibald's neglected lot and tries to induce him to elope. Archibald, however, is faithful to his forgetful wife and refuses. Fay's pity grows deeper and deeper until finally she kidnaps Archibald in the family automobile.

At her club the wife hears of the kidnapping. She rushes to Archibald's rescue. Fay's machine breaks down and Archibald leaps out. Fay follows closely. Rather than allow himself to be kidnapped Archibald leaps into the ocean from a precipice. Frances, the wife, arrives in time to swim out and rescue Archibald. She realizes that he has proved himself a hero, according to the ideals of the time, and she tells him that she will not be so neglectful in the future.

Frank Darien is Archibald, the husband. Chester Withey is a servant of the new type. Olga Grey is Frances, the wife.

"THE CLIMBERS" (Lubin V-L-S-E).

In "The Climbers," the five part Lubin V-L-S-E feature, released August 2, adapted from Clyde Fitch's most celebrated play, in which Miss Gladys Hanson is introduced to the motion picture public. Miss Hanson shows such talent that she will be accepted by the public as one of the best of emotional screen actresses.

"The Climbers" will prove a winner. It is lavishly artistic in interior and exterior settings, and some of the exterior scenes are exceptional.

The final scene, with the beautiful background of white, snow-covered fields, is one of truly artistic foundations and furnishes a fitting finishing touch to a thoroughly artistic play.

Director Barry O'Neill has, throughout the five parts, given the public a fine picture, and the detail work is perfect, reflecting much credit to the director, the signal work between the daughter and mother in the scene during the reading of the will being a splendid touch of high society satire. Frenzied finance and disastrous results are vividly pictured in fine acting and beautiful settings.

A SCENE FOR "SEALED VALLEY" TAKEN IN IMPERIAL HOTEL.

One scene for "Sealed Valley," the Metro De Luxe release for next Monday, Aug. 2, was taken inside the Imperial Hotel, New York.

Some slight announcement was made in the local dailies that consent had been given by Willard P. Rockefellow, manager of the hotel, and the result was there were present numerous spectators.

Director Lawrence B. McGill had his men there with the lamps necessary for adequate illumination, the cables being attached to the house electric connections. Considerable time, almost an hour, was consumed in the preparations, with a throng looking on much interested. The placing of the lights, the arrangement of the furniture and the delay occasioned by waiting for a large bunch of American Beauty roses did not pall upon the spectators. They were so engrossed in the proceedings that time passed rapidly to them.

The Red Room of the hotel was selected for the picture and in one corner of the room the scene was staged. Two members of the company only were required for the picture, and the camera man finished his work in the short space of ten minutes.

The spectators were astonished that so much trouble should be taken for a single scene, but Director McGill, who intends that this Metro De Luxe release shall be a worthy one, has stopped at nothing to get just such locations and atmosphere as the play calls for.

"DREAMY DUD SEES CHARLIE CHAPLIN" (Essanay).

This is the funniest of all the "Dreamy Dud" animated cartoons drawn by Wallace A. Carlson and released by Essanay twice a month. It also is an excellent imitation of Charles Chaplin. Dud and Wag, his dog, stand longingly in front of a theater where Chaplin show is going on, but have not the price of admission. But a dime comes rolling Dud's way and he gets it down with one quick tackle. He and Wag then march into the show and see Chaplin go through his antics, which keeps them in a roar of laughter. Finally Chaplin is kicked by a mule with such force he is hurled against a church belfry, setting the bell to ringing. Then Dud rubs his eyes and finds his alarm clock is buzzing and it is time to get up and do the chores.

"THE SECRET ORCHARD," WITH BLANCHE SWEET.

Blanche Sweet, who is appearing as a star exclusively in the photoplay productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, has added to her list of notable characterizations another part, that of Diane in "The Secret Orchard," which is from the play by Channing Pollock, founded on the novel of the same name by Agnes and Egerton Castle. It will be released through Paramount Pictures Corporation on Aug. 9.

This is Miss Sweet's fifth appearance in Lasky productions,

Scene from "The Secret Orchard" (Lasky).

the others, in the order of their release through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, being "The Warrens of Virginia," a Lasky-Belasco production; "The Captive," "Stolen Goods," and "The Clue."

As the star in the play Miss Sweet will have the support of an excellent cast, including Miss Cleo Ridgley, who recently was engaged as a permanent member of the Lasky organization; Gertrude Keller, Cynthia Williams, Marjorie Daw, Loyola O'Connor, Edward Mackaye, Carlyle Blackwell, Theodore Roberts and Sydney Deane.

Daughter of one of the stars of the demi-monde, the heroine of "The Secret Orchard," carried from birth a hidden taint of character, the more concealed because of the contrasting sweetness of her nature and the beauty of her personality. From a convent, in which her mother had placed her as a child to escape the pitfalls of the Paris environment, Diane, the daughter, steps into the world ignorant of her hidden weakness. Innocently, she falls victim to the Duke of Cluny, whose wife, unknown to the Duke, subsequently takes the girl into her home. Recognition between the Duke and Diane is further complicated by a love affair between the girl and a young American naval officer. The subsequent stirring scenes are brought to a happy and reasonable conclusion.

CHAPIN, THE STAR OF THE LINCOLN CYCLE.

Some Remarkable and Authentic Anecdotes of His Impersonations of the Martyred President.

BENJAMIN CHAPIN, whose work has been followed by the leading men and women of America for the last fifteen years, is the man who was chosen by the Charter Features Corporation some three years ago to head the cast and lead the directorate staff.

Of Chapin it has been said by Major J. B. Pond, that his characterization has the quaintness of Rip Van Winkle and the dignity of Hamlet. James Huneker, perhaps the most noted critic on the stage and of art in the world today, has said that Chapin's Lincoln is a positive evocation of the great dead. "It is a remarkable assumption," says Mr. Huneker, "of an almost impossible character, dramatically speaking."

The story is told of Mark Twain, the beloved humorist, that some years before his death he was in company with Gen. Porter, the former Ambassador of France and a close friend of Mr. Lincoln's, while in the party also were Wm. D. Howells, the novelist, August Belmont, Robert Collier of Collier's Weekly and Clarence J. Mackay. The suggestion was made that the party go to see Chapin's Lincoln, which was then being shown at the Liberty theater, New York. All were willing but Mark Twain, who declared he did not want some young "buck" with fake costume and make-up to muss up his own mental picture of Lincoln. After the performance, however, Mark Twain asked to be taken behind the scene that he might meet Mr. Chapin and shake off the illusion which had taken him astorm. "I am very glad to meet you, Mr. President," he said. "You haven't changed much in all these years. You know, I think I know Lincoln better than before. I feel as though I spent an evening with him at the White House. Your Lincoln is a miracle."

Others who had known the President, himself, had been as much impressed by this almost uncanny re-vitalization of the President as Mark Twain. Gen. O. O. Howard once said, "I knew and loved Lincoln as my friend and commander, and when I saw Mr. Chapin's wonderful portrayal I was greatly pleased and deeply impressed by the reality."

Gen. Grant was once asked for a criticism from Mr. Chapin and his response was, "I have one criticism to make and that is your portrayal is not long enough."

Chapin's Lincoln is almost uncanny to behold. And yet, he does not picture the President with sobs alone. He has given to him all of the general humor that belongs to him in his own life. That sadly whimsical smile plays about Chapin's features as it did on Lincoln's face. The long gaunt body, the beautiful ugly features stand out in life from the pages of history. And young America and old America can behold its hero once more.

"THE PATRIOT" (Vitagraph).

"The Patriot," William J. Hurlburt's interesting story, which is being produced by the Vitagraph Company, under the direction of Theodore Marston, will employ scenes that go back to the time in early American history when the men wore beaver hats, swallowtail coats and tight-fitting trousers and the women crinolines, contrasting the coon skin caps and fringed coats of the pioneers, who blazed a hard-fought trail through the wilderness. A series of big scenes will take place in a log cabin, made to represent, as near as possible, one of the more pretentious cabins of the first settlers. A small army of men have been at work for the past two days erecting a typical log cabin in the Vitagraph Studio yard and its completion marked one of the most realistic bits of early Eighteenth Century architecture possible to imagine. The huge stone fireplace extending from floor to roof with its immense fire of blazing logs, chairs and tables with the natural bark of the wood from which they were fashioned and the variety of animal skins always a useful and decorative part of a pioneer's cabin furnishings, were distributed profusely over the walls and floors.

What is perhaps the best balanced cast yet seen in a Vitagraph Feature includes Charles Richman, Joseph Kilgour, Charles Kent, Arline Pretty, Rose Tapley and Bobby Connelly. "The Patriot" when completed will be released as a Blue Ribbon Feature in six parts.

ARNOLD DALY TO MAKE PICTURES FOR PATHE.

Pathe has just made with Arnold Daly a contract of unusual interest, arranging for a series of pictures to be known as the "Arnold Daly Series." The "Ashton Kirk" novels by John C. McIntyre will be picturized, and Mr. Daly will create a detective new to the screen and one which it is expected will be as famous as the great actor's "Craig Kennedy." The new character is to be known as "Ashton Kirk, Investigator," and will be carried through a series of adventures, each one complete in itself, and each to make a four-part feature.

Mr. Daly has assembled for his cast a number of well known players. Sheldon Lewis, late "The Clutching Hand" in "The Exploits of Elaine" and whose magnificent work in the fourteenth episode is still remembered, is one of them. Louise Rutter, recently leading lady with William Gillette, will have the feminine lead. William Harrigan, son of Edward J. Harrigan, and just returned from a two years' visit to Australia; Charles Laite, who has been in a number of Mr. Daly's dramatic productions, and Martin Sabine, leading man with John Drew and Maude Adams, are the others of this well balanced cast.

Mr. Daly is acknowledged to be one of the cleverest and most widely known men upon the stage. Through his work in "The Exploits of Elaine" he became a household word all over the United States. The Pathe pictures under his name should prove to be exceedingly popular.

STELLAR CAST TO BE SEEN IN "EVIDENCE."

For the production of "Evidence" into a motion picture drama, Edwin August, the director, has picked a cast which would assure the success of the most mediocre of plots. "Evidence," however, as it has been dramatized for the screen, is full of tense situations, of human touches, and as portrayed by a company of such splendid artists as Lillian Tucker, Haidee Wright, Florence Hackett, Richard Buhler, Richard Temple, Lionel Pape and Little Maurice Stewart it will without doubt be a most extraordinary production. Mr. August will play the role of Lord Wimbourne, while Miss Tucker will interpret the role of his wife, the Lady Una.

"Evidence," which was one of the popular Shubert productions at the Lyric theater, New York, during the past season, is being staged at the Kinemacolor studios in Flushing, and is being produced by the F. Ray Comstock Film Corporation. It will be released through the World Film Corporation.

THE D. D. SCREEN PAINT.

A preparation of interest to moving picture men is the D-D screen paint, which makes an absolutely opaque white screen, brings up the high lights and produces a sharp definition of the picture projected. It has been used at Keith's, Lamberts, Stanleys, Riverside Airdrome, Famous Players, and many other places with entire satisfaction. It will cover mirror and aluminum screens.

Practical movie men know that it is important to have a good screen as well as a good projecting machine. The D-D screen paint not only gives a clean screen, but saves amperage, does not turn yellow, peel or crack. Inquiries can be sent to the D-D Screen Paint Co. at 55 West 23d street, New York.

"CORAL" (Universal).

Marie Walcamp appears in new guise in "Coral," a Universal photoplay produced by Henry McRae from the scenario by Olga P. Clark. Although Miss Walcamp was known to possess much skill with the brush and crayon it was not even suspected, until Mr. McRae began the production of "Coral," that she had no little talent as a sculptress.

In the photoplay Miss Walcamp is cast as a little fisher maiden who was cast up by the sea with her mother after a shipwreck. She is adopted by an old fisherman and while playing on the sands shows her inherited talent as an artist by moulding figures in the wet sand. In these scenes Miss Walcamp actually moulds the figures herewith depicted. The statue represents her mother, who was drowned, and herself as a baby.

A New York millionaire becomes interested in the little waif from the sea, gives her an art education and after many complications and exciting adventures "Coral" and her benefactor are married. Through an old fashioned locket Coral learns that her father is the president of the art school at which she has been studying and an affecting reunion of father and daughter takes place as the last scene of the play fades out.

The play was suggested by Miss Walcamp to Director McRae while both were watching a sand sculptor on the beach at Coronado Beach. Miss Walcamp remarked that she thought she could do better modeling herself and after she had amazed the "professional" sand sculptor by her skill Director McRae asked Miss Clark, the third member of the party, to write a scenario around Miss Walcamp's talent. Work on the film began next day.

"SALVATION NELL" (California).

The California Motion Picture Corporation has just completed an elaborate adaptation from Edward Sheldon's "Salvation Nell," which is scheduled for early release throughout the country. The picture, according to reports emanating from San Francisco where the production has already been given a private projection for those most prominently identified with the trade on the Pacific Coast is a masterpiece in both story and direction.

Greater attention, say those who have seen the picture, could scarcely be given details than that accorded "Salvation Nell" by the producing company. An instance of the care taken in this respect is found in the Salvation Army scenes which, in setting, costume and general action, have been perfected through advice from the highest officials in the Salvation Army. No less care has been taken in the tenement scenes, both interior and exterior, which contribute largely to the production.

A feature of the picture which is causing favorable comment, because of its dramatic aptness, is the injection into the story of a number of scenes from fashionable Broadway cafes as a contrast to the squalor of the tenements.

Beatriz Michelena, who plays the part of Nell, has never had a role in pictures so well adapted to her versatile dramatic art. The intense situations of the play have given her an opportunity that has never before been hers since she first began to act for the screen. In arranging with Edward Sheldon for the picture rights to "Salvation Nell," it was specified that Miss Michelena, whose work Mr. Sheldon greatly admired, should take the title role.

FEASTER MACHINE CREATES INTEREST.

The Feaster no-rewind machine of Byron Chandler, Inc. was one of the exhibits that created considerable interest at the San Francisco Convention. As a direct result of this exhibit, the first installation of the device on the Pacific coast will be in the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal.

COURTLEIGH IN FIRST EQUITABLE RELEASE.

Although Walter McNamara, the well known author and producer of "Traffic in Souls" and "Ireland a Nation," as has been announced, is producing a special five-reel feature picture, "Human Cargoes," for the Equitable Motion Pictures Company, "Life's Crucible" is the first of the weekly offering of the new company which will be released through the World Film Corporation. The later five-reel picture is being staged under the direction of Isadore Bernstein, the recent director general of the Universal City, who has become identified with the Equitable in the same capacity in which he served the former company. The scenario was written by Marc Edmund Jones, the well known photoplaywright, who is coming to the Equitable as scenario editor, and its vivid portrayal of the regeneration of a renegade, with its underlying principles of natural science, will make "Life's Crucible" a drama of powerful interest to theatergoers of all classes. William Courtleigh, the popular star recently returned from a successful season with "The Song Bird" in Chicago, is being starred in this offering. Clara Whipple, George Soule Spencer and Roy Applegate, who will form the nucleus of the Equitable Stock Company, and Miss Orlo Lea and Miss Bessie Sankey are supporting Mr. Courtleigh.

John Ince, who has left Lubin to join the Equitable forces, will arrive in Flushing next week to begin the production of a drama entitled "The Cowardly Way."

"THE TIDES OF TIME" (Knickerbocker).

Knickerbocker Star Features present what is termed the most novel release of the month, entitled, "The Tides of Time." Mary Nash, the versatile Broadway star, is featured with a strong support in Harmon MacGregor, who has just closed a long and successful European engagement. Joseph Levering is the producer and Clarence J. Harris, author.

"Tides of Time" has a very general appeal, reaching not only those inclined to literature and art, but has a very strong popular appeal. It is founded on Poe's "The Conqueror

Scene from "The Tides of Time" (Knickerbocker).

Worm" and Shakespeare's "Seven Ages," both of which are used to enforce the dramatic elements of a modern drama.

Flattered by success and mastered by greed, Edmund Starks forgets the demands of the poor and needy, while Mary Martin, the laborer's "Mother" takes up the appeal of the unfortunate. Edmund Starks, enraged over threats of a labor committee, will not yield. "Mother" Martin tries to soften the old man, as a last resort, hands him the poem of Poe, "The Conqueror Worm," bidding him reflect on the part he is playing in the "Tragedy, 'Man.'" With a frenzied mind, thinking of the present events and the sentiments of the poem, he sees the incoming of the seven tides of life, and finally views the end of good and ill.

BELL MAKES ARRANGEMENTS FOR "PROHIBITION."

The three states of Indiana, Iowa and Wisconsin have been secured by the W. H. Bell Feature Film Corporation for "Prohibition," the picture that is causing widespread comment in trade circles throughout the country.

The Bell Company announces that they will handle this production in the three states as above indicated along their usual high class lines, inaugurated and carried on in connection with "The Christian," which they have thoroughly exploited in the Illinois field.

"Prohibition" is a six reel photo drama production of more than ordinary merit, and in addition to serving its mission as a powerful moral story it also carries an intensely interesting plot throughout.

Why Not Comedies?

V-L-S-E Thinks That Exhibitors Are Overlooking an Important Point.

CUSTOM and habit are blinding obstacles in the path of progress, and the men who make great successes are those who view these retarding forces with eyes protected by sound business reasoning.

Many exhibitors, through some mysterious form of psychological calculation, have persuaded themselves that the only class of feature that can be successfully offered as the main attraction must be the so-called "dramatic" subjects, overlooking, apparently, that the public spends money for laughter as well as tears. They say that comedies will not draw as well as dramatic subjects, yet there is nothing tangible on which to base their theory.

In this connection it is interesting to note that the four pioneer manufacturing companies (the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay), in producing features for the V-L-S-E Programme have included in their offerings a number of big comedies. These companies, since their inception have kept in touch with the public fancy, and the fact that they have produced big comedies may be accepted as proof that there is a public demand for multiple-reel comedies.

Broadway, New York, is the barometer of all things theatrical, and it is worthy of note that recent theatrical history bears out the judgment of the Big Four. During the past two theatrical seasons, four gigantic successes stand as phenomenal box office attractions, and these four successes are comedies, namely, "Potash and Perlmutter," "It Pays to Advertise," "Twin Beds" and "Chin Chin."

"Potash and Perlmutter" ran for fifty-two continuous weeks, a record for theatrical offering in recent years. In addition to the New York engagement, four companies were continuously on the road, and for the season about to open it is reported that the number of companies will be increased.

"It Pays to Advertise" has now played forty-eight weeks, and is still running, and the producers are out to exceed the "Potash and Perlmutter" record.

"Twin Beds" has now played for fifty weeks, and is still running.

"Chin Chin" played thirty-nine weeks, closing only for the hot weather, and will open again in August to continue its New York run.

If the public will patronize a comedy on the speaking stage, there is no apparent reason why they will not be attracted by a comedy on the screen.

SENSATION IN "A WOMAN OF THE WORLD."

With a crowd of several thousand people and a couple of hundred automobiles, Riverside drive last Saturday experienced a sensation such as it has seldom witnessed before.

The occasion was the destruction of a high-powered Losier automobile by the Terriss Feature Film Company. The scene caused a great amount of curiosity among the residents and tourists of the Drive, as it was during the busy hours of Saturday afternoon, and many have been the inquiries since as to "what was the cause of the horrible accident," and "how many lives were lost."

The scene from the picture was taken from the successful English play, "A Woman of the World," which Mr. Tom Terriss has been producing for his company.

TWO FORTHCOMING BIOGRAPHS.

"Serge Panine," crowned by the French Academy as a story which reveals the most intimate study of human nature, is announced for early release as a two-reel Biograph.

The author is Georges Ohnet, a famous man of letters, who was so strongly opposed to the so-called "realistic" novel that he wrote a dozen masterpieces to prove his case. Perhaps the most popular of his works in this country is "The Iron Master," which had a phenomenal run on its first stage production. "The Iron Master," it will be recalled, was released as a two-reel Biograph some months ago.

Another of Ohnet's works, and one of his latest, is soon to be released as a three-reel Biograph in the series including "Jane Eyre," "Under Two Flags," etc. The title is significant—"The Soul of Pierre." Many critics believe that for dramatic power, arising out of human relations such as are commonly experienced, "The Soul of Pierre" surpasses even "The Iron Master" and "Serge Panine."

Several scenes in Essanay's six act photoplay "The Blindness Of Virtue," were taken in London, in order to make the drama as realistic as possible. The play, by Cosmo Hamilton, has an English setting. The majority of the scenes, it was found, could be duplicated in this country, but there were others showing London streets which it was impossible to get except on the spot. George K. Spoor, president of Essanay ordered these scenes taken at the exact places represented in the play. This great moral photoplay which features Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn is released through the V-L-S-E Inc.

John Thorn has recently made his appearance in photoplays with the Essanay company. He was well known on the stage in "The Little Shepherd Of the Hills" and "Maggie Pepper" and other plays in which he took prominent parts. His first photoplay was 'The White Sister," in which Viola Allen is featured.

* * *

Riley Chamberlin, the Falstaff comedian carries a dandy plot through by his good work in "P. Henry Jenkins and Mars." He plays a much hen-pecked person who suddenly gets sand in his spine and begins a table turning process that's full of situations for his clever work.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD 17 Madison Avenue, New York

Canada Wants War Films

Pictures of Real and Officially Vouched for Events, Troops, Fighting and War's Devastation Eagerly Watched by Audiences in Ontario—Stories of Battles Long Ago Also Liked—Films Showing Canadian Troops Especially Desired.

By Carl J. Ketchum, Ottawa Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WAR pictures are demanded in Canada. Not only views of soldiers of the fighting nations on their way to the firing line and scene of devastated towns and villages in Belgium and France are welcomed by managers, as everything in this line is, when accompanied by the official stamp of genuineness, but stories wherein war and soldiers are involved. Some splendid pictures have already been turned out by American film concerns, proving great attractions wherever shown, but, of course, nothing depicting the German in any light, will be passed by the censors.

Success has evidently attended the efforts of several of the big American companies in the matter of obtaining officially endorsed pictures of some of the actual fighting, but managers here are reluctant about taking anything without the stamp of the authorities in England and France, and insist on waiting for the real war pictures. In the meantime, however, Canadian troops will not be flashed on the screen without good audiences, and pictures of British, French and other Allied troops in camp or on the march are filling up the picture houses.

Stories touching on war and in which the leading characters are in uniform are what managers are asking for. Scores of pictures have been shown here during the past few months of stories of the time of the American Revolution, and have taken exceptionally well.

"LEGITS" CLOSING UP.

In Ottawa, as well as in many other leading Canadian cities, the legitimate theaters are closing their doors. The picture show literally predominates for the present. Whether it is only on account of the war and the general financial stringency prevailing, the future will have to decide, but just now the public seems to be satisfied with the class of entertainment provided at the moving picture houses.

Every legitimate house in the Capital is now dark. The Dominion, running stock, was the last to close, giving a farewell bill last week. The Russell theater and others have been in darkness for months, with the exception of a few occasions, for patriotic concerts, and it is not probable that any attempt will be made on the part of proprietors to do any business until after the war, anyway.

Four or five new picture houses are going up in Ottawa at the present time and managers are all well satisfied with the way everything is going. The conditions in Ottawa are quite the same as have been reported from other parts of the Dominion.

NEW BROCK MANAGEMENT.

The management of the Brock theaters in Ottawa, including the Family, Imperial and Francais, the three largest houses in the city, is now in the hands of Mr. Errol Elting, formerly of New York, and for some years associated with American stock concerns. Mr. Elting is well known in Ottawa, having successfully run the Roma Reade Stock productions here for more than a year. The management of the Brock theaters in this city is his first venture into the moving picture business and he finds it very interesting work. The success with which he has thus far met should be very encouraging to him.

THE WEEK IN OTTAWA.

Seventy tenders all told were received by Mr. Ken Finlay, chief director of the new Regent theater, now under construction, when the date closed this week for receipt of prices on the work. The theater will be the largest in Ottawa and with the property will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000.

Henry R. Brock, general manager of the Brock theaters, was in Ottawa this week, accompanied by Mr. W. Michaels of Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Brock was very favorably impressed with conditions locally, and after a few days' visit left the city with Mr. Harry Brouse, a local member of his company, for a tour of inspection of his chain of theaters.

Mr. George Rotsky, representing the Mutual Film Corporation, was in town this week, staying at the Chateau Laurier. He is booking the well-known serial "The Diamond from the Sky." With him was Mr. Paul Disler of Montreal.

INDIANA SUNDAY SHOWS MAY BE OPPOSED.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

THERE is a movement on foot in Anderson, Ind., among the ministers and their supporters to prosecute the exhibitors there for Sunday opening. Prosecutor Brooks has refused to file affidavits against them for violation of the law. All the houses were open last Sunday from 1.30 to 6 p. m., no night shows in competition with the churches being held.

James Alcorn, Greensburg, Ind., saw the city council first, and explained his purpose with their permission to run two of his houses, one an airdome, on Sunday. The city council interposed no objection and the shows were duly held. Alcorn said that there would be no shows in conflict with church hours, and he kept his word, running only in the afternoon. The Church League, hastily organized, promises trouble.

AMATEUR CHAPLINS ARE FUN MAKERS.

Imitations of Charley Chaplin are in order in the Hoosier houses. The Grand at Kokomo started it and the English at Indianapolis gave it impetus. Now on amateur nights a prize for the best imitation is bidding fair to become common and in either event the amateurs furnish a lot of fun. Black tooth-brush mustaches, decrepit derby hats and spineless bamboo canes are in demand. Lee Miller, at the English, Indianapolis, said, after his experience, "If you want to start something put on a Chaplin amateur night." Incidentally Chaplin nights pull well at the box office, as the two pioneers in the Indiana movement have found, and the real Chaplin is enjoyed all the more.

OTHER INDIANA FLICKERS.

Phil Worthen, operator at the Star, has changed to the Orpheum, Hartford City, Ind.

After being closed for remodeling several days, the Lincoln theater, Valparaiso, has reopened.

Now the Indiana small towns who want to put on free shows on the public square to attract crowds are being accommodated by a traveling equipment of four reels. The merchants bear the expense.

More than 100 babies were entered in the Idle Hour theater baby contest at Upland, Ind.

Jacob Cronbach has started a picture show at Sherburne Park.

The Odd Fellows of Clarksburg, Ind., have started a show.

Dart Leming is building a new theater in Topeka, Ind.

The Lyric, Connersville, is closed ten days for improvements. It is understood a new front wall will be put in and a number of other features added. A new ventilating system is to be put in and new decorations.

The Crystal is the name of a new house being built at New Richmond, Ind.

Tired of promises, the Vevay, Ind., people are threatening to start a stock company to finance a picture theater.

M. Switow and James H. Button of Louisville and Louis Zoller of Chicago have taken a twenty-year lease on the Majestic, Evansville, and will make a vaudeville picture house out of it. Improvements amounting to $20,000 are announced.

Wilber Fiske has taken hold of the Irvin theater, Winchester, Ind., and will open with pictures.

The superior court at Ft. Wayne has ordered the Minuet theater to quit. About $300 due employes in wages will be paid in receivers' certificates.

Herman J. Arnold and Herman Becker have bought the Lyric, Vincennes, from Lawrence O'Donnell. Mr. O'Donnell has business interests for his father which will force him to leave Vincennes. Mr. Arnold was manager of the Lyric for several years, and prior to that managed several of Menlo E. Moore's theatrical companies.

B. Herman Ridder of the New York Staats Zeitung lectured at the Lyceum, Indianapolis, in connection with a showing of German war pictures.

The Orpheum, Evansville, Ind., is giving souvenirs at all matinees through the summer months.

M. I. Wohl filmed the Liberty Bell day celebration at Gary, Ind.

The Tell City, Ind., opera house will be opened as a picture show after the revival services now being held are ended.

E. P. Fuller of Bicknell, Ind., father of C. P. Fuller, original owner of the Angela, will hereafter manage the Angela.

The Majestic, Cannelton, Ind., opened again Saturday night after being closed for a few weeks. W. C. Conway is the new manager.

V. S. Ralston contemplates opening a show in New Corydon, Ind.

Maranda McCabe, Logansport, Ind., has been declared insane. She thinks she is queen of the movies, whatever that is.

Ballard & Sons new airdome, Whiteland, Ind., opened to a good crowd, the tent walls being taken down to accommodate the overflow.

The Majestic, Spencer, Ind., gave away copies of the Photoplay Magazine as souvenirs at a recent exhibition.

The Indiana Daily Times-Essanay contest to name five young women to take parts in a special scenario, "The Market Price of Love," has been closed and the winners are Thelma Haugh, Hazel Hinchman, Faye Jones, Elsie Mobley and Lena B. Jones. The photoplay was written by W. W. Farmer of Anderson, Ind., also in a contest.

The Duplex Moving Picture Machine Company, Indianapolis, has incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, announcing a purpose to manufacture and sell moving picture machines. H. E. Petty, J. McFeely and O. P. M. Davis are directors.

W. R. Wilson, running an airdome at North Vernon, Ind., is now using the Universal program.

George Killen, owner of the Crystal, Ft. Wayne, also is using the Universal.

The Flying Eagle Film Corporation, Indianapolis, capital $10,000, has been organized, according to announcement, to manufacture and produce photo plays. The directors are George J. Sailer, P. G. Cody and V. E. Burris. Several actors and actresses have been engaged and the first feature, "The Country Boy's Triumph" by Virgil E. Burris, a director, is to be produced without delay.

JACKSONVILLE NEWS LETTER.

By J. Melvin Andrews, Jacksonville, Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Republic theater, which a short time ago changed its policy from feature pictures at ten cents to second-run licensed at five, has again changed its program to the United Service and will continue to run at five cents. Mr. Harper, who has been resting up since breaking his arm the first day after taking over the Republic, is now able to be out and has installed an electric piano in the lobby of this house, which seems to help some.

The Prince theater, J. H. Whitney, manager, starts next week with Universal service. This house has for the past year been running Paramount service to a very good advantage, but had to return to the Universal, on account of the New Arcade, which belongs to the same firm, opening with Paramount and feature pictures.

The Imperial now has three feature days out of each week which are certainly getting results. "The Goddess" in connection with the Kalem Broadway Favorites on Monday and the Blue Ribbon V-L-S-E on Thursday and Friday. "The White Sister," the last of the Blue Ribbon series, played to wonderful business this week. The singing attractions at this house are always up to the standard and are good drawing cards.

The Keystone Charles Chaplin pictures and the free round trip ticket plan under the management of Mr. W. L. Whithead has certainly put the Grand back on the map in the last few weeks, which verifies the old statement, "give them what they want and they will come."

Carl C. Smith, formerly manager of the Republic theater here, but who is now with the Southern Film Corporation, has returned from a tour of the state and reports things in a deplorable condition. Mr. Smith advises that the combination of hot weather and the excessive rains we have been having through the South for the past few weeks is responsible. Mr. Smith will be in the city for a few days, then will make an extended trip through Georgia.

The Pastime, which closed its doors a few weeks ago, will open again soon under new management with pictures and musical tab shows.

The New Arcade theater will open its doors informally Monday at 2 o'clock, invitations to the public have been extended and refreshments will be served, with music by the eight-piece orchestra.

The Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce has now in preparation plans whereby they will extend invitations and inducements to producing companies to locate in or around Jacksonville for the coming season.

Free musical concerts and moving picture shows in the local parks are becoming quite popular with ladies and children, thousands turning out twice a week.

Harry Milarde of the local Kalem studio has completed his first picture entitled "The Artist." This is Mr. Milarde's first picture since being promoted to managing director of the local studio, and from all reports "The Artist" will be up to the standard in all respects. Mr. Milarde has many friends in Jacksonville who are interested in his work and will be glad to know that he is successful as a director.

KANSAS CITY ITEMS.

The Kansas City Board of Health have purchased an educational film which the following theaters have agreed to run, dealing with the care necessary to insure pure milk.: Broadmour, Broadway, Benton, Gillham, Ellsworth, Tamar, Emerald, Bonaventure, Colonial.

William A. Andlaur recently bought the Benton theater from A. D. Flinton, trustee for David Mayer. The building is one of the best in the city and the theater one of the most up to date in the city. The purchase price was $5,000. Mr. Andlauer formerly owned the Warwick and Bonaventure theaters here and the Orpheum theater at Topeka, Kan.

IN JOPLIN, MO.

E. D. Nix, formerly of Joplin, Mo., recently returned to the city both as a manager and an actor. He brought to the Club theater the picture, "The Passing of the Oklahoma Outlaw." Mr. Nix also is one of the actors in the picture, owing to his activities in the capture of the Doolin-Dalton gang while United States Marshal of Oklahoma. Mr. Nix has with him one of the bandits of the gang known as "Arkansas Tom," who was sentenced to the penitentiary for 50 years, but served only seventeen, as he was pardoned by the government for good behavior.

Outlaw Films in Kansas

Censor Has Required All Film in State to Be Officially Viewed by Early Date With Penalties for Disregarding—George Magie, of Universal City, Points Out the Injustice of the Order—What Censorship Is Costing.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

GEORGE A. MAGIE, field manager of the Universal Film Company, visited Kansas City recently and made public a few figures on the Kansas censorship. It happened, luckily or unluckily, that Mr. Magie was in Kansas City at the time that Mr. Ross of the Kansas Censorship Board sent out his official notices that all the films in the State of Kansas had to be censored by some near future date. This got down deep under the skin of Mr. Magie and he made a brief visit to Mr. Ross at Topeka, Kan., to tell him why he should not do this. Mr. Ross referred him to the attorney-general, who upheld Mr. Ross in expelling all films from the State that had not been reviewed by the censors.

Mr. Ross believes that it is possible to collect all the films that are now circulating in the State of Kansas and send them back to the exchanges. The law does not apply directly to the film exchanges, but it does to the exhibitors and anyone showing the uncensored films in his theater after this date is subject to arrest and a fine of from $25 to $100 for the first offense and a fine of not less than $100 for each succeeding offense.

It is absolutely impossible for companies with several thousand films circulating through the state to bring in these films at an early date. If they should try to do so they would lose thousands of dollars in bookings waiting for them to be censored, to say nothing at all of the expense of shipping them back to the Kansas City office and then shipping them to Topeka and then back to Kansas City again before being able to put them into service.

The attorney-general, Mr. Magie says, almost promised that there would be no test case made of the matter by arresting any of the exhibitors as they greatly wanted to avoid such a thing. From this it is thought that the State of Kansas regards the censorship as one of the greatest money-making laws that they have ever passed and that they are afraid of losing the law and for this reason will neglect to discover any of the exhibitors showing uncensored pictures.

The Universal Film Company has sent out notices to all its patrons in Kansas that under the ruling of the Kansas law and the Supreme Court the exhibitors will have to pay to have the films censored. They will have to pay the exchange at Kansas City ten cents a reel in addition to the regular booking fee, to cover the censoring cost. This was suggested as the correct method for the film exchanges to adopt, in the statement of Attorney-General Dawson of Kansas before the Supreme Court during the test of the law by the Mutual Film Corporation.

It is thought that nearly all of the Kansas City exchanges are going to do the same thing that the Universal Company has started. The Universal Company has had rubber stamps made which they are already applying to the contract blanks, giving the exhibitors notice that the plan will be in force after July 26.

According to Mr. Magie the film exchanges of Kansas City have been losing a great deal of money since the law of censorship went into effect. The release dates of the films have been shot all to pieces. The exchanges here receive their pictures only two or three days before the release dates. They then have to pay express to Topeka, two dollars censorship fee, express back, and receive the pictures from one to ten days after the release dates have expired. Exchanges are losing from $5 to $6 a day on the small pictures and as high as $30 and $40 a day on the features. This totals up into the thousands of dollars in a very short while.

Since the twelfth day of April, 1915, when the law went into effect, the State of Kansas has become about $3,700 richer than it was theretofore. The State has taken in censoring fees amounting to a great deal of money, and it has cost approximately $65 to $70 dollars a week to censor the pictures—a big profit.

Mr. Magie says that it is impossible for all the pictures to be expelled from the State before any early date and although Mr. Ross has not yet set a date, he has sent out notices that he will soon do so. Possibly it will be about August 15. According to most of the exchanges here they will make no attempt to bring their pictures in to comply with the law, but let the matter rest entirely with the censors and exhibitors.

WICHITA HAS 10 CENT HOUSE.

Though this city has the reputation of being "the cheapest town in Kansas" in respect to the moving picture business, a new entry into the field is charging ten cents every afternoon and evening, and "getting away with it" in great shape. This brave exhibitor is Stanley Chamber, manager of the Princess theater, a house which runs vaudeville during the winter, but which has now adopted a picture policy during the summer.

Manager Chamber is running features from the V-L-S-E, Mutual, Metro and Fox. He has a five-piece orchestra, which also helps to the attitude of high-class entertainment. To assist in justifying the price of ten cents, Mr. Chamber has adopted the following slogan: "A program built up to a standard, not down to a price." The business during the summer has been very satisfactory and up to all expectations, Mr. Chamber reports.

WICHITA THEATER NOTES.

Arthur Ford, manager of the Marple theater at Wichita, is still strong for Serials. He runs the "Black Box" two days a week and the "Exploits of Elaine" two days. He has set his screen back four feet and built a five-foot shadow box. The result of this change, he says, has been to improve the appearance of his pictures one hundred per cent.

Chas. McCollister, manager of the Star theater at Wichita, reports great success with the Pathe "Who Pays" series. He says that this series is one of the best sets of pictures that he has ever put on the screen. The theater has been crowded at each installment of the serial.

After running a short time with a regular program, J. Fox, manager of the Holland theater at Wichita, decided that a feature program was the best. The consequence was that he began running Paramount four days a week, and Kleine two days. Mr. Fox has made several changes in the appearance of the theater; last but not least of these was putting up several oil paintings of Paramount players, which have added greatly to the attractiveness of his lobby.

Don Powell, manager of the Colonial theater at Wichita, has redecorated the front of the playhouse, and has added several hundred new lights. The house is now painted a cream color and is decorated in white. In the evening with the illumination it is very attractive.

William Berry, traveler for the Metro Pictures Inc., paid Wichita a short visit recently. Mr. Berry was formerly an exhibitor in Wichita, and has many friends among the theater men there. He reports a very good business.

Censors in Louisville

Coming of the Universal Feature Attraction, "The Hypocrites," to the Alamo Causes Fear Lest It Prove a Call for Local Censorship—Manager Dittmar Refused to Book It for Majestic—Made Good Impression Elsewhere.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IT is quietly intimated among exhibitors of Louisville that care will have to be taken or Louisville will shortly be another city which will be forced to work under the dreaded censorship board arrangement. The talk was brought about when announcement was made that the Alamo theater would run for one solid week the Paramount feature "The Hypocrites," in which nakedness appears to be one of the main attractions.

The Majestic theater, of Louisville, is the Paramount feature house and this theater of course had the first chance at the picture. L. J. Dittmar, manager of the theater, was afraid of the picture and he called a few leading citizens, including ministers together to see an exhibition run. It was decided that the picture would not be shown at the Majestic theater, and afterward it was booked at the Alamo.

It is generally considered doubtful whether the authorities and vice commission will stand for the picture, and it is probable that it will be shut off in short order. If it is allowed to run for the week it might cause a great deal of unfavorable comment which would work to the detriment of the business, and probably wind up in censorship. Yet the picture has been highly praised by ministers of the Gospel in other places. There is good publicity in the situation.

Films at Fountain Ferry Park.

One of the most interesting developments in the moving picture business of Louisville is a rumor concerning the installation of free motion pictures in the main park at Fontaine Ferry. It is understood that a screen will be arranged near the band stand and that pictures will be operated free of charge or rather will be part of the program provided after paying the gate admission of 10 cents. Harry Bilger, manager of the park, was formerly manager of the old Hopkins theater, one of the most successful of the early picture houses of Louisville. Mr. Bilger recently engaged a 30-piece Hawaiian orchestra which took the place of a 21-piece orchestra which had failed to draw.

Father's Night at Airdome.

"Father's Night" is a unique feature which has been arranged for at the Woodland airdome by manager J. Johnson Musselman. On Father's night, which falls on Tuesday, arrangements have been made whereby a couple of good second or third class professional wrestlers appear and go at each other for the best two out of three falls. Between 1,500 and 2,000 people were present at the first performance and it is felt that no trouble will be experienced in holding the attendances to this figure, as Louisville is wrestling and boxing mad.

ABOUT LOUISVILLE.

Starting with July 15, weather conditions have been far better in Louisville than they were, and the airdomes are now doing better. The Cherokee and West Broadway airdomes of the Sanders Amusement Company resumed operations after being closed down for a while during bad weather, and it is understood that the Germantown Amusement Company will also reopen its airdome at once, although it may only run two nights a week unless the weather is right.

"Billy" Drollinger, who owns state rights on the films "Evangeline," "Satan" and "Was He a Coward," believes in a great deal of publicity for his films, and he is seeing that his exhibitors get it.

R. W. Conant, manager of the recently incorporated Children's Feature Film Company, reports that the stock is about subscribed, and that he expects to leave for New York inside of a few days. While East Mr. Conant will close deals with distributing companies to handle the output of the company, and arrangements will be made with publishers for rights on several interesting stories.

Mr. Bryant, of the Criterion Film Service Company's Indianapolis office, was in Louisville recently and called on a number of the local exhibitors.

Louisville exhibitors were glad to hear that R. S. Shrader had become manager of the Cincinnati office of the V-L-S-E. Mr. Shrader was formerly manager of the Louisville office of the Central Film Service Company and later with the Indianapolis office of the World Feature Film Corporation. While in Louisville he made a large number of friends who are considerably interested in "Bob's" welfare.

Edward Bramble, of the Blache Film Service Company's Indianapolis office, was recently in Louisville.

Judge W. Allen Kinney, manager of the Star, Orpheum and Casino theaters, of Louisville, has gone east to spend a few days in New York

L. J. Dittmar, manager of the Majestic Amusement Company, has returned from a business trip to Chicago, where he called on some of the film men.

It is rumored that a movement is under way to remodel the old Portland Opera house and start a first-class suburban motion picture theater.

Ruth Cummings, who had charge of the office at the S. & P. Film & Supply Co., is spending the summer at Fontaine Ferry Park, where she is acting as cashier and looking after the interests of Charles Pressy, of the S. & P. Co.

The Paris Opera House Company, of Paris, Ky., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000 by Earl Ashbrook, the George Alexander estate, C. M. Clay, S. D. Clay, W. A. Bacon, W. E. Board and others.

Marvin Gay, of Mt. Sterling, Ky., decided to name his new theater "The Paramount." Work was finished on the theater and the first performance given shortly before the middle of the month.

The Green Dragon, the new theater at Shelbyville, Ky., was recently opened to the public after a short delay in finishing the house.

NASHVILLE'S ALAMO BEGINS SERVICE.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Chattanooga Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE ALAMO, the newest motion picture theater of Nashville, Tenn., was thrown open to the public on Monday, July 12. The theater, which is located on Church street, near Fifth avenue, is very handsome and attractive in many ways and is expected to make a big hit with the patrons of the city.

A special artist was sent to Texas by the management to obtain an exact sketch of the famous "Alamo" as it looks today, and this picture has been reproduced upon the east wall of the handsome lobby. On the west wall is the reproduction of a scene on the plains in Texas. A striking color scheme in black and white was worked out by the decorators and partly fashioned after the principal scene in "The Prize Story," a big production about to be released.

The interior of the lobby is of the Spanish hacienda type. The screen is placed at the entrance of the theater and beneath the screen has been placed the eight-piece mechanical orchestra. The machine booth is entirely separate from the main auditorium and is built of brick and other fireproof construction. Large ventilators have been placed in the big skylights in the dome of the auditorium, and with large centrifugal fans the management feels certain of its ability to keep the house fresh.

The program will be changed three times each week and only high-grade films shown. The first picture shown was "The Naked Truth," in which Lyda Borelli, the famous European actress, does herself proud in the French play. A cozy rest room has been provided for the ladies.

PASS SUNDAY RESOLUTION.

The latest development in the war being waged against operators of Sunday motion picture shows in Chattanooga, Tenn., is a series of resolutions adopted by the Baptist Young People's Union at a recent meeting at the Highland Park Baptist church. The young people have pledged themselves not to attend Sunday shows. But these shows on Sunday are not intended for these church-attending people. They are meant solely for those who don't go to the meeting and often find that they have nothing to do on Sunday. The churches are not filling the bill at all. Thank heaven the minority are not the rulers here in America. In part the resolution follows:

"Whereas, Children of an impressionable and undiscriminating age and older persons who need the uplifting influence of a better observance of the day are lured away from the afternoon Sunday schools and other church services and demoralized by the ultimate effect of disregarding the Lord's day;

"Resolved, That we, the Baptist Young People's Union, of Chattanooga and suburbs, deplore this downward tendency in the spiritual life of our people."

NEW PICTURE AND FILM CO.

Announcement has just been made of the incorporation of the International Moving Picture & Film Company, of Nashville, Tenn., which has filed a charter listing a capital stock of $1,000,000. The company proposes to manufacture moving picture films and machines and to engage in the general line of motion picture making or producing. Patents will be used which were issued to T. A. Killman. The incorporators of the new company are D. D. Dickson, E. H. Smith, R. C. Phillips, C. C. Smith and Dr. T. L. Hale, of Watertown.

FRED MARTIN GIVES SHOW TO NEWSIES.

Fred Martin, manager of the Bijou theater, of Knoxville, Tenn., recently held open house for the newsboys of the city. The boys took advantage of the chance to see high grade motion pictures free of charge and a big delegation turned out. The special performance was given at night when it would not interfere with "the business" of the coming millionaires.

NEW STRAND OPENS IN MONTGOMERY.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE new Strand theater, Montgomery, Ala., a new $50,000 theater, has been opened to the public. In respect to exterior design and interior equipment the Strand is most beautiful and efficient. The manager is J. T. Hix. "Salambo," released through the World Film, was the first picture shown.

UNIVERSITY BOOKS BIG KLEINE FILMS.

Brown Ayres, president of the University of Tennessee, has just closed a contract with the George Kleine Company, Atlanta office, whereby the University will show "Julius Caesar," "Quo Vadis," "The Lion of Venice," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Last Days of Pompeii" and the other great Kleine features. The subjects will be exhibited during the months of July and August, when the program will be used in connection with the summer school for teachers held each year by the University.

E. AUGER HEADS SOUTHERN WORLD FILM.

The Atlanta branch of the World Film together with New Orleans, Dallas, Memphis and Oklahoma are now under the direct control of E. Auger under the title of Southern Division manager.

"THE GEORGIAN."

"The Georgian" will be the new name of the well known Montgomery theater on Peachtree street. This appropriate and attractive name has just been selected by the special committee. The name will be changed just as quickly as the new electric sign now in course of construction can be turned over to the theater. The contest, the prize for which was an annual pass to the theater, was a spirited one, and many interesting names were suggested.

GEORGIA SHORTER ITEMS.

E. Walter Lamb, local manager of the World Film, is in New York on a business trip.

The movement started by the Woman's Club of Atlanta to show motion pictures suited to childish understanding and appreciation, has spread to broad proportions, and already twelve of the largest cities in Georgia have inaugurated a similar movement in Atlanta. A hearty cooperation from hundreds of mothers in bringing their children on the day provided for their special entertainment has helped the movement the past two Saturdays to greater success, and many have stated their intention of refusing to see pictures unsuited for childish minds and morals.

An added feature, making the performance doubly enjoyable at the Strand theater, is the orchestra of eight pieces.

City detectives are holding under arrest the negro chauffeur of William Oldknow, director of the Universal Motion Picture company and president of the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, Atlanta, following the theft Thursday night of a Buick automobile from the Oldknow garage on Cherokee avenue. The Buick was a present by Mr. Oldknow to his son, Oscar Stuart Oldknow, on his birthday last April. The machine was a gray Buick roadster, model B 24, 1914, engine 28 horse power. The machine had on each door the monogram "OSO." The residence was at the same time robbed. The negro has admitted to the detectives having used the Oldknow car in the absence of the Oldknows, who are at present in New York City, and have been notified of the robbery.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Manager J. I. Fay, of the new Blackwell Feature Exchange, of Pittsburgh, has announced the appointment of two road men. Herbert Lenchner is working the Western Pennsylvania district, while E. M. Evans, formerly of the Paramount, is working through Ohio.

Ground was broken last week for the erection of a new motion picture house in Sheridan, Pa. The new house will have a capacity of 500 and will cost, including the ground, about $15,000. It is being built by Frank Maywood, owner of the Lyric theater, in the same town.

Charles P. Dempsey, manager of the Sheridan Square theater, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, has resigned that position to go to his former home, Kansas City. Charles Brown, formerly manager of the East Liberty Cameraphone, is now manager of the Sheridan Square.

The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors have taken possession of a suite of rooms in the Vandergrift Building, Pittsburgh.

Censors Impose Fines

Pittsburgh Authorities Make Film Companies and Show Managers Pay Heavily for Disregard of Censorship Deletions—Also Punish Neglect to Show Approval Seal—Each Repetition Counted a New Offence.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

A CRUSADE recently conducted by the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors against unapproved motion picture films being shown in Pittsburgh theaters, and against managers of picture houses who neglected to display the seal of approval, resulted in a number of defendants facing Alderman Louis Alpern last week.

Charges were made by Joseph A. Berrier, representing the State Board of Censors, and heavy fines were imposed on several of the film corporations and theater managers. In most cases the defendants were arraigned for showing unapproved pictures.

Harvey Day, manager of the Fox Film Company, 121 Fourth avenue, was fined $125 and costs. He is alleged to have shown "The Plunderer," a five-reel picture, at the Photoplay theater, Crafton, June 23. He was fined a like amount for showing "Wormwood," also unapproved, at the Grand Opera House, Fifth avenue, June 9 and 23, and for showing "The Plunderer" at the Minerva, Fifth avenue, June 26. Dennis A. Harris and William Mason, connected with the Grand Opera House, appeared as witnesses against Mr. Day.

W. J. Marion, manager of the Quality, 429 Fifth avenue, was fined $5 and costs for showing Pathe News No. 48, June 24, without first displaying the approval seal. The Harry Davis enterprises, owners of the Davis theater, Smithfield street, was fined $5 and costs for failure to show approval seals before showing a picture there June 9 and 10.

A. A. Weiland, of the Weiland Film Company, was fined $25 and costs for showing "Mabel's Busy Day," an unapproved film at the Olympic theater, Fifth avenue.

W. C. Backmeyer, of the Famous Players' Exchange, Twelfth street and Penn avenue, was fined $125 and costs for showing the picture "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," at the Davis, Smithfield street, June 9 and 10. He was fined $125 for each day the picture was shown, it being alleged the film had not been approved. Backmeyer also paid the costs in the case against him for showing the "Hypocrites" at the Alvin theater, Sixth street, June 9.

Max Herring, manager of the Quality Film Company, was fined $25 and costs for showing "The Crystal Bowl," unapproved, at the Quality theater, Fifth avenue, June 24. He was fined a like amount for showing "The Bum Detective," "A Mask, a Ring, a Pair of Handcuffs" and "Perry Got Married," at the same theater.

ROWLAND & CLARK BUY THE CAMERAPHONE.

Bellevue's largest motion picture theater, The Cameraphone, located on Lincoln avenue, near Rogers, changed hands July12 and is now one of the Rowland & Clark theaters. The Rowland & Clark chain of houses now include the Regent theater, in East Liberty; the Belmar, in Homewood; the Oakland, in Oakland; the Arsenal, in Lawrenceville, and the Schenley Photo-play theater, in Oakland. W. E. Kirsch, formerly manager of the Arsenal, will be resident manager of the Cameraphone. No other announcement as to the policy has been made for the Cameraphone, but it is thought that there will be some changes made in the house itself and the attractions which will be shown.

SPARKS FROM STEEL CITY.

Harry J. Smith, manager of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co., has resigned his position and has gone into partnership with T. P. Hollis, under the firm name of Hollis & Smith, and will conduct a general supply and repair business at 434 Fourth avenue. D. C. France, formerly manager of the film department of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Co., has assumed the management of the entire establishment.

Prof. E. Otto Davis, manager of the old Orpheum, at Butler, now being enlarged, is now on a tour of visitation among the other theaters in Eastern Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and Southwestern New York, making the trip with a view to the inspection of decorations in the newts of the theaters.

The Sewickley Amusement Company is erecting a new $30,000 motion picture house at Sewickley, Pa., located on Beaver street. William R. Wheat, Jr., manager of the company, announces that this house will be 43x119 feet, and will have a seating capacity of 500. It is expected to be completed and ready for opening about the 1st of September. The Lyric theater, in Sewickley, is also conducted by this same company and it will continue the same after the completion of the new house. The name of the new house has not yet been decided upon.

James Steele, general manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., and vice-president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation of Pittsburgh, Chicago and Cincinnati, left last week with his family for an extended motor trip through the principal cities of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Michigan and West Virginia.

Al W. Cross, manager of the Hudson Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh, has secured one of D. W. Griffith's masterpieces, "The Escape," for bookings in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and also "The Melting Pot." Mr. Cross reports lively bookings on "After the Ball," "Neptune's Daughter" and "Lena Rivers" since taking on the West Virginia territory.

M. H. Goldstein, manager of the Morris theater in Preble avenue, Pittsburgh, who recently installed a Wurlitzer theater orchestra, found that his business improved so much through his good music that he decided to buy a still better instrument. In accordance an O. Duples has been installed in the same place.

Michaels & Freeman, owners of the negatives of "Struggles of the European War," have sold a print to A. Levin, of the Urban Feature Film Company, of Johnstown, Pa., for Western Pennsylvania, with the exception of Pittsburgh and a radius of 20 miles therefrom.

The Grand theater, in Etna, Pa., which was recently purchased by D. P. Drum, will be open Saturdays only at present, but after August 1 will be open for business every night.

Edward McMillan, well known cashier at the Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh, box office, and formerly of the Winter Garden, New York, has joined the road force of the Hudson Feature Film Company of Pittsburgh.

W. J. Bernardi, manager of the Palace theater, in the South Side of Pittsburgh, has resigned that position to accept the management of the Arsenal theater in Butler street. This is one of the Clark & Rowland theaters.

Harry A. Lande, of the United Film Service, of Pittsburgh, has returned from New York, where he contracted for the new Standard Service, which will be launched as a regular scheduled program August 30. Eighteen reels will be released weekly, the producers being mostly those who were affiliated with the old United Company.

Mayer Silverman, manager of the Liberty Film Renting Company, of Pittsburgh, and family, have left for Cambridge Springs, where they will spend three weeks' vacation.

Improvement in Illinois

Picture Shows Pure and Simple, with Less of Nickel-Grabbing Methods, Becoming the Rule Among Showmen in the State—Easier to Pick a Good Program Than a Year Ago—Little Solid Profit in "Store Night."

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

PICTURE shows in Illinois are becoming more and more real picture shows. The country store, pay night and other near-lottery methods are passing. A reasonably comprehensive survey of programs and announcements of Illinois houses reveal only a few who are resorting to this grab-bag method of getting business.

In the smaller cities and towns—and that is where the practice prevailed—the reform is due to the fact that there are more pictures in the market and there is more latitude in making up programs. This same greater abundance of offerings, as compared with the time when an exhibitor had to tie himself up to a single service, is credited with giving Illinois more out-and-out photoplay houses.

There are not a great many theaters now in the State which are giving pictures and vaudeville. A Great many of the men older in the business learned by experience that films and cheap variety will not mix. The newer exhibitors are met by a demand for pictures which has taken more definite form in the last year and are putting their money into films.

Even the souvenir givers are not as numerous as formerly. In practically every case where the patrons receive a gift, it is some thing that directly or indirectly advertises the theater or the photoplay business.

Taken as a whole aside from the prevalence of too long programs for too low prices the standard of shows in Illinois has been immeasurably raised in the last twelve months.

PICTURES AT METHODIST CAMP MEETING.

The old-fashioned camp meeting in Illinois is being modernized. Supt. Frank D. Sheets, superintendent of the Aurora district, has made the revolutionary announcement that at the annual meeting of the Methodists at New Lenox from August 19 to 23 moving pictures will be used. These will form a part of the evening programs and will serve as the most modern parables and in illustrating Biblical stories.

PICTURES HELP GRACE M. E. CHURCH AT ELGIN.

The action of the Grace M. E. church in Elgin in using motion pictures is attracting attention. An Evanston paper says that the problem "is not in finding extenuation for so radical an innovation * * * but in the supplying of films at once interesting enough to satisfy a congregation and sufficiently educational and religiously inspiring to satisfy the conscience of the board and allay the gossip of the membership." The Elgin church has made another departure by naming a promoting committee for these shows. This is in addition to the censorship committee. Both bodies will continue the shows while the pastor in on his vacation. This is an effective answer to the traditional rebuke to churches which rest in the summer, "The devil never takes a vacation."

ILLINOIS GIRL GETS JOB WITH VITAGRAPH.

Miss Nellie Browne Duff of Havana, who has written a great many photoplays for the Vitagraph and Selig companies, has gone to Brooklyn to join the editorial staff of the Vitagraph company.

SHOWMANSHIP CLOSE-UPS.

Gus Kerasojes, owner of the Royal at Springfield, is a member of a confectionery firm in that city which gives a ticket to the Royal with every ten-cent purchase.

"Tommy's Birth Certificate," the propaganda film of the Illinois State Board of Health, was shown by Loren Bennett at his Gem theater in Atlanta. Howe & Redman, of Petersburg, did some camera work for the Castle at Havana, which exploited slides of local celebrities. Taylor & Kuestner of the I. T. S. airdome at Carlinville gave a benefit for the ladies' rest-room fund in that city. Gasman & Hanley of the Globe at Ivesdale secured motion pictures from the neighboring cities of Tuscola and Sullivan, a profitable feature. The Bijou at Quincy advertises that it has "Jolly fresh pure air," a pleasing variation of the "superior ventilation" slogans. Free open air picture shows and band concerts are given every Wednesday night by Boosters at Ashland. The Lyric boosts by acting as a haven in case of rain. Films of Mooseheart, the national lodge home, were shown at the Princess in Hoopeston under the auspices of the local order of Moose. Similar co-operation was at Chicago Heights, where the Woman's club showed "The Wizard of Oz" at the Illinois theater; also at the Palm in Rockford, where "Brother Officers" aided the treasury of St. Anthony's school, and at Carthage, where the American gave "Judith of Bethulia" for the benefit of the Daughters of Rebekah, and again at the Cozy in Bushnell, where "Damon and Pythias" was shown under the auspices of the local Pythians, and then at Kankakee where the Gaiety selected the Pathe productions, "Joseph's Trials in Egypt" and "Joan of Arc" for the Grand Army of Republic. Local pictures were used successfully by the Grand at Galena, the Air Dome at Washington and the Airdome at Carlyle, where the Aquatic club had charge of the program.

ILLINOIS ITEMS.

Edgar Watson of New York has taken over the Hippodrome theater at Peoria and will play vaudeville and high-class feature pictures. The Hippodrome has had a tempestuous career. It was designed for big vaudeville, but has switched to photplays and more recently stock.

The Shepman Film Advertising Service, Ben B. Shepman, manager, Quincy, has been filming the principal industries of that city.

The Apollo at Princeton has discontinued its Saturday matinees.

City officials at Genoa are preparing an ordinance to regulate the construction and operation of motion picture machines and operating rooms.

"The Spoilers" played a return date at the Majestic in Kewanee.

Leon Jarodski of Danville has started an airdome at North State and West Livingston streets in Monticello in which he will play pictures at five cents.

Business men in Thomasboro will give free open air motion picture shows instead of band concerts this summer.

The Bon Feature Film company of Springfield made a 1,500 foot subject, "A Staunton Romance," for Manager J. E. Lair of the Labor Temple at Staunton.

The Fox theater at Aurora started a new policy July 5, using a feature program of Metro, World and Fox features, on Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. Not less than six reels will be shown for five and ten cents. On July 12 the house began admitting children free from 2 to 5, special matinee on Mondays.

The Orpheum at Urbana is closed for the summer season. Improvements will be made while the house is idle.

The Star at De Kalb was closed several days for remodeling.

Steven's hall at Herscher has become a motion picture show.

The Chicago Broadway Theater company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000. The incorporators are: Benjamin B. Kahane, Orville W. Lee, George A. Trude.

The Princess, at Gardner, has removed to a new location.

The Star at Elgin has a new policy of Vaudeville three days and pictures the rest of the week.

Dreamland, at Mt. Pulaski, had a film fire, but Mrs. G. C. Zah, proprietor, got the patrons out before they knew it. The operator fled from the booth and closed the air-tight doors, smothering the flames. No damage was done and the show was resumed.

Construction of the Belasco, the newest motion picture house at Quincy, in the Rogers building at Sixth and Hampshire streets, has begun.

The Royal, at Sandwich, has inaugurated a summer schedule of three nights a week.

LETTER FROM PRAIRIE STATES.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Nicholas at Council Bluffs had a good Chaplin drawing contest for the children. A cut of the Essanay comedian was routed out, all but the hat, hair, famous mustache, feet and cane. The child who made the best complete drawing was given a pass for himself and mother. The winner had to be in the house when the selection was made by the judges.

A Waterloo paper says the people like the animated cartoon comedies, but do not care to see the process of drawing.

Nearly all phases of the motion picture industry are treated in a fine column interview with Manager H. W. Fulton of the Strand and Princess theaters, printed in a Dubuque paper.

Two years to a day, after he secured the Zenith theater at Shenandoah, C. A. Hamilton sold it to M. J. Blink, of Marshalltown, who has photoplay interests in that city. The same staff of employes and the same service will be retained.

Columbia Hall, the new opera house at Lamotte, has been completed.

M. N. Bopp distributed 800 carnations the night he opened his new Palm theater at Clear Lake. This house has lady ushers, an innovation in the small Iowa cities. The house seats 300, has two new Simplex machines and is otherwise modern. J. Frank Young is assisting in the management.

The Daily Republican and Times and the Princess theater at Cedar Rapids are to produce a local photoplay in co-operation.

L. O. Snook has opened a motion picture show in the M. W. A. building at Liscomb.

Fred Fleming, a student at the Iowa State University, has purchased the Star theater at Tama from N. S. Impson.

Fred Brenenian sold the Wonderland theater at Sheldon to Mr. and Mrs. Havdahl of Luverne, Minn.

Work has begun on the new Fraser theater at Spencer which will be one of the finest photoplay houses in the northwest. It will seat over 700 people when finished. Two Powers 6A machines will be installed. Feature pictures and a six-piece orchestra will be featured.

IN NEBRASKA.

FINANCIAL arrangements have been completed for erecting the $75,000 Orpheum theater building at the northwest corner of Twelfth and P streets in Lincoln. It will be ready some time in December. The building will be owned by a private corporation and leased to the Acme Amusement Company. This company has elected C. D. Mullen, W. E. Barkley, Charles Stuart, J. H. Allen, C. C. Quiggle, Frank D. Eager and C. H. Rudge as directors. The house will have a balcony but no gallery, and will seat 1,500.

READ MESSAGE ON NEXT PAGE

Read this message from J. Stuart Blackton to the mothers of America

This picture is dedicated with respect, reverence and admiration, and with the earnest prayer that their eyes may be opened to the peril which menaces and will continue to menace them, their children and their loved ones, until the present state of "Unpreparedness" has been remedied.

"The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," and in those mother hands lie the power to demand and to receive adequate protection against war, just as they demand and receive proper police protection against crime.

To the fearless patriotism of Hudson Maxim, and the plain, practical, straightforward truths in his book "Defenceless America," I owe the inspiration and impetus which caused me to conceive and write the silent drama of "The Battle Cry of Peace."

To over a score of other real Americans—some of the most prominent men in Army and Navy Administrative circles in the United States, I owe a debt of gratitude for the invaluable assistance of their advice and counsel in the preparation of that photo drama and its subsequent visualization in motion picture form.

Nearly every important motion picture yet produced has been made from a story or a book. In this case the book was written after the completion of the silent drama.

The aim and object of both book and picture are to arouse in the heart of every American citizen, a sense of his strict accountability to his government in time of need—and to bring to the notice of the greatest number of people in the shortest possible time the fact that there is a way to insure that peace for which we all so earnestly pray.

"Let us have Peace!" General U. S. Grant, one of the mightiest warriors in the world's history, coined that phrase. With his genius for command, for attack and defense, he whose business was War, wanted Peace.

No body of men are half so anxious for Peace as the Army and the Navy. Every sane, conscientious human being is against War and for Peace.

But as a Nation we must not only be Champions of Peace and of the laws of humanity, but we must have the Power to enforce those laws! The Power to insure that Peace!

Let us disarm—let us become helpless, unprotected, emasculated, and there shall be Peace, but not Peace and Plenty, not Peace with Honor. Crushed, bleeding and trampled upon, America may find herself on her knees begging for "Peace at any price."

IN DETROIT.

Architect C. W. Maas, of Houghton, Mich., has completed plans for a $6,000 photoplay theater to be erected by Joseph Loverine, at Dollar Bay. It will be of concrete, 30 by 100 feet, and will seat 350.

The Stambaugh Opera House, Stambaugh, Mich., has been remodeled at an expense of $3,000 and it is now a first-class photoplay theater. A fireproof picture booth has been built, new footlights installed, the entire interior decorated, a balcony added and the seating capacity increased to 500.

M. Harlan Starr, manager of the Washington theater, Detroit, returned July 23 from two weeks spent in New York, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, and other eastern points. His wife and family accompanied him. It was Mr. Starr's annual vacation.

On Thursday night, July 22, both the Miles and Orpheum theaters, playing a combination of vaudeville and pictures, held "Charlie Chaplin Contests," offering prizes to the best imitation. A goodly number competed at both theaters.

The secretary of state's office shows the following recent incorporations: Box Office Attraction Film Rental Co., $10,000; Your Theater Co., Detroit, $25,000; Lincoln Theater Co., Wyandotte, $20,000, and Victor Film Service, Detroit, $1,500.

The Detroit Opera house, after 40 weeks of legitimate attractions, is again playing pictures, which policy will continue until the latter part of August. "Neptune's Daughter" is again the attraction—the same as ran the entire summer of last season—16 weeks. The engagement started July 24.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager for the Universal exchanges, was in Detroit on July 21 and spent the day with George W. Weeks, manager of the local exchange.

Manager Woods of the Empress theater, Detroit, says he is "cleaning up" with his new policy of charging five cents from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. and ten cents thereafter.

"The more untrue to life these modern pictorial agonies, the 'movies,' can be made, the more likely are they to receive the hearty approval of our so-called boards of censorship," spoke Professor John Brumm, of the rhetoric department of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor on July 20 in an appeal for better fiction.

Detroit's New Houses

September 15 Will See Many of the New Picture Theaters Open and Doing Business—Among Those to Be Ready Soon Are Lakewood, Strand, Drury Lane, Globe, Stratford and the Duplex Theaters—Others Follow Soon.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

BY September 15th most of the new theaters now under construction in Detroit will have been completed. The new Lakewood, at Jefferson and Oneida streets, seating 1,500, will be ready early in the month; so will the new Strand at Grand River and Fourteenth streets; the Drury Lane on Woodward, near Grand Circus Park, seating about 600, will be ready in September. The Globe, at Grand River and Trumbull avenues, remodelled and enlarged to 800 seats, will be open by Labor Day. The new Stratford at Ferdinand and Dix avenues is well under way and ought to be completed in September. The duplex theater being erected by the Grand Boulevard Theater Co. on the boulevard near Woodward avenue will open in September. New theaters contemplated but for which ground has not been broken are the Astor, at Grand River and Bagg streets, seating 2,500 and costing $240,000; the Ferry Field, Grand River and the boulevard, seating 1,500, and cotsing $100,000; the Regent at Woodward and Horton avenues, seating 3,000 and costing $150,000; the theater at Warren and Chene streets, and the new John H. Kunsky theater at Broadway and Grand Circus Park.

EXCHANGE MAN TALKS ABOUT CO-OPERATION.

"I read with considerable interest what Mr. Frederick Ingersoll, of the Knickerbocker theater, had to say in the World a few days ago relative to the treatment accorded exhibitors in the matter of price," said a Detroit exchange man the other day. "I agree fully with some of Mr. Ingersoll's statements, but the fact should not be overlooked that while the exchange men still has many things to learn, the exhibitor is not altogether faultless and unreasonable in his dealings with the exchanges. We had a case the other day where an out-of-town exhibitor received one of our best features; we instructed him to be absolutely sure and see that it went out the next day to an exhibitor a dozen miles away, as he had been advertising it extensively for that particular occasion. He left the matter to one of his employes with the result that the exhibitor in the next town had no picture on the night in question and was compelled to keep his theater closed as it was too far away for us to get anything else to him in time. In this instance we were out a day's receipts while the man owning the theater was very much put out. Was this the fault of the exchange or the exhibitor? You can readily see that exhibitors are also unreasonable in some things and that not all of the friction existing today can be charged up to the exchange men."

J. O. KENT PROMOTED AGAIN.

Last October J. O. Kent was in charge of the shipping department of the Detroit office of the World Film Corporation. He was later appointed salesman and was so successful that he was advanced to assistant manager. Again he made good with the result that a month ago when Joseph Klein was transferred to the Chicago office, Mr. Kent was made manager to succeed him. Mr. Kent is only 24 years of age. He is very ambitious and popular.

TEMPLE THEATER RENOVATED

From gallery and ceiling to the shining tiles in the lobby, the Temple theater has been completely rejuvenated, and patrons at the reopening Monday, July 19, found comfort as well as beauty in the equipment. The entrance has been cleaned and redecorated, and new tile set into the floor of the lobby. To harmonize with the rest of the decorative scheme, a rich dark blue velvet carpet covers the lower floor and stairways. Large, roomy seats, upholstered in the same shade of blue plush, replace the old leather ones. They are comfort personified. Instead of the old, small metal numbers on the top of the seats, frank white figures embroidered on the back of each seat enable who arrives late to find his way easily in the dark. The walls, in old gold and ivory, are cool and restful to the eye.

THE "CURRENT WEEKLY."

"Current Weekly" is a film that is being shown each week at the John H. Kunsky theaters as well as throughout Michigan. The film is one of local interesting events and is being made expressly for Mr. Kunsky. It is creating a very favorable impression.

A NEW PRODUCING COMPANY?

John H. Kunsky and George Trendle paid a flying visit to Chicago, New York and Atlantic City last week. The Chicago trip was for the purpose of meeting with other leading exhibitors in various sections of the country to discuss the formation of a two million dollar producing company. Only a limited number of exhibitors will be "let in" on this new organization. Another meeting has been called for the last week in August to further perfect plans.

CORDIAL INVITATION.

The Detroit correspondent of the Moving Picture World wants to assure every exhibitor and exchange man in Michigan that news is what we are after, and we want lots of it. And don't get the idea that we are interested only in the big houses; we want news about any theater, no matter how small or how big. The latchstring is always out at 503 Free Press building to anyone in the moving picture business. Even if you have nothing you want published, come in anyway and have a friendly chat. Back numbers of the World are always on file for reference purposes, and there may be other ways that we can be of help to you.

TALKED ABOUT IN DETROIT.

The Lincoln Theater Co., Ecorse, Mich., has been organized to finance the erection of a theater building to cost $30,000. The seating capacity will be 1,200, and it is expected to have the theater ready by November 1st.

Lee DeCamp, theater architect in Grand Rapids, Mich., has just been given the contract to supervise the erection of a new theater at London, Ont., for C. H. Bangs, a well-known Canadian theater magnate. It will have a seating capacity of 2,000 and will cost $200,000. Mr. DeCamp has opened a London office and will supervise the work from start to finish. He has drawn plans for about 40 theaters now in operation and has a number of others under way.

"A Midnight at Maxim's" proved a great drawing card at the New Empire theater on July 13. Manager Smith had special music arranged, the orchestra rehearsing it for two nights, so that when the picture was presented the music was played in perfect harmony with the action of the film. Manager Smith felt that the right kind of music played at the right time would make patrons enjoy the feature 100 per cent. more. And they did. You could hear people commenting about it as the feature was being shown. C. W. Masterman, for two years manager of the Idlehour theater in Grand Rapids, Mich., has been appointed assistant manager of the Empire, Detroit.

A Free Films Protest

St. Louis Exhibitors, Through Local Protective Association, Send Delegates to Mayor Kiel, About the Free Picture Shows—Take Patronage from the Regular Houses—Designed Only for Slums and People Who Can't Pay.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A DELEGATION composed of members of the Theater Managers and Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of St. Louis have made a protest to Mayor Kiel against the continuance of free moving picture shows in the small parks and playgrounds of the city. Their claim was that the free exhibitions took away their patronage. The Mayor told them that the object of the city in giving free pictures was to provide entertainment for the benefit of those people in the poorer districts who could not afford to attend moving picture shows, and no competition was intended. Park Commissioner Cunliff said that the city cannot discontinue the moving picture schedule now, as it is under contract for the season, and that the pictures are shown only once in two weeks in each district, and the films are of an educational nature, which would not seriously interfere with the program of the average theater or airdome.

MONROE THEATER ENLARGED.

The Monroe theater, Chippewa street near California, St. Louis, is undergoing alterations that will double its seating capacity. The Monroe was built seven years ago by its present owner, Mrs. L. B. Stoddard, to seat only 350 persons. Mrs. Stoddard says she wanted to build the house larger, but listened to the advice of many friends, who did not think moving pictures would last. The Monroe has never been large enough to accommodate its audiences, hence the present expansion. The alterations, which are to be completed by September 1st, will extend the theater to the alley in the rear, and include a concrete floor and other fireproof improvements.

BOX SEATS IN AIRDOME.

The Penrose Garden, at Grand and Penrose avenues, is the only airdome in St. Louis that boasts box seats. The boxes are about four feet from the ground, beginning a few feet from the screen and extending in a half circle on each side of the auditorium. There are twenty boxes, with a total seating capacity of three hundred. The Penrose is decorated with growing vines all around the enclosure and a beautiful spraying fountain at one side of the Garden. The operating booth is a very ornamental pagoda, with a small bancony running around three sides, about eight feet from the ground. This little balcony, with two stairways leading up to it, is not for the general public, but for the manager and his personal friends, or specially favored patrons of the Garden. Over the entrance, the word Penrose is formed of electric light bulbs, and diagonally across the name is a large rose with red lights forming the flower and green lights for the leaves and stem. More than six hundred lights are used for this long-stemmed rose, which forms one of the most attractive display signs in the city. This sign was made from an original design by Martin J. Gallagher, manager of the Penrose.

LIGHTNING STRIKES AIRDOME OPERATING BOOTH.

The North Grand airdome, at Grand and Natural Bridge road, was damaged by a severe storm on Sunday, July 18th. The storm came up about four p. m., and lightning struck the operator's booth and blew out the compensarc. Manager Charles Warner and Operator O'Laughlin did some tall hustling to get new apparatus for the evening performance. They got everything connected up in about two hours, however, and were ready for business on time. The airdome is just back of the North Grand theater, which is under the same management.

ST. LOUIS JOTTINGS.

The Broadway theater, Broadway and St. Charles street, included in its program on Monday, July 19th, a two-reel film of the Advertising Clubs' convention, which was held in Chicago on June 19. This showing was under the auspices of the St. Louis Advertising Club, and contained scenes of the various events of the convention, the parade, the baseball game, with Mayor Kiel of St. Louis and Mayor Thompson of Chicago starting the game, and many other interesting sights in which the Ad Men had the pleasure of seeing themselves again on the screen. The films were shown at the Arco theater, Arco and Manchester avenues, on July 20th, and at the Juniata, Grand and Juniata streets, on July 21.

The Lindell theater, Grand and Hebert street, which has recently passed under the management of Wm. Goldman, will be closed, with the exception of Sundays, until the first of September, when the regular program will be resumed. Mr. Goldman, the new manager of the Lindell, is a veteran exhibitor, and well known throughout the state. He is also proprietor of the St. Louis theater at Prairie and St. Louis avenues, which will remain open all summer.

The West End Lyric, one of the three Lyrics owned and managed by John W. Cornelius, will be closed for the remainder of the summer, with the exception of rainy nights, when it will show the Lyric Skydome's program. The Skydome is within walking distance of the West End Lyric.

A new airdome has been opened at 4000 Waverly avenue, East St. Louis, by Alpha O. Ely, who is also police sergeant on the east side. The Lears Supply Co., of St. Louis, furnished the equipment for the new outdoor theater.

Henry Slocum, who recently resigned as assistant manager of the General Film Exchange of this city, intending to take a long rest, was unable to "rest" easy out of the moving picture business, and is now with the Universal Exchange, at 2116 Locust street.

W. R. Scates, district manager for the World Film Corporation, was in St. Louis during the week of July 18th, looking after the business of the local office.

T. W. Chatburn, Jr., has resigned his connection with the Pathe Exchange at 3210 Locust street, and has gone to Memphis, Tenn., to take charge of the World Film Exchange in that city.

The bill introduced by Alderman Hampe recently to prohibit the erection of tents for moving picture shows in the future, has been passed by the Board of Aldermen. This bill does not affect the tents now in use, but licenses will not be issued for new tents to be put up.

NEW MICHIGAN PRODUCING CO.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Chippewa Film Company has been organized at Sault Ste Marie to produce pictures and also to deal in supplies. Trouble arose in "the Soo" over making a local picture, the new company and the Dietz-Newman Company each seeking the privilege. The Dietz concern proposed to make a reel which would be shown at the Star. Both sought the endorsement of the Civic and Commercial club and pending such approval, K. Eddy, secretary of the Chippewa Company used advertising space to tell his side of the story. He informed the business men that his company's picture would not cost any individual a cent and that no exhibitor would show, without charge a personal advertising film.

The new company, in addition to handling theater projects, will have the agency for the Cosmograph for home shows. A comedy film in which the children of the city will take part is a project under consideration. Fred D. Beardsley is president of the company, George Cook treasurer and Kenneth R. Eddy, secretary.

TAKES CAMERA ON ADVENTURE.

The motion picture camera is one of the best of excuses for adventuring. The practically of youth's unrest has never been sufficiently pointed out. What romance is always looking for is the means of making adventure pay. There must always be some kind of golden fleece to make the labor of the open seas and the long road digestible. So, many a youth will learn to "turn" a camera skillfully with the hope of getting a chance of seeing the greater world and being a part of the more active life, wherever anything is going on, in out-of-the-way corners of the seven seas, among strange peoples. The clippings this morning show that four young men from Michigan—Joseph Jesick and Richard Lantman of Holland, with C. S. Colgrove of Chicago and a camera man are about to undertake a round-the-world trip in a 36-foot gasoline launch. They may have a reel of adventure to unfold by the time they get back that will pay in good hard money. That they may never come back is true enough; but that is one of the chances that the adventurous always cheerfully consider.

CHANGES IN THE NEW NILES.

The Niles Amusement company, a Michigan corporation, has purchased the interest of W. M. Reider in the New Niles theater at Niles, and Robert Codd, who was lessee and manager of the house last winter, returns as manager. Associated with him in the company, which has a capital stock of $10,000, is Carl J. Allardt, manager of the Orpheum theater at South Bend, Ind. Reider will remain and have charge of the operating room.

BUTTERFIELD EXTENDING.

The activities of W. S. Butterfield, of Battle Creek, have extended to Flint, where he has taken a lease on the Stone theater and renamed it the Majestic. His new acquisition will house the vaudeville shows (five acts and three reels of pictures) now given at the Bijou. The Bijou becomes an exclusive motion picture house. Several improvements, including a new screen and projection apparatus, will be installed before Sept. 1. Frank H. Butterfield, who has been manager of the Bijou, will look after both houses. G. A. Petterson, manager of the Stone last season, will help him at the Majestic.

MICHIGAN HAPPENINGS.

Decorators have finished their work on the new Rex theater at Escanaba which is being constructed for John P. Hines of the Bijou. Simplicity is the keynote, the walls and deep paneled ceiling being done in battle ship grey with the lower border of light green.

E. J. Bregger has named the motion picture theater which he has opened at Crystal Falls the Gem.

John Gardner of Coleman has opened a motion picture show at Alma.

August Kleist and son, A. J. Kleist of Pontiac, proprietors of the Howland and Eagle theaters at Pontiac, are contemplating the erection of a theater and business building to cost $100,000 at Pontiac. It will seat about 2,400.

The Majestic theater at Kalamazoo has closed until Aug. 15 for redecorating.

Major M. J. Phillips of Oswego has secured permission from the military department to have films made of the state encampment of the Michigan National Guard at Grayling this year.

WISCONSIN CLOSE-UPS.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANAGER HICKEY of the Star theater, at Brandon, has just started the serial "The Trey o' Hearts." The Majestic, at La Crosse, got 10 and 20 cents for the Salisbury Wild Animal pictures, and it safely offered to refund money to anybody who was not satisfied. The Grand, at Menominee makes up its Sunday programs entirely from Pathe subjects. The Opera house, at Monticello, started its series of great pictures with "Neptune's Daughter" and made the admission for this only 5 and 10 cents to serve as a leader. The Lyric, at Edgerton, has started the serial "The Diamond from the Sky." A store in Fort Atkinson gives tickets to the Crystal theater to boys who sell a certain brand of coffee. The Strand, at Racine, publishes a coupon which with one paid admission will admit two persons except on Saturdays and Sundays. Kimball & Kenneth, banjoists, who illustrate their music with motion pictures, were recent attractions at the Virginian, at Kenosha.

CHILDREN'S SHOWS AT DELAVAN.

The Pastime theater, at Delavan, has started a series of selected Saturday afternoon shows for children. These programs are secured through the co-operation of Miss Elizabeth Sumner, a school teacher of Minneapolis, who has been interested in the work for securing helpful pictures in Minnesota. She is spending her vacation in Delavan. The first feature was "Alice in Wonderland."

SHORT NOTES FROM WISCONSIN.

Robert Maxwell and Al Grutsch, of Tomah, have opened a motion picture show at Wilton.

Samuel Trinz succeeds Harry Graham as manager of the Butterfly theater, in Milwaukee. Trinz retains the management of the Empire theater, with which he has been connected for ten years.

The Crystal theater, at Monroe, is remodeling, redecorating and enlarging, but manages to clean up the house for Saturday and Sunday shows.

The Majestic, at La Crosse, makes Sunday a comedy day under a new plan whereby it changes bills four times a week.

The Peoples theater, at Superior, has reduced its prices to 5 and 10 cents for the summer, giving five or six reels of pictures and two acts of vaudeville.

The I. S. U. Moving Picture Company has had a company at Pewaukee producing pictures.

The Heim bill, which would have legalized Sunday picture shows, has received its final death blow in the Wisconsin legislature, the senate having refused to suspend its rules and to again receive the bill from the lower house.

IN CINCINNATI.

The Dome theater, at Youngstown, which has been undergoing repairs for some time, including the installation of a roomy balcony, which will add largely to its seating capacity, was reopened last Thursday with a special program to commemorate the occasion. A large orchestra was among the special features provided.

Manager Max Shagrin, of the South Side theater, Youngstown, O., left last week for a vacation of two weeks at Atlantic City, to recuperate from the toil of running a busy house and suiting exacting audiences. In his absence his twin brother, Joe Shagrin, who is spending the summer with him, will have charge of the South Side.

Historic Put-in-Bay, near Sandusky, O., is to be featured in moving pictures, Director Will H. Gregory, of the Artone Film Co., of Detroit, and a company of forty people, spending four days there last week in the production of a military and historical drama entitled "I'm On My Way to Dublin Bay."

Cincinnati League Joins

Chamber of Commerce of Big Ohio City and Local Motion Picture Organization Are Now Affiliated—Formal Taking Into Official Body Now Progressing—Committee Appointed to Formulate Rules—Personal.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE consummation of the plan whereby the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cincinnati, or, rather, the active members of the rejuvenated body of that name, are to become officially affiliated with the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, is in sight. In fact, the thing has actually been accomplished, as far as the organization of the League as one of the several affiliated branches of the Chamber is concerned.

The League is now a part of the Chamber of Commerce, and the necessary but more or less formal matter of bringing into the Chamber as individual members the members of the League is now going on. The first lot of exhibitors to take this step was represented by names posted for membership last week, the following having this honor: I. Lipson, of the Strand and the Family; J. J. Huebner, Jr., of the Twin City; J. A. Ackerman, of the Glenway; Jesse J. Meis, of the Empress, and Ben Bichnauer, of the Hyde Park.

At a meeting for the purpose of discussing the rules under which the League will operate as a branch of the Chamber, the following well-known exhibitors were appointed as a committee to take charge of this matter: A. G. Hettesheimer, W. K. Howard, Charles Weigel, F. L. Emmert, J. J. Huebner, J. Meis and L. W. Foster. The originators of the plan are jubilant over its success, and indications are that they will make good on their assertion that over 50 exhibitors will join, including all of prominence in the city.

REFERENDUM ON BESAW BILL.

The fight for and against the proposal to secure a referendum vote on the so-called Besaw censorship bill, enacted at the recent session of the Legislature as an amendment of the existing law, promises to wax extremely warm before the election rolls around, as the newspapers all over the State have taken it up, and argument pro and con is plentiful. As heretofore reported, the amendment to the censorship law makes manufacturers and exchanges equally liable with the exhibitor for showing pictures without the stamp of approval of the Ohio Board, and the manufacturers and exchanges have naturally objected strenuously for being brought into a matter which, as they assert, is in many instances beyond their control. On the other hand, exhibitors who have been prevented by the fiat of the censors from running big drawing cards feel that now is the time to "hit a lick" against censorship, and are consequently doing all in their power to aid in securing the referendum.

FILM AS EVIDENCE.

The use of moving pictures taken for local humane officers, as evidence of alleged cruelty to animals, may prove a novel feature of charges made against members of a Wild West show which has been performing at Cincinnati's Coney Island. The officers went up to the first performances, which had been widely advertised, because of the announcement that a bull fight was to be staged, and they scented scope for their activities. When a bucking broncho was, as they claim, urged to greater exertions by the use of genuine cowpuncher spurs, however, they thought they had enough "dope," and arrested two riders and the manager of the show. The camera man got some fine pictures of the show as a matter of news, and the film is available, the humane officers declare, to show that their contentions of cruelty are well based.

"FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN WEEK."

The Lyric, whose season of moving pictures is proving to be highly successful, staged a decidedly unusual stunt last week, and one which met with the delighted approval of its patrons, in putting on what was called "Francis X. Bushman Week." Two of the most successful of the recent characterizations of this popular star were shown, "The Slim Princess" the first half of the week and "Graustark" the latter half. Both of these are V-L-S-E productions, and the latter had previously filled a successful engagement at the Lyric, coming back stronger than ever, as has been the case with a number of first-class productions recently. Admirers of Bushman had plenty of chances to see their hero in action during "Bushman Week," and the Lyric management is contemplating ministering in a similar manner to followers of other popular stars later on, in view of the manner in which the trial of the idea succeeded.

CAPTAIN LUX IN OHIO RACES.

A pleasant bit of moving picture enterprise in connection with the recent motor boat regatta on the Ohio, which at first escaped attention, in addition to the fact that the Pathe people donated a handsome cup for one of the races, was the participation and victory of Manager Edward Lux, of the Universal and Cincinnati Buckeye exchanges, with his speed boat, the "Universal," in the 15-mile race. Mr. Lux himself handled the boat in the race, with Ed. Bernardi, a popular exhibitor, acting as mechanician. The victory of this team, operating a boat named for one of the best-known companies, was supplemented as to its moving-picture connection by the fact that the trophy awarded was cup given by the B. F. Keith Co., and that moving pictures were taken of the race.

PRESIDENT OF THE FOREST THEATER WEDS.

Lee E. Ach, president of the company which operates the Forest, the leading Avondale house, and secretary and treasurer of the Samuel Ach Co., a big Cincinnati concern, was married a few days ago at St. Louis to Miss Rosamond Lewyn of that city. Mr. Ach is one of the big business men of Cincinnati, being president of the Cincinnati Trade Expansion League, besides taking care of the duties which are his in connection with the activities mentioned above. Miss Lewyn was formerly a member of Nat G. Goodwin's company, acting as understudy to Edna Goodrich, the famous beauty who subsequently became Mrs. Goodwin. Mr. and Mrs. Ach are spending their honeymoon in Maine.

CINCINNATI GOSSIP.

Frank Daniels in "Crooky," a five-reel comedy written especially for the former musical-comedy star and produced under the Blue Ribbon-Vitagraph brand, furnished a treat for patrons of the Lubin last week. The engagement was for the entire week, and many theater goers who formerly swore by Daniels welcomed the chance to see him again in moving pictures. The amazingly funny India-rubber countenance which used to keep big houses in paroxysms of mirth proved to be equally funny in moving pictures, and the engagement was one of the most successful recorded at the Lubin since the first exhibition of "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Victory for Show Houses

Picture-Saloon License Refused by San Francisco—Would Have Been Wedge for Other Licenses of Kind—Local League and Film Exchange Board of Trade Show Brewery Interests that It Would Be Dangerous to Press Matter. ..

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE strenuous attempt that has been made during the past six weeks at San Francisco to secure a license for the operation of a combined saloon and moving picture house in the Third and Howard street district has been unavailing, despite the pressure that was brought to bear on the Police Commission by brewery interests. The application of the Greek saloonkeeper, Margolis, has been brought up at each meeting of the Commission since it was first presented, more than a month ago, but each time was put over for future consideration, it being the idea of the applicant to tire out the exhibitors who made it a point to be on hand at each session.

Realizing that the granting of one license of this kind would be but an opening wedge for the granting of many others, and that the result would be a great loss to the moving picture business, members of the Exhibitors' League of San Francisco and of the local Film Exchange Board of Trade kept in close touch with the matter and an interview was arranged with the management of the brewery that stood behind the saloon man. The film men represented that at the last general election strong pressure had been brought to bear upon them to run slides in their houses in favor of Prohibition, but that this had not been done as it was their desire to keep clear of such matters. They stated, however, that if saloons commenced to show moving pictures they would at once institute a fight against the liquor traffic and would endeavor to make it a national issue. They showed the brewers the stand that had been taken on the question by the National organization at the recent convention here and put up such a united front that the brewers decided to withdraw their support in the license matter. At the meeting of the Police Commission held on July 19 the applicant in question was given a saloon and restaurant license, but the application for a moving picture permit was denied. Among those who worked hard to prevent the granting of this license were Eugene Roth and A. Goldberg, of the local League; M. L. Markowitz, president of the Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, and M. E. Cory, of the National League.

TRUCE ON NORTH BEACH.

The threatened reduction of prices at two of the leading moving picture houses in the North Beach district to two and a half cents has been averted and the white flag of peace is now waving on Broadway. During the past few months there has been a bloody price-cutting war there and the dusky natives of foreign climes, who chiefly inhabit this section, have been enjoying entertainments at a lower price than prevail anywhere else in the city, perhaps in the entire country. When Sam Gordon, of the Broadway theater, recently purchased the interests of his partners in the Liberty theater, and announced his intention of selling two admission tickets for the price of one, there was a scurrying to and from among the generals of the other houses which culminated in a peace conference. An arrangement was speedily made whereby, for a substantial consideration, the Liberty theater will remain closed evenings, except Sunday evening, when vaudeville and moving pictures will be shown. In turn, the new Verdi theater will not feature vaudeville.

NEW EXCHANGE OPENED.

The Pacific Comedy Film Service has been opened in Film Exchange Building, 109 Golden Gate avenue, under the direction of H. J. Palmer, formerly of Knoxville, Tenn. Comedy films are being handled exclusively, and while the exchange has been opened but a few days many bookings have already been made.

MANILA EXHIBITOR VISITS SAN FRANCISCO.

J. A. Cropper, of the Manila Exhibitors, Inc., Manila, P. I., was a recent visitor here and, after making an inspection of the Exposition, left on a visit to Eastern points. While here he made the rounds of the film exchanges and before returning home will make arrangements for service, most of his film at the present time coming through England. He is interested in the Gaiety, Manila, P. I.; Cine Gaiety, Guam, M. I.; Cine Eden, Cavite, P. I., and Cine Perla, San Roque, P. I.

UNITED HAS NEW MANAGER.

The United Film Service has a new manager in Fred Peachey, a well known film man of this city, whose specialty is working up country trade. J. W. Allen, until recently with this concern, is now with the Progressive exchange.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN CONTEST DRAWS CROWDS.

The Charlie Chaplin contest, held a week ago at the Empress theater, proved to be such a great success that another one is now under way, this being for boys under fifteen years of age. The cash prizes and the opportunities for a road trip have attracted a great representation of amateur talent and some of the boys have been parading the streets in costume to the amusement of onlookers.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The Jewel City Amusement Company has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $500,000 by Frank Burt, W. R. Bacon, Olga Petroff, W. R. Stone and A. J. Evans.

R. L. "Rube" Goldberg, formerly of this city, but now located at New York, is a visitor here to inspect the Exposition and to secure some ideas for comedy cartoons and scenarios.

William Morgan, manager of the Seattle branch of the United Film & Supply Co., is here for a month's stay and President O. V. Traggardh is making some short trips on the road.

Blanche Sweet and Carlyle Blackwell, who led the grand march at the Exhibitors' Ball at the Civic Auditorium, appeared in person at several performances at the Imperial theater, on Market street, during their stay here.

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

W. M. Clark has disposed of the Pastime theater at South Berkeley, Cal., to J. Ashkenazy.

Frank Panero is preparing to open the Delano theater at Delano, Cal. He was in San Francisco recently and purchased a Baird machine from G. A. Metcalfe.

George H. Bird, who has been filling a vaudeville engagement at Joyland, Sacramento, Cal., is investigating the proposition of taking over the Princess theater on Thirty-fifth street, and opening it as a moving picture and vaudeville house. If the deal under way is consummated the house will be remodeled.

Motion pictures have been taken of the fire department of Oakland, Cal., and these will be shown to the offices of various insurance companies as an argument for a reduction in insurance rates.

The Majestic airdome at Tulare, Cal., has been purchased from S. J. Greenwood by M. T. Carkeek, who has taken possession. Mr. Carkeek was a resident of Tulare many years ago, but since leaving there has been conducting shows at Stockton, Sonora, Angels and other cities in Northern California. He is an accomplished musician and will sing at each performance.

The school department of Fresno, Cal., will shortly purchase two moving picture machines for the new Longfellow and Washington grammar schools, now being completed there.

The management of the Kinema theater, Fresno, Cal., has made arrangements whereby those presenting coupons clipped from daily papers will be admitted free between twelve o'clock noon and two p. m., to witness the first installment of "The Diamond From the Sky" serial. Those attending are to receive a Looney Panama hat, which entitled wearers to see the next two installments free.

In his annual report submitted recently to the Board of Education of Sacramento, Cal., Superintendent of Schools C. H. Hughes advocated the teaching of current events through the medium of moving pictures and suggested that blackboards be eliminated in favor of the moving picture screen.

GRIFFITH FILM DISCUSSION IN SPOKANE.

By S. Clark Patchine, Spokane Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MEETING of the city council at Spokane, Wash., on Monday afternoon, July 19, was held over the prospective presentation here for three weeks, starting August 1, of "The Birth Of A Nation" at the Clemmer theater.

Spokane being ruled by a commission form of government the matter was taken before the council, composed of five commissioners, by the Rev. D. A. Graham, pastor of the Bethel A. M. E. church, backed by about 100 colored people and an endorsement from the Spokane Ministerial Alliance and the J. L. Reno Post of the G. A. R. In an impassioned plea the Rev. Mr. Graham opposed the presentation, in Spokane, of the production and said that at least two scenes, depicting negro characters in an unfavorable light, should be stricken from the film if it were shown.

Dr. H. S. Clemmer spoke in favor of the presentation and Judge Adolph Munter (white) championed the cause of the colored people and declared that the play would do much to stir up race prejudice in Spokane and that it was the council's place to do all in its power to prevent any such feeling being stirred up.

After more than two hours of the time of the city fathers had been taken up in the discussion of the mammoth production, declared by Dr. Clemmer to be a moving picture masterpiece, the council voted to send the Commission of Public Affairs, Samuel Glasgow, to Seattle to view the production which is being shown in the Clemmer theater, Seattle.

During the discussion Commissioner Glasgow, who is the city censor and was recently made an advisory member of the National Board of Censorship, commended the support of the moving picture exhibitors since he has been censor and said that any changes ordered had been carefully made. He declared that he had been accustomed to allowing moving picture managers to show pictures here which had been passed by the National Board of Censorship, but that he would be quite willing that any part of "The Birth of a Nation" found objectionable should be stricken out.

Commissioner Glasgow announced that he stood on the decision of the National Board of Censors, which had passed the picture, and unless something was wrong he would permit the production to be presented here.

Judge Adolph Munter appeared as a citizen rather than as an advocate and condemned the play. He said: "I went through the Ku-Klux-Klan period in Alabama and the acts of these night riders were not based on the outrages of white women by colored men, but upon an unreasoning prejudice toward the colored race. From personal knowledge the so-called historical facts portrayed are untrue."

E. J. Robertson protested on the ground that thousands of children who could not discern between fiction and facts would be given wrong conceptions of the colored race and that prejudices would be formed or awakened that it would require years to wipe out.

SPOKANE BREVITIES.

One of the best pictures from a box-office standpoint, recently presented at the Class A, with the exception of the Charles Chaplin pictures, was the Kalem feature, "Midnight At Maxim's," shown July 16 and 17. The many shapely limbed young women dancers held the interest of the audiences throughout the four reels and the "Donkey Dance" called forth much laughter.

Mary Pickford continues to draw large audiences and the matinee on July 20, the hottest day of the year thus far, when "Little Pal" was being presented, on the Paramount program, was largely attended. The theater is advertised as the coolest place in town, owing to its ventilating and air-cooling system. A cartoon, "Watching and Waiting," on the weekly pictures made by William C. Morris, now of New York City and formerly cartoonist on the Spokesman-Review, Spokane, was applauded by the audience. The announcement of a cartoon being on the bill by Mr. Morris is a good drawing feature.

Betty Nansen, billed as the Royal actress of Europe, who is playing before the camera for the William Fox production, is appearing at the Casino this week in "A Woman's Resurrection," from Tolstoi's play. This is Miss Nansen's third appearance in Spokane and the performances are well attended, especially by the Scandinavian and Danish people.

Francis X. Bushman is appearing in "The Accounting," at the Majestic.

Robert Warwick in "The Face in the Moonlight" proved a successful attraction at the Liberty theater for a four days' run. Emmett Corrigan in "Greater Love Hath No Man" proved a good follow picture for three days. This theater has changed the uniforms of ushers and door men from dark blue cloth to light trousers and shirtwaists for the warmer weather and Manager Ralph Ruffner is being praised by the employes for the consideration of their comfort. The uniforms are natty.

F. M. Black, manager of the Lyric picture house, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, bought the equipment of the Casino theater there and closed the Casino.

An agreement has been reached by the Rex and Dream Motion picture theaters of Coeur d'Alene, according to authorative information whereby both are run under the direction of C. R. Potter, who has bought out the interest of O. R. Shern, who owned the Rex. It is understood that the agreement provides that Mr. Shern can re-purchase should he so desire.

NOTES FROM THE NORTHWEST

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

BIDS have been secured by A. W. Eiler, of Walla Walla, Wash., for the construction of his new American theater on east Main street in that city. It will be an ultra modern picture house, 60x142 feet.

Exhibitor A. W. Eiler, of the Bijou Grand theater, Walla Walla, Washington, is putting up a new theater to be called the New American. It is just opposite to the old stand and will have a seating capacity of 1,056 and be a very pretty house and will cost $50,000. All the latest improvements are to be included and the building is to be ready early in the fall. Mr. Eiler, by the way, is a pioneer picture man in the Northwest.

Moving pictures made up the night program for the big celebration in Caldwell, Ida., when the Liberty Bell was there.

Portland Contest Row

District Attorney Demands Adjustment of Difficulties When Complaints Are Made Claiming Unfairness in Awarding Prizes of Picture House Contest—Some Who Had Worked Hard Were Disqualified and Kicked.

By Abraham Nelson, Portland Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Deputy District Attorney of Multnomah County advises that several complaints have come to him from young women who have taken part in contests conducted by picture exhibitors, particularly in Portland's suburbs, that they have been disqualified as the contest neared its close and that all their work had gone for nothing. The District Attorney's office has insisted upon adjustments in cases of this kind by arbitration to determine the fairness of the disqualification with a view of paying to the disqualified contestant the reasonable value of her services to the theater manager.

The first prize has usually been a trip to the San Francisco exposition with second and third prizes of less value and the contests have sometimes been worked in conjunction with other mercantile advertising schemes, making it sometimes impossible to decide upon whom the blame should be laid when accusations of fraud are made.

PORTLAND SERVICE PREFERRED.

Traveling film representatives making the territory in Southeastern Oregon and Northern California advise that the exhibitors in those districts prefer to book their attractions from Portland and even Seattle rather than from San Francisco because of the inconvenient train schedule through those districts from the South.

This condition of affairs seems to exist notwithstanding the fact that many of the towns in question are closer to San Francisco than Portland. The train upon which films are usually shipped for this territory from San Francisco usually arrives in Southern Oregon and Northern California in the early part of the evening, and when the travel is heavy delays are frequent and audiences often disappointed. From Portland a train leaving at midnight arrives in this territory in plenty of time for the evening show and for this reason exhibitors favor Portland as their booking point.

NATURAL COLOR SLIDES ARE STARTLING.

Portland had the surprise of its life during the recent invasion of the Shriners en tour of the Pacific Coast when Henry Berger, heretofore a quiet and unobtrusive resident of the city, startled our citizens by showing to the visiting nobles slides of the magnificent scenes along the new Columbia Highway photographed and projected in natural colors. Mr. Berger has been experimenting with the Paget process of natural color photography and has improved upon the original invention with results heretofore thought impossible.

The wonderful scenes from the highway were shown upon the screen in the ballroom of the Multnomah Hotel and as the snow-clad peaks reflected in the natural blue of the Columbia River, foregrounded by a fringe of yellow blossoming dogwoods, or as the setting sun faded on the slope of Mt. Hood and a purple haze lay over Portland's buildings in the valley, the Eastern visitors gasped with astonished admiration, for Mr. Berger's pictures presented what no hand painted slide ever could show, true color, true sunlight, wonderful shadows and passive life as it exists on Oregon's hills.

During the few days that Mr. Berger has shown his slides he has been importuned by local film men and exhibitors who desire to prelude their regular shows with de luxe still pictures of Oregon's scenery. Mr. Berger is not in the commercial business of making slides and has not announced how he will exploit his achievement, but advises that the slides will be exhibited privately in New York soon.

SUNSET THEATER IMPROVEMENTS.

The Sunset theater, Jennings and Son, owners, and J. E. Murphy, house manager, is adding to its already elaborate front a lighting arrangement which will make the entrance one of the most conspicuous on Washington street. The entire front of the building occupied by the theater will be outlined in pink and red lights carrying out the sunset effect followed in the general decorative scheme of the theater. In addition to the lights already in the lobby two arcs of 750 candlepower each will be installed.

ALLIANCE MAN VISITOR.

Andrew J. Cobe, treasurer of the Alliance Film Corporation, was a two days' visitor in Portland recently. He reports that business conditions in the territory he has covered show signs of improvement. The Standard Feature Film Company recently organized closed with Mr. Cobe for the Alliance program in this territory.

MAJESTIC THEATER RENOVATES.

The Majestic theater is doing its annual renovating and many changes in the interior decorations are contemplated. The work is being carried on without shutting down the house and without inconveniencing the patrons. At this time the old seats are being replaced by those of the latest type with ballbearing hinges and French upholstering, the new seats for the lower floor costing in the neighborhood of $4,000.

NEW POLICY AT THE NATIONAL.

M. M. Rouse, the new manager of the National theater, has made several changes in the policy of that theater which he advises have been very successful. "The Sea Wolf," formerly shown at 20 cents, did a big business, as did Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country." "Hypocrites," formerly shown in Portland at 25 cents, was secured by Mr. Rouse for a return engagement and ran to big audiences during the week of July 25. The price of admission at the National is 10 cents.

Six girl ushers in white uniforms have replaced the men heretofore employed and this new usher service is meeting with much favor on the part of the National patrons.

MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY STARS MAKE PORTLAND.

James Cruze and Sidney Bracey, late stars of "The Million Dollar Mystery," stopped one day in Portland on their way to San Francisco and were well received at the Columbia, the theater at which the serial was shown in Portland.

OREGON BREVITIES.

A. Cacherelis, owner of the Orpheum at Seaside, Ore., was a recent visitor in Portland. He reports that the summer season has opened up well with the hot weather.

F. W. Newton, Rainbow theater, McMinnville, was a recent visitor at the office of the Film Supply Company of Oregon.

C. Olson, of North Powder, Ore., passed through Portland on his way home from Southern California. He pronounces Universal City the wonder place of the world.

Rudrauff Bros. have acquired the Bell theater at Springfield from J. J. Bryan.

Films in Western Canada

Vancouver Conditions Show Legitimate Theaters Slowly Giving Place to the More Popular and Cheaper Form of Amusement—More and More of the Bigger Pictures in Demand—Same Is True of all Northwest Canada

By E. C. Thomas, Vancouver (821 Rogers Building) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WESTERN CANADA is under the spell of the fleeting film, for the populace has decreed that actors should be seen and not heard. The situation in Vancouver, B. C., may be taken as typifying conditions generally. The Empress theater opened with a dramatic stock company, but closed after two weeks of bad business, while the Imperial, with stock musical comedy, lasted very slightly longer. On rare occasions the Avenue plays a road attraction for one night. The Orpheum (the local Sullivan & Considine house, and an exceptionally fine theater, seating 1,800) has discontinued vaudeville, and is now showing seven reels of pictures, changing twice weekly. This is one of the houses turned back by the Loew interests to the original owners, and the picture policy bids fair to be permanent. Even Pantages shows a reel or more of pictures in connection with its vaudeville program, and with the exception of the Columbia, playing pictures and small time acts, this is the only theater in town showing other than straight pictures. Of the latter there are about twenty-five or thirty now in operation.

DEMANDS DOUBLE WIRING.

The City Electrician and License Inspector recently made a tour of the Winnipeg houses, and announced that all theaters must be equipped with a double system of wiring.

TWO KIDDIES FOR FIVE.

P. Tardif, of the Family theater, is now admitting school children to matinees at the rate of two for five cents. The Majestic, in the business district, has for the past year or two been a two-for-a-nickel house. With each admission is given a special ticket good for any show within the following week.

PLANNING A CROSS-CONTINENT THEATER CHAIN.

Developments which will undoubtedly have an important bearing on the Canadian theatrical situation were forecasted at the annual general meeting of the National Amusement Company at Vancouver, B. C., July 17. This company, after its reorganization a year ago, acquired four additional moving picture theaters, and now controls a chain of eight houses in Western British Columbia—the Globe, Columbia and Bijou in Vancouver; the Columbia and Bijou in Victoria; the Empire in North Vancouver, and the Bijou and Nanaimo Opera house in Nanaimo. The company is controlled by local capital, and the following are the officers and directors (some of the leading citizens, by the way, of Vancouver): President, Frank J. McDougal; vice-president, Clarence Marpole; secretary-treasurer, I. B. Fulton; managing director, W. P. Nichols; directors, O. B. Allan, W. A. Shaw and W. D. Wood.

So successful has been the past year, even in the face of the prevalent hard times, that the company contemplates expansion that will eventually extend its interests from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Plans already outlined call for the erection on Granville street, the main street of Vancouver, of a magnificent new theater, seating 2,000, with a large stage capable of accommodating any road attraction, and which will be used for pictures when not occupied by traveling shows. A new theater planned for Victoria will be used for vaudeville, and will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The Bijou at Nanaimo will continue as a picture house, but the theater will be practically rebuilt, and the seating capacity increased from 800 to 1,500. This will be accomplished by extending one side and one end wall.

Mr. Nichols will soon leave for the East, and will arrange to either lease or construct new theaters in Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Saskatoon and Winnipeg. It is planned eventually to extend activities further East, and acquire houses in Toronto, Quebec, Fort William, Ottawa and Montreal. The capital stock has been increased to $1,000,000, and it is considered likely that Eastern capitalists will soon be added to the board of directors.

The marked success of this company, during a period which has been the worst in the history of Canada, is highly gratifying, and indicative of the firm position the moving picture has taken in the lives of the people.

GRAND TRUNK TRAVEL FILM.

R. C. W. Lett, tourist and colonization agent for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, has started from Prince Rupert on a trip over this newly-opened transcontinental line, accompanied by a camera man. Moving pictures will be taken of the beautiful scenery that abounds in the mountain divisions, and these will be exhibited not only on this continent, but in all parts of the United Kingdom.

HEARD IN CANADIAN NORTH WEST.

Scenes of the Edmonton (Alberta) flood were taken by Freeman & Company, of that city, and shown at the Empire theater in connection with a four-reel program, under the auspices of the Board of Public Welfare. Prices were 25 cents and 50 cents, and ten per cent. of the receipts was donated to the relief fund for the benefit of flood sufferers.

A. D. Kean, "The Cowboy Photographer," is to have full charge of all Wild West attractions at the Vancouver Exhibition, Aug. 13-21, and has just returned from the interior, where he made arrangements with many cowboys to attend, bringing with them the wildest horses obtainable. This is the big fair of the year in British Columbia, and Mr. Kean should have an opportunity to catch some exciting action among the bucking bronchos. He was formerly camera man with Miller Bros.' 101 Ranch outfit, but is now doing commercial work in this vicinity, as well as photographing all important happenings.

Alfred Harvey, aged 24, formerly a musician at the Rex, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and later with Ralph Glube, the well known amusement man of that place, died July 3 of heart failure.

Theater managers of Regina, Sask., are just now engaged in a fight with the Musicians' Union. Three houses—the Rex, the Rose and the Roseland—have capitulated, and now display a Musicians' Union slide at all performances. As a result the various unions are doing some rather effective boosting for these theaters.

The Universal Exchange, of Winnipeg, recently arranged a private showing of the Lois Weber-Phillips Smalley feature, "Scandal," at the Gaiety theater. Big business is anticipated when the picture is released.

CLOSE-UPS OF VANCOUVER.

Jack Tripp, handling "Tillie's Punctured Romance" in Western Canada for Bert Levey, of San Francisco, came up on the S. S. "President" and fulfilled expectations by leaving us laughing when he said goodby. He booked the six-reel scream into the Rex for a week at 25 cents and 50 cents (night prices. At last accounts the picture was on for a full week at the Bijou, Winnipeg, following a week at the Province, of the same city.

The Globe theater, which usually changes twice weekly, ran Salisbury's Wild Life Pictures for a full week to good business.

The equipment of the Maple Leaf theater was recently disposed of at a bailiff's sale, under an action brought by the landlord for overdue rent. The outfit was bought by L. R. Nichols, who has opened up with Paramount pictures. A flat price of 10 cents was announced, but matinees were later reduced to 5 cents.

Manager Muir of the Dominion, is pulling for summer business by the installation of a symphony orchestra of eight pieces, in conjunction with his excellent pipe organ, which has heretofore been used alone. The music is featured, as well as the musicians themselves.

IN MINNESOTA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

ST. PAUL residents are recalling Chester Clegg, new manager of the exchanges of the United Film Service Association, as a bright faced, cheerful little newsie who sold them their papers each morning, some twenty years or more, at the corner of Fifth and Roberts streets. He was so little and so young, and yet he had such an unusual business sense for one of his years that he had a "corner" in news hustling business in that part of the town.

The newest angle of women's work for better picture shows for children in Minnesota is the planning of a co-operative appeal to producers for more films suitable for youngsters. It is hoped to make some pictures in St. Paul next fall which can be used for children's shows.

Patrick McMann has given up his sublease on the Park Opera house at Brainerd, and Frank G. Hall has again become local manager of the house, which is under lease to F. E. Nemec of St. Cloud.

Directors of the Starland Amusement Company have been discussing plans for enlarging the Starland Palace theater, at Eighth and Wabasha streets, in St. Paul. One of two plans is to build an entirely new motion picture house adjoining the present building. A seating capacity of 3,000 is the aim.

Plans for complete remodelling of the Empress theater building at Duluth, which recently was damaged by fire, included a motion picture theater blanked by storerooms. A. W. Hunt, Duluth, is architect.

H. B. Smoots, of Kerkhoven, has purchased the Milo theater, at Little Falls, from Ray Butts.

L. V. Calvert, manager of the New Garrick theater, at Minneapolis, and Miss Florence Campbell Ryder, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., singer at the scene house, were married at Sioux Falls.

The Crystal, at Fairmount, owned by A. B. Clark, was closed for a short time while arrangements were made for a new film service.

N. B. Reynolds has sold his motion picture show at Howard Lake.

The Crystal theater, at Bird Island, showed pictures made at a local farmers' picnic.

S. K. Leen has changed the name of the American at New Ulm to the Ruby. He has changed prices to 15 cents for Saturday and Sunday and 10 cents for other nights. He will operate the Gem only on Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays. It will be a strictly 10-cent house.

Archie Du Clos has purchased the Lyric theater, at Marshall, from Mrs. Alton.

C. F. Hall has purchased the Echo theater, at 25th and Central avenues, in Minneapolis, from Hitchcock & Francis.

Two well-known photoplay stars recently appeared in person at Pueblo, Colo., and Manager Anderson of the Grand must have spoken his thoughts freely to a reporter, this item as witness: "While Cruze and Bracey pleased the movie fans at the Grand, they were so full of talk about carburetors, speeds, taking hills on the high, driving without chains and other gibberish that Manager Anderson was glad to get rid of them."

"PANTOMIME, POLITICS AND PROHIBITION."

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A MOVING picture campaign is to be conducted by former Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts in his efforts to be elected to the gubernatorial chair for another year. The plan as it is outlined at the present time, is to have moving pictures taken of the various industries of the Bay State and to have them shown throughout the territory. He will then give them to the national Prohibition committee for use in its national campaign. The former governor himself will also be seen in these pictures addressing large gatherings and mingling with the workers.

The governor claims that the sending of these films throughout the state will be a great benefit to the different Boards of Trade and incidentally to himself. This plan of a political campaign is the sole topic of conversation among Boston politicians since it has been announced. One political leader has characterized the campaign as the Three P Campaign, namely, pantomime, politics and prohibition.

NEW ENGLAND ITEMS.

A new open air theater has been opened at Beverly, Mass., by Messrs. Beckett and Mulvaney. They are using the General Film program.

Manager Edward J. Farrell of the New England office of the General Film Service has returned from a two weeks' trip through the Provinces.

Arrangements have been completed whereby the new Pathe serial will be printed in story form in the Boston Globe. Manager Samuel Bernfield has received many requests for bookings on this picture.

Manager Harry Gustin of Keith's Bijou Dream, Boston, Mass., has received many letters from the patrons of his playhouse, in which they express their appreciation of the Balboa serial "Who Pays," which has just completed its run in the theater

Samuel Hasse of the New England office of the General Film Service is one of the contestants in the world series contest, which is being conducted by the Boston American.

A new moving picture feature is being run in the Boston Journal daily. A photograph of some prominent photoplayer, three columns in width and a half column special story, is published each day. This feature is tending to increase the paper's popularity.

At the runoff of the Fox featuure, "Dr. Rameau," in the exhibition room of the New England office of the Fox Film Corporation, every exhibitor was forced to applaud the picture. Manager Harry F. Campbell stated that he was surprised at the reception.

An announcement of great importance to every New England exhibitor will be made shortly by Manager Fred. B. Murphy of the New England United Film Service. During the past month and a half Mr. Murphy has been in New York three or four days a week on business. He desires to state that this announcement will be of vital importance to every exhibitor.

Sam Moscow, roadman for the New England office of the United Film Service, has returned from a recent trip through Maine, during which he won a special prize offered by Manager Fred B. Murphy to the roadman selling the most service during a fixed period.

Manager Winfield H. Bradley of the New England office of the Mutual Film Service has returned from a three weeks' vacation, which was spent in Frederick, Md.

Manager J. A. Eslow of the New England Universal Film Service and a party of friends are enjoying a short vacation in the Maine woods. During his absence, Assistant Manager Albert Shaller is directing tho New England destinies of the Universal program.

Manager W. D. Foster of the Community Moving Picture Company, which is furnishing free moving picture shows to the children of the tenement districts of Massachusetts has arranged with Manager Fred B. Murphy of the United Film Service to use the many children's productions which were released through the United Program. These features have been in great demand by persons interested in settlement work and all have expressed their approval of the films.

Charles Barolet, formerly connected with the New England office of the United Film Service, has returned from a four months' trip through the west.

Stanley Hand has succeeded J. C. Elliott as the manager of the New England office of the World Film Corporation.

The New England Educational Association is preparing a series of moving pictures entitled "Historic and Picturesque New England." These will be exhibited in the Central and Western States for the purpose of inducing pleasure travel to New England territory. The first of this series, "Metropolitan Boston of Today," is practically completed.

SMALL FINES FOR SUNDAY VIOLATION.

By John P. Flanagan Maine (Bangor) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

WHETHER or not amusement places are to be allowed in the future to cater to the crowds at Old Orchard, a leading Maine summer sesort, on Sundays, is a matter that depends to a great extent on the next move by the selectmen, as well as upon the part they take in enforcing the "Blue Laws," which they have started to do.

To test the practicability of enforcing the Sunday Blue Laws, complaints against the proprietors of four enterprises, including the moving picture house of which John W. Duffy is proprietor, were sworn out during the past week. The complainant was H. D. Pike, who had been conducting a shooting gallery that was ordered to close. Mr. Pike, after being told that he could not do business on Sunday, concluded that he would see how generally the Blue Laws could be enforced, and proceeded to swear out warrants. All the respondents appeared in court except Mr. Duffy, who was out of town. Small fines were imposed, and in two of the cases sentence was suspended.

THE STAR AT FREEPORT NOT A LITTLE HOUSE.

Mary E. Coomb, former owner of the "Little Hip" theater at Freeport, Me., asks for a correction of the statement in the issue of July 3 that a small moving picture house had opened at Freeport, representing the first competition experienced by the Mortimer Amusement Co. She says in part: "The present manager of the Star theater, Mr. H. N. Bragdon, is by no means the first opposition Mr. F. E. Mortimer has met with. I ran the 'Little Hip,' now the Star, for sixteen months, and sold it to Mr. Bragdon June 1, as I am about to embark on a much larger enterprise. I ask you to correct the statement that the Star is a little theater or a first opposition."

TALKED OF IN MAINE.

The Delano Planing Mill, on Fore street, Portland, Me., which manufactures the Mortimer film cleaner, was heavily damaged by a $100,000 fire recently. The Mortimer Company advises that fortunately 100 of its cleaners had been sent to the shipping at Freeport, so the company will be able to fill orders for a few weeks at least. The plant will be rebuilt at once.

The Mortimer Amusement Co. is conducting a photoplay theater at Freeport, using General and Universal service, also playing the Pathe serial, "Exploits of Elaine." Business keeps up to standard for the warm weather. Admission is 15 cents and one 25-cent ticket admits two adults, which is found to be a good feature. F. E. Mortimer, the proprietor, is thinking of building a house with a seating capacity of 400.

The Bangor Railway & Electric Company, which conducts Riverside Park, a summer theater in Hampden, near Bangor, Maine, has just started using moving pictures at Riverside on Sunday evenings. The first production of "Samson and Delilah," a five-part Universal feature, was seen by a large audience last Sunday. This is the first time that people of Bangor have ever had an opportunity to see moving pictures at a summer theater on Sunday and it is appreciated.

Henry Main, proprietor of the Patten moving picture house, was a visitor to Bangor during the past week, and secured some General Film features.

The Lemiken Bay Yacht Club has started using Universal films for a private moving picture show given at the club for the members Wednesday and Saturday. Fifteen cents admission is charged.

E. D. Wilder, proprietor of Odd Fellows hall, Lincoln, who is to open a new house in South Brewer, is to hold a prize contest for naming the theater. Five dollars will be given to the successful contestant. Mr. Wilder will use Universal service.

Proprietor J. McGillicuddy, of the Star theater, Richmond, is using Universal service one night a week.

Wallace Gould, proprietor of the Pastime theater at Brunswick, which was destroyed a few months ago by fire, will open his new house August 9. It is to be called The New Pastime, and will be one of the finest theaters in the state. There are to be 700 seats.

The Coliseum theater, Gardiner, J. Burns, proprietor, will open in August, after having been closed during the summer.

The New Millinocket theater, at Millinocket, has opened under direction of Mr. George Ferland. Mr. Ferland will use a five-reel show in his new house, consisting of Universal service and Phoenix features, the features being booked through Earle B. Tinker of Ellsworth. Mr. Ferland's theater at East Millinocket will be operated by Mrs. Musa Steiner.

The Strand, Old Town, under the efficient management of Henry Thibodeau, is doing well through the summer months. Phoenix features are proving a good drawing card.

The Chic theater, Milo, is using one preferred feature a week from the Tinker-Phoenix Company. The Chic is managed by Paul Peakes, and is one of Maine's best theaters.

Friends of Earlie B. Tinker, agent for the Phoenix Film Company, will sympathize with him in the misfortune which has come upon Mrs. Tinker, who, it is feared, is gradually becoming blind. She is under the care of specialists.

The Swimming Club, at Bar Harbor, Maine, one of the most exclusive organizations of this fashionable summer resort, containing many millionaires among its members, is now having moving picture exhibitions. The first one, during the past week, was a great success.

Following the regular dinner a moving picture show, with all the thrillers that appeal to audiences of every type, was given, and the social leaders seemed to enjoy the hairbreadth escape of the heroine just as much as at the nickel shows.

James Whalen, who has been employed in the various Keith moving picture theaters in Bangor for the past seven years has returned from a vacation spent at Carmel with Mrs. Whalen. Mr. Whalen is now employed at the Park theater.

Ohio Referendum Call

Cleveland Expects 100,000 Signatures to Petition for Referendum on Censorship —President Ben J. Sawyer, of Local League, in Charge of Campaign—Allied Interests Back Movement—Patrons of Shows also Actively Interested.

By J. D. Raridan, Ohio Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

OHIO exhibitors and exchange men are pushing the campaign for a referendum vote on the censorship law with increased fervor. Nearly every theater manager in Cleveland is soliciting the signaaures of his patrons to petitions demanding that the proposition be put before the people of the state for a vote. Ben J. Sawyer, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, is in direct charge of the campaign.

More than 100,000 signatures are expected in Cleveland alone. It is estimated that 5,000 citizens of Cleveland earn a living either directly or indirectly from the photoplay enterprise and each of these is expected to use his or her influence in bringing about an understanding of the situation in Ohio. Aside from the exhibitors, real estate men, brokers, lithographing concerns, printing houses, illuminating companies and a score more business interests are concerned with the motion picture business. It is Mr. Sawyer's aim to make all these interests see how vitally cenorship enmeshes the theater and thus indirectly touches to a great extend the allied interests.

Women patrons of the picture theaters appear only too willing to sign the petitions for referendum, though to do so would be of no avail. A number of managers have been asked by women to permit their signatures and were disappointed to learn such would be ineffective.

MANDELBAUM INTERESTED IN NEW COMBINE.

Emmanuel Mandelbaum, Cleveland picture play promoter, is on the organization committee of a $2,000,000 combine of picture exhibitors. The object of the organization, it is understood, is to standardize the output of the big producers and introduce each year one mammoth play. Final plans of the organization will be perfected at a meeting in Chicago, August 25. William Sievers, of St. Louis, is in charge of the organization work.

CLEVELAND SHORT NOTES.

Tim Long, now in charge of the Melba theater, Detroit and Highland avenues, Cleveland, is one of the popular managers of this city. He has worked the business of the theater up to capacity—even after enlarging it to seat 1,000 people.

Charles A. Garner, former assistant manager of the Miles theater, has been secured to manage the Princess, one of Cleveland's downtown picture houses. He is planning a change of policy to feature attractions.

Frank M. Riefsnider, owner of a picture theater at Urbana, O., is a candidate for mayor of that town. In addition to his interests in this line, Reifsnider is a detective and humane officer—and he has a hobby. His particular hobby is pigeons and he has raised this feathered friend for forty years.

Hiram Cockrel, of Bucyrus, O., went to a picture theater a week ago and there saw his granddaughter, Elsie Janis, in her recent film production of "Caprices of Kitty."

INDIANA SABBATH PROTEST.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

AFTER apparently getting away with his purpose to keep his shows open on Sunday, James Alcorn of Greensburg, Ind., found himself the center of such a storm of protest started by the Christian League that he called off the attempt.

No public statement was made by Alcorn, but J. Ed Murr and Walter H. Reynolds, pastors of two churches, appointed by the protest meeting to call upon Alcorn, made an announcement praising the reasonableness of the owner greatly, and his willingness to defer to the judgment of many of the citizens as highly commendable.

The city administration refused to take a stand in the matter, and it is quite likely, if the doors of the show houses had been opened, the performance would have been allowed without legal protest.

The advance notices were to the effect that the city council had given permission for the exhibitions on Sunday, but when the church people "rose up" there was not a councilman who would admit that he had done anything of the sort. It may be so. At any rate, Alcorn is not trying to question anybody's veracity.

HEARD IN INDIANA.

There is always a crowd waiting to get into the first, or seven o'clock, show at the Princess theater, Crawfordsville, Ind., one of the steady money makers on the Indiana circuit.

Henry W. Sommers, moving picture censor at Gary, Ind., has a petition from the colored people of the town asking that the appearance of "The Nigger" at the Cosmo theater be cancelled. It is probable that the picture will be shown in spite of the protest, as it is believed the colored people do not understand the nature of the film to be laudatory of the man who finds he has negro blood in his veins.

The Orpheum theater, Evansville, is now changing pictures daily and the vaudeville twice a week.

The Little Grand, Madison, Ind., has the white brick front about completed.

B. F. Keith's House, Indianapolis, is announcing Charley Chaplin amateur imitations every Tuesday and Friday.

More seats have been installed, extra space obtained in the aisles and two big suction fans added by the remodeling at the Theato, Washington, Ind.

The stock season has closed at the Family theater, Lafayette, Ind., but the house will not close, the management announcing a film program afternoon and night. The house is being remodeled, two Powers 6A machines, electric operated, a mirror screen, ventilating fans and later a pipe organ go into the house.

Lawrence Hipskind, manager of the Orpheum, Hartford City, Ind., was called to the bedside of his brother at Wabash, Ind., who is seriously ill.

A Mt. Vernon, Ind., sailor boy on the New Hampshire writes home that pictures are one of the attractions on board.

The Highland Film Company, a new producing company at Cincinnati, capitalized at $3,500,000, may locate a studio at Lawrenceburg, Ind., in the hills on the Ohio, the section affording a great variety of natural settings which appeal to the promoters. James Tate Ford, president of the company, has closed an option on ninety-six acres near Ft. Thomas, on the Kentucky side of the river.

J. A. Ormiston has opened a show at Bruceville, Ind.

Vincent Kraig of Huntington, Ind., has bought the Theatorium at Newcastle, Ind. His policy will be a change of program daily, with features Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

The Bucklen theater, Elkhart, Ind., will install a pipe organ. The house is showing nothing but films now.

Manager Rogers of Crumps theater, Columbus, Ind., will add vaudeville to the films attractions of his house beginning in August the week of the county fair.

Lawrence Hipskind, manager of the Orpheum, Hartford City, Ind., has been made scoutmaster of Troop 4 of the Boy Scouts of Hartford City, a tribute to his popularity among the youth of Hartford City.

Photoplays of historic setting are being run at the Indiana Union at Bloomington, Ind., the seat of Indiana University. Big attendance has greeted "Spartacus" and "Julius Ceasar."

Miss Edna Maison, a Universal star, is to appear at the Cosmo theater, Gary, Ind., in talks before the screen. At the same time the Cosmo theater is showing "Vanity," a picture in which Miss Maison is the heroine.

The World Film Corporation of Richmond, Va., has filed notice with the Indiana secretary of state of the increase of capital stock to $3,000,000.

The Park theater, 3431 East Tenth street, Indianapolis, was sold at auction by McFadden & Burkhardt.

Indianapolis graduates of Culver Military Academy arranged for an exhibit of the Lyman Howe pictures of life at the Academy, the show being given at the Victoria theater, Indianapolis.

Levi Reynolds, of Chalmers, Ind., is building a theater that will be ready about Sept. 1. It is to have removable seats and available for dancing on short notice.

Layman Downey has bought My Show from Charles Walker. My Show is in Rochester, Ind., and has been doing a good business for some years. Mr. Downey retires as county treasurer soon and bought the house with an eye to the future.

The Columbia Amusement Company, Lafayette, has sold the Orpheum theater, Lafayette, to Charles Richards and J. M. Chamberlin, who have been running the house for some time.

BUFFALO NEWS LETTER.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent (229 Oxford Avenue) of Moving Picture World.

THE Colonia theater, at Lansing and Nichols streets, Utica, N. Y., has been extensively remodeled and reopened. The Colonia, formerly the Buckley, is owned by the Hippodrome Amusement Co. and is managed by Peter Karl, vice-president of the concern. The house has been made cozy and beautiful. The other improvements include a new ventilating system. High class moving pictures are featured at the Colonia.

Another recent opening was that of the Granite theater, of Newark, N. Y. John Wrench is owner of the building and Lynn Wrench is manager. The seats are of circassian walnut and the finishing is in black walnut, with tinted walls and ceiling. The theater seats about 400.

The Grand moving picture theater, Olean, N. Y., which was redecorated, has been reopened. The color scheme is in pink and green.

Manager Leon Schlesinger of the Palace theater, Buffalo, now changes his attractions four times a week—Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday. He says this change of policy is largely for the benefit of noonday patrons.

By a court order Mayor Rand, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., has been directed to issue a seven-day-in-the-week license to Henry Klinger, proprietor of the Oliver theater, to operate a moving picture theater in that city.

Manager Fisher of Crystal Beach, a summer park near Buffalo, recently had moving pictures taken of bathing and other scenes at his resort. Manager Michaels of the Acedemy theater, Buffalo, furnished twenty musical comedy girls to pose in the pictures, which were shown later at the Academy. Edward Scanlan, Western New York editor of the Buffalo News, is press agent for Crystal Beach. He has had wide experience in this line.

The Park is the name of a Hammondsport, N. Y., moving picture theater, formerly the Bijou. V. F. Johnson is the new proprietor of the house.

J. W. Boeckmann is president and treasurer and S. E. Shaw managing director of the Niagara Motion Picture Co. of Olcott Beach, N. Y. The concern will take local views and later may feature educational films.

A moving picture theater is being built at the rear of the new O'Reilly block in Exchange street, Geneva, N. Y.

Manager Fred Gillen is extensively repairing the Armory theater, Binghamton, N. Y.

A new $10,000 organ is being installed in the Shubert theater, Utica, N. Y., and will be ready probably by Labor day. The pit which the organ will occupy is 25 feet wide, 14 feet long and 10 feet deep.

Various phases of the New York Telephone Co.'s business were explained in moving pictures recently at the Hippodrome theater, Niagara Falls.

Chautauquans, some of whom formerly criticized moving pictures, now heartily endorse this form of amusement, and at the ampitheater at Chautauqua films are shown to good crowds. There also is an open-air screen at the resort.

A "Charlie Craplin" contest was held recently at Ontario Beach Park, near Rochester, N. Y. Five prizes in gold were awarded to the successful imitators of the famous film star.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Ministerial Union has asked that the local moving picture interests repudiate a recent exhibition there of a film which the ministers claim was "vile and filthy."

Charles W. Denzinger has resigned as manager of the Olympic theater, Buffalo. Mr. Denzinger is planning to remove to New York following a vacation on his farm. His successor at the Olympic has not been announced.

CAPITAL CITY GOSSIP.

F. N. Crocker has recently opened the Ghent theater in Norfolk, Va. While in Washington last week he reported that despite the heat he was doing a good business. Mr. Crocker has been showing the Fox features.

W. F. Harris, manager of the Superior theater in Richmond, Va., has been here contracting for features. He intends converting his house from a "jitney" to a straight ten cent proposition.

Mrs. A. E. Thorp, who opened the first theater in Richmond, Va., was a visitor at the home of Lieut. and Mrs. Jim P. Anderson in this city. It is said that Mrs. Thorp contemplates retiring from the motion picture business and to travel throughout the United States visiting those places which she has heretofore only seen on the screen. Mrs. Thorp has already disposed of the Rex but still conducts the Hippodrome.

Beal & Iden have opened the Bluemont theater, in Bluemount, Va. This is one of the attractive summer mountain resorts an hour's ride from Washington.

J. T. Cornwell has opened a motion picture theater in Purcellville, Va.

A large plate glass window in one of the doors of the Federal theater, 814 Light street, Baltimore, Md., was demolished recently when a horse attached to a milk wagon endeavored to have himself considered as a patron of the house. He had walked upon the sidewalk and through the closed door.

"GOING SWIMMING?"

The latest organization in this city is the Motion Picture Exhibitors' and Exchangemen's Swimming Club. Each day a score or more of the leaders in both branches of the business pile into automobiles and are whisked away to the Y. M. C. A. pools. Harry Crandall is the leader of the swimmers and so far has succeeded in getting at least half-way across the tank in one afternoon. Herbert M. Osborn and Joseph P. Morgan are looked upon to take future honors in the acquatic classes, for both of these are quite expert swimmers. After the tank hour they then devote themselves to various athletics in an effort to get in trim for a much-hoped-for heavy fall business.

Anti-Labor Pictures

In Washington, Local Labor Interests Disapprove of Certain "Unfair Attacks" on the "Workmen of the Country" Through Film Shows—Managers of Theaters Put It Up to Manufacturers—Comedy Cops also Criticised.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CERTAIN labor interests of the National Capital are voicing their disapproval of what they declare to be pro-capital, anti-labor film plays which they say seem to have a monopoly of the theaters at the present time. One writer in a local paper states that he has often resented "these flagrantly unfair and prejudiced attacks upon the workers of the country, and on more than one occasion have expressed my opinion to the managers of the theaters, who have usually replied that this is the sort of play the film companies furnish, and that they are obliged to take what they can get. If this is the case and if it is the result of a definite policy of the film manufacturers to discredit working men, who are the chief patrons of the 5 and 10 cent houses, I should think this would be a subject which union labor might do well to look into."

Following this comes the plaint of George W. Sollers, who is connected with the local police headquarters, in the Policeman's Monthly, wherein he states that "it has always been the impression that the motion picture was intended to instruct, amuse and entertain those to whom they must necessarily depend for support and ultimate business success. To their credit be it said that the majority of the screen pictures and photoplays are elevating in tone, well constructed and free from exaggeration and misrepresentation. There is, however, a class of shows misnamed 'comedies' billed as representing scenes in a policeman's life, to which policemen as a class strenuously but none the less rightfully take exception."

Continuing, Mr. Sollers declared that the policemen resent being exhibited in pictures or elsewhere as untamed jacknapes or as fourth-class clowns. The plays to which they especially object are those in which the policeman is pictured as a bewhiskered numbskull; a shack said to be a police station wherein there is a gang of automatons in crazy-quilt uniforms on a bench asleep. He says a silly-billy enters and fires a revolver to wake up the "squad," and so on, ad nauseum, and a movie star takes the lead. He arraigns the producers for turning out such gross misrepresentations and going down the line, the exhibitors for allowing the same to be projected in their theaters.

TO SHOW LATIN-AMERICA WHAT WE CAN DO.

Motion pictures are to play a prominent part in the campaign of American manufacturers to secure a larger share of the commerce with the republics of South and Central America. The Bureau of Commercial Economics, which is composed of substantially all the leading universities of the United States, has secured several hundred reels of films depicting American manufacturing plants. These they have displayed before boards of trade, manufacturers' associations, chambers of commerce and universities. The Bureau has already obtained a collection of such films with titles in Spanish for circulation in the Argentine Republic. It is declared that one reel of motion pictures will do more to educate our Latin-American neighbors to the greatness of our country than tons of printed literature.

JOIN V-L-S-E FORCES.

Leon J. Bamberger, manager of the Washington branch of the World Film Corporation, has severed his connection with that firm to accept a position under C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E. Mr. Bamberger will establish the sales department for the new company.

F. B. Spurrier, who is the assistant manager of the Washington branch, will open an office in this city for the V-L-S-E on or about Sept. 1. He has just resigned his position with the World Film Corporation and now goes to Philadelphia, from which place he will cover the territory to be assigned to him. Alan Bachrach, now roadman with the World Film Corporation, will join Mr. Spurrier and will visit the exhibitors in Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Spurrier will personally attend to the business in the District of Columbia and Maryland, in which territory he has a large following.

GET SILVER BACK FROM FILM BATH.

Recovery of silver from the worn-out fixing bath used in making motion-picture films has become a profitable industry for the one plant engaged in it in Los Angeles, Cal., where thousands of feet of negatives and positives are developed every day in the many picture studios located in and around the city. The chief ingredient of the composition used on a photographic plate or film is silver bromid. Under the action of the light much of this is changed chemically and is rendered practically insoluble, but a considerable portion is left in a free state, and this is removed by the hyposulphite of soda used as a fixing bath. Owing partly to chemical changes, but mainly to the accumulation of the silver bromid held in solution, the fixing solution eventually becomes inactive. Formerly it was thrown away, but now it is sold and the silver is recovered. The average tank, where the rack system of development is used, holds from 165 to 200 gallons of the solution and the price usually paid for a tankful is $30. The solution is collected in a tank wagon which is equipped with a pump and hose for pumping from the laboratory tanks. It is then placed in a precipitating tank and treated with some chemical, such as sodium sulphid, with the result that a residue consisting of sulphid of silver is precipitated. This is then subjected to chemical treatment which extracts the pure metallic silver in quantities sufficient to make the business of recovering it profitable to the operators.

REVENUE TAX PLUS A PENALTY.

Proprietors of theaters and other places wherein public entertainments are conducted who have not paid their special revenue tax created under the emergency act of 1914 will have to pay a penalty if the same is not received at the internal revenue office, at 713 G street, Northwest, before Aug. 1, according to Deputy Collector S. E. Perkins. This tax was due July 1, and it is the belief of the collector who is in charge of the local office that many are not aware of the fact that a penalty will be placed on their tax bill if they do not pay up before the end of the month.

A. Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation, has been in Washington looking after the business brought about by the new policy of that organization and reports exceptionally good business in Philadelphia, where in one day he received nearly one hundred applications, each of which was accompanied by a certified check covering one month's service. Mr. Carlos leaves Washington for a tour of the middle west, visiting Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and St. Louis.

Sam Dembow, Jr., district manager for the southern states for the Fox Film Corporation, covering the territory embracing the Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Washington offices, spent some little time in this city putting into operation the new one-a-week policy. He leaves for the south, going to Savannah, Ga., by sea.

FILM EXCHANGE CLUB TO HOLD MEETING AUGUST 5.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

A MOST important business meeting and luncheon has been arranged by the new Film Exchange Club of Philadelphia to be held at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Broad and Walnut streets, on the date of Aug. 5. Every member of the club has been urgently requested to attend as business of a very important nature will be transacted at this session of the association. Several new members have recently joined the organization, including Mr. Marcus, Mr. Libros and Mr. Rochford.

TUBERCULOSIS FILMS.

Motion pictures showing the ravages upon the human system made by tuberculosis, and showing measures of prevention, were recently used by Director of Health and Charities Ziegler, who was the principle speaker at the opening of the health and sanitation carnival held by the Home and School League of the William Cramp Public School, Howard street, above Ontario. The exhibition took place in the school building. Director Ziegler explained the different phases presented by the pictures in detail and took the greatest precautions to impress upon the minds of his audience the simple rules of keeping well.

HEARD IN PHILADELPHIA.

C. S. Edwards is managing the business of the Pathe Exchange during the absence of Mr. Atwood, who is at present enjoying a vacation amid the healthful and invigorating balmy Maine atmospheres.

The Germantown Theater Company, of Philadelphia, has been incorporated under the laws of Delaware for $5,000 to conduct amusement enterprises, including moving picture establishments.

The disbursement of the one per cent. monthly dividend which has recently been the custom of the Mutual Film Company has been discontinued.

The Calehuff Supply Company announces the sale of much moving picture equipment, including a No. 6A machine, to the Dayton Lumber Company, of Dayton, Pa.

The Lippincott Airdome, B street and Alleghany avenue, is now running moving picture exhibitions several nights each week and, during the balance of the week, is known as the Alleghany A. A. and is used for the purpose of staging fighting exhibitions. This policy will only continue for a short period of time, according to the management of the airdome.

The management of the new Windsor theater, Frankford, announce that they are doing a most satisfactory business and that they have every reason to believe that the theater is going to prove a huge success.

A charter has recently been granted under the laws of Delaware to the Standard Magic Mirror Sales Company, the character and object of which firm is to manufacture and sell moving picture screens of all varieties in any part of the world. The majority of incorporators are residents of the city of Dover, Del., and they have capitalized the new concern for $15,000.

Mr. G. J. Schaeffer, district manager of the World Film Corporation, was recently a visitor to Philadelphia.

Mr. and Mrs. Effinger, of the Leader theater, 41st street and Lancaster avenue, West Philadelphia, are preparing for their vacation, when they will motor through the New England States to Maine, stopping at Boston for several days in order to visit several friends of theirs who reside in the Hub.

William Wirt, of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, has returned from a trip to the Niagara Falls, at which place he spent a most enjoyable vacation. On the return trip Mr. Wirt stopped at Cleveland, O., where the home of the National Carbon Company is located, and placed a large order for American carbons.

Harry Saunders, well known personage around the headquarters of the Swaab Film Service, 1327 Vine street, announces his engagement to Miss Lillian Coats, the wedding to take place in September.

The Atlantic Coast Development Company, C. R. Hall, president, are constructing an auditorium at Avalon, N. J., with a seating capacity of two thousand. They expect to have it completed early in August.

EXCHANGES MAY LEAVE DALLAS AND ITS CENSORS.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DURING the middle of July, the Board of Public Welfare, under which the local motion picture censors work, in Dallas, had a meeting and formulated plans to restrict films from showing in the city that had any tendency toward the immoral. According to the ideas advanced at that meeting, about one-fifth of the pictures that have been coming in to Dallas would be on the restricted list. The Fox productions featuring Theda Bara were especially in the minds of the board members in discussing the future censorship question.

On Monday, July 19, the exchange men met in the offices of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co. and discussed the situation, and it was suggested by Manager Levison of the Fox branch in Dallas that the exchanges give notice to the Municipal authorities that unless the censorship ordinance was put more reasonable, the exchanges would vacate the city, moving to Fort Worth, thirty-three miles west of Dallas. He said that Dallas as a city should appreciate the investment of film exchanges had in the city, and that they should do what they could as a city to help the film business and not be hampering the industry at every chance as the city fathers have been in the past two months.

It is very probable that definite action in the entire matter will be taken within the next two weeks, but the majority of the exchange men believe the city will so arrange the ordinance that the really meritorious film will be passed for showing in the city.

BYRD TO MANAGE LOCAL WORLD FILM OFFICE.

W. M. Byrd, traveling representative of the World Film Corporation at Dallas, has been installed as manager of that office by the Southern district manager, E. Auger. F. M. Sanford, former manager, is in California on a vacation, and it is said upon his return he will be appointed manager of another World office. Mr. Byrd is very popular in the Southwestern territory among the exhibitors and his competitors. He has received prizes from Mr. Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World, for turning in more business than any other road man in his territory.

WILL CONTINUE V-L-S-E. DALLAS THEATER DIDN'T DROP V-L-S-E. OFFERINGS.

In our issue of July 24, on page 691, we stated that the Queen theater of Dallas, Texas, had "sprung a surprise" by changing its program from General Specials, V-L-S-E, "The Goddess," etc., to a different brand. are in receipt of a letter from Manager E. H. Hulsey, of the Queen, stating that the theater has been and expects to continue booking V-L-S-E offerings. This house does not adhere to any exclusive program and will often use V-L-S-E offerings in the future.

Request is made that this statement by Mr. Hulsey be published in the Southern Theatrical News.

BRIEFER NOTES FROM DALLAS.

John M. Sayeg, exhibitor at Ennis, Tex., was blessed with a baby girl on July 12.

W. J. Shivers, formerly owner of the Cliff Queen theater, Dallas, Tex., is now operating the old Healy airdome in Fort Worth.

J. W. Box, Dixie theater, Rockdale, Tex., has temporarily discontinued business, but will open again about Sept. 1 with an almost entirely new house, the remodeling work starting upon his closing the house.

The Cozy theater, Waco, Tex., opened the middle of July with what might be called "the official opener," "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter starring.

Jno. Snively at Paris, Tex., has closed his Lyric theater for repairs, and will have one of the neatest theaters in the state when completed about Aug. 15.

F. G. Wallace, representative of the Williamson Submarine Pictures in the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., offices at Dallas, has returned to New York.

E. Auger, Southern District manager of the World Film Corporation, is visiting in Dallas this week.

A. D. Bethard will soon open his theater at Peak and Bryan streets, Dallas, Tex., with a seating capacity of 600. The house will be located in one of the best suburban districts of the city.

Harry Botto, booking clerk for the World exchange at Dallas, is now with the Mutual, and C. E. Buchanan, formerly with the Progressive, is handling the booking at the World.

Albert Russell, general manager of the Texas Metro office, is sojourning this week in Atlantic City with the stockholders of the Metro.

W. E. Atkinson, special representative of the Metro, from New York, visited the Dallas office of that concern last week and left for Chattanooga, Tenn.

The war series of the Picture Playhouse Film Co. are going good in the Southwestern territory, and Manager McIlheran is keeping them working solid.

W. J. Lytle, manager of the majority of the motion picture houses in San Antonio, still wants more of them. During the last six months he has opened the Empire, seating 1,800; the Soledad Roof, seating 2,100; the Soledad theater, seating 2,000; and now he has plans approved for another big one on Commerce street, which will seat around the two thousand mark.

LUBIN.

THE GREAT LONE LAND (August 9).—Marion Harley, the only child of a railway agent, marries Neal Cameron, a young engineer in her father's employ, and is disowned. Neal is unable to obtain employment, and becomes a prospector. They are very poor. When their only child is three years old, Neal decides to move to a new region, and they set out in their wagon to cross the desert.

While the mother and father are busy making camp, the child opens the spigot of the water cask, a loss not discovered until next morning. The wagon is abandoned and they go forward on the horses. The horses in time become exhausted, and Neal and Marion struggle forward on foot. Besides carrying the child Neal must half carry Marion. Marion realizes that there is no chance for all of them, but that without her to hamper him Neal might win through and save the child. She therefore steals away while Neal is in an exhausted sleep. When he wakes and finds the note she has left, he realizes that she is right, and, though heartbroken to think that he must abandon her, takes the child and staggers on.

Marion, after going as far as her failing strength would permit, has fallen unconscious, and is so found by her father, who, with a fully equipped party is inspecting the course of a new proposed railway line. She is revived enough to tell her story, and the party follows her trail. Neal is found unconscious but living, and the child is unharmed.

RELENTLESS DALTON (August 10).—This cartoon comedy shows the adventures of the hero, the persecuted heroine, and the pursuit of the villainous Dalton.

HORRIBLE HYDE (August 10).—Reginald Claverhouse, an actor, owes a board bill. He is rather afraid of his landlady, for he is a timid chap in spite of a good front. When she demands her pay, he begs hard and gets off for this time. He secures an engagement in stock and the first play is to be Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde. He has played the part before and hunts up the false teeth that are a large part of the Hyde makeup. The landlady, looking through the transome, is almost scared to death. He sees that she is afraid of Hyde and carries around the false teeth as a protection. Instead of paying his bill he could even borrow money from her if he wanted to. Then comes the opening night and the landlady is in the audience. She realizes that she has been tricked and when he comes home there is a heart-rending scene, and she even takes the teeth away from him.

BOLD EMMETT, IRELAND'S MARTYR (Special—Three Parts—August 11).—This play is enacted during the stormy days when Robert Emmett tried vainly to free Ireland. Con Daly loves Nora Doyle, who lives with her mother. In a cave nearby men are making arms and ammunition. Robert Emmett visits them, and then goes into the heart of the enemy's camp disguised as a flute player, and returns safely. The constabulary visits a family and a riot starts. Desperately wounded, Major Kirk is taken to the home of Mrs. Doyle. Nora and Con nurse him back to health. There is a meeting of the revolutionaries in the Doyle house, which is attended by Emmett. An informer, Feely, has notified the authorities and soldiers surround the house. Emmett escapes by climbing up a chimney, and Nora and Con are arrested for treason, tried, found guilty and sentenced. Con is led first to the execution, the rope is put around his neck and the trap is ready to be sprung. A friend of Con's in a tree-top overlooking the prison yard shoots at the rope and with a splendid shot severs it. In the meantime Major Kirk, remembering the kindness of Con and Nora, has obtained a pardon, and in the nick of time saves them from execution, and all ends happily.

THE POWER OF PRAYER (Special—Two Parts—August 12).—Andrew Morgan, a self-made capitalist, is money mad. His friend, the Rev. Dr. Scott, vainly tries to convert him. The clergyman induces Morgan to attend a lawn festival, and there Morgan meets Madeline Wilson. Learning that Morgan is an atheist, Madeline refuses him. He thereupon sets out to ruin her father, and when Wilson appeals to him for help, Morgan replies that only as a son-in-law will he lend his assistance. To save her father, Madeline marries Morgan. Morgan scoffs at his wife's belief in God. The union is blessed with a son. The mother dies, and Morgan plans to make the boy a financier. He orders the governess away when he finds her teaching little Andy his prayers. The clergyman, Scott, remonstrates, but to no avail.

And then little Andy becomes ill. When Morgan rushes home frantically with Scott after receiving a message from the governess, the family doctor tells him that there is little hope. Morgan telegraphs for the best specialist in the country. The specialist arrives. Morgan, unable to bear witnessing the child's suffering, remains in the next room with Scott. After a while, the clergyman goes to find out how the child is. Scott tells him that the child is dying, that money has failed, and there is but one hope left, "On your knees and pray to God!" Morgan sinks to the floor, and a prayer comes from his lips. As if in answer, an old chemist comes up to the house. It develops that the old chemist has discovered a new remedy for the child's illness, and although the specialist is skeptical, it is tried, and proves successful. All this time Morgan has been on his knees in the next room, and when Scott enters and tells him that his prayer has been answered, Morgan slowly takes the cross that hangs from the clergyman's neck and presses it to his lips.

THE DECEPTION (August 13).—Henry Wharton, a popular author, and his wife, Frances, both receive mail on the morning the story opens. His wife's letter is from an old sweetheart. Wharton sees the writing on the envelope and becomes jealous. He goes to his study and tries to write a story, but he cannot get his mind on it. He goes downstairs, only to find his wife and Thomas Burton, the old sweetheart, in earnest conversation. He looks through the waste basket and finds the scraps of the letter, and then hears a conversation over the 'phone between his wife and Burton. He goes to her room and an angry scene follows. He leaves the house and goes to Burton's apartment. Not finding him there he returns home, and finds a note on his desk, which he reads, and seems to find a good idea for his story, for he starts to write. He hears a noise in his wife's bedroom, and getting up, looks in her room and sees her coming to his study.

He hides behind the curtains and sees her go to his desk and take a cross which he has left there, and which Burton has been admiring. She leaves the room and Wharton follows her to Burton's apartments, where he finds her alone with Burton. He breaks open the door and Burton throws a vase at him as he enters. Wharton dodges the vase and shoots at Burton, and then renounces his wife. The scenes goes back to Wharton furiously writing at his desk and just finishing the story. He takes the story into his wife's room and tells her he has just finished another one of his wild stories based on what might have happened to Burton, Wharton and Frances. They laugh over the story and Wharton calls Burton on the 'phone and tells him of the story. Burton goes back to bed, as it is two o'clock in the morning. The picture ends with a good-night kiss between Wharton and his wife.

HER ROMEO (August 14).—Billie himself admitted that Bess was not crazy—she was merely romantic. Her father said that Billie was as crazy as she. Had she been reading "Othello" she might have wanted Billie to black up, but she was reading "Romeo and Juliet," and she wrote Billie that he must either come as Romeo or not at all. Billie just naturally had to see his lady fair, so he hired a costume and went. He told his chauffeur that he would be back in a couple of hours, and the chauffeur knew that that meant three or four, so he started for a roadhouse to cool off. Billie made a rope ladder out of a clothes line and some bean poles, but he had never rehearsed the scene before and he did everything but fly. He flew a moment later when Bess's father discovered him and pumped a load of birdshot into him. He flew as far as the gate, but there was no car there, so he kept on flying down the road, but not rapidly enough to beat out some more shot. He outdistanced pursuit, but it was not his lucky day, for he ran right into another Romeo, who was also the object of pursuit because of his poor performance of the part, and the angry villagers, mistaking Bill for the other Romeo, gave him another good run, until he met the car coming along the road. That got him home without further adventure to decide that Romeo was not for him.

KALEM.

THE RUNAWAY WIFE ("Broadway Favorites," 4 parts August 9). Blinded by overwork, Eastman with his wife and son, lives with Hester. The latter eventually drives Alice from the house and leads Eastman to believe that his wife has eloped with Vane, a former suitor. Alice, now companion to a woman of wealth, sends her earnings to her husband. Hester, however, intercepts the letters and appropriates the money.

Driven forth by the unscrupulous woman, Eastman and Arthur go to the city. Vane hears that the two have met death in a fire and tells Alice. Ignorant of the fact that her husband and son did not die, Alice eventually marries Vane.

Fourteen years later Arthur is an artist. The boy takes his father abroad to a famous eye specialist. Arthur falls in love with Lillian and through her meets his mother. The latter discovers her son's identity and the realization of her position fills her with horror.

Eastman meets his wife. Alice falls unconscious. Fate intervenes on the following day when Vane is killed in a steeplechase. An operation is performed upon Eastman's eyes and the man's sight is restored.

Alice confesses to Arthur and obtains his promise to effect a reconciliation with her husband. Although he has never ceased to love her, Eastman refuses to look upon the woman he thinks had proved unfaithful. At this point, a death-bed message is received from Hester in which the woman confesses her villainy. Proof of Alice's innocence softens Eastman's heart and he takes her in his arms.

THE WINNING WASH (Ham Comedy—August 10).—Ham and Bud land jobs as assistants to a Chinaman in a laundry. Lizette brings her father's white vest into the place. The boss of the laundry endeavors to make love to the girl. Ham, however, plants one of his seven-league feet into the Chinaman's stomach. This done, Ham makes love to Lizette himself.

Seizing a hot flat-iron, the boss chases Ham back to the tubs. Poor Ham's trousers catch fire and he is compelled to sit in a tub of suds to extinguish the blaze. But, washing the vest Lizette has brough in, discovers a roll of bills. Calling Ham, Bud shows him his find.

Grumpy Griff, Lizette's father, dashes into the laundry in search of his money. Ham and Bud flee.

Grumpy turns the laundry inside out in his quest for the vanished cash. In the meantime, the adventurers stop to catch their breath and count their money. A cough causes them to turn around and they find themselves staring into the eyes of a policeman. Without a word, Ham and Bud thrust the money into the officer's hand and rapidly walk away!

THE RIDDLE OF THE RINGS ("Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," No. 4—Two Parts—August 11).—Celeste, the manicurist summoned to Mrs. Celeste, the manicurist summoned to Mrs. Weed's room, admires the rings which the woman owns. Mrs. Weed, however, carelessly places them on the bed while Celeste prepares to manicure her nails. The woman interrupts the work with a request that Celeste summon Vincenzo and have him remove the breakfast tray.

The Italian appears and carries the tray away. Immediately afterward, Mrs. Weed discovers her gems have disappeared. She accuses Celeste, but the girl's pleas impress Francis and Hilton with a belief in her innocence.

Vincenzo is next suspected. Hilton enters the kitchen with Mrs. Weed. The latter finds one of her rings on the breakfast tray. Vincenzo, however, protesting his innocence, escapes. Mrs. Weed threatens to sue the management for the loss of her rings and is finally appeased when presented a check for their value.

The house detectives watch the woman closely. Dranton calls and is shown to Mrs. Weed's room. Aided by a microphone, Francis and Hilton overhear her tell how she had tricked the hotel management. Peering through the transom, Hilton sees Mrs. Weed unscrew the ornate knob on the bedpost and remove the "stolen" rings.

THE COUNTRY GIRL (Alice Joyce reissue—August 13).—Jim Burke, a side show man, is attracted by the pretty face of Mary, a country girl. He sends her a note proposing a meeting. Flattered, the country girl meets him and they arrange to elope.

Lazelle, Burke's sweetheart, overhears the conversation and tells John, Mary's suitor. John warns Mary's parents.

Remembering that he had seen a buggy driving down the road toward the station, John jumps into another vehicle with the girl's father and a wild chase ensues. Mary is overtaken just as she is about to board the train. The folly of the step she was about to take is impressed upon the girl and she consents to return home.

THE LIMITED'S PERIL ("Hazards of Helen" Series, No. 40—Aug. 14).—Wharton, trailing Red Leary and his gang, learns that the men intend to wreck the Limited. Curley, a fireman, is implicated. The crooks become aware of Wharton's presence and attack him. Helen comes to the detective's rescue with a revolver and captures one of the men.

Undaunted, the rest of the gang plant dynamite in a culvert. Adair comes upon them just as they are in the act. The crooks capture the detective, bind him, and then place their victim so near the dynamite that the explosion will kill him.

One of the desperadoes tries to capture Helen, but the girl flees and attempts to cross the drawbridge a short distance away. The crook overtakes her and the two battle as the draw is raised. Falling, they roll down the incline. Helen's assailant is stunned and the girl gains her freedom.

The draw is lowered and the girl rushes back to rescue Wharton. Red Leary's men have connected the detonating charge to a push button which is placed on the track. Thus the Limited in passing over this button will seal its own doom. Helen sees the apparatus just as the train approaches, and snatches it from the track in the nick of time. She frees Wharton and accompanied by him, goes back to where the button lies for the purpose of disconnecting it. They come too late—an accident causes the dynamite to explode. Caught by surprise, Red Leary and his men are killed.

VITAGRAPH.

WHAT DID HE WHISPER? (Aug. 9).—Under an assumed name, Phineas courts a widow and makes love to his own wife. He lands in court with a Breach of Promise suit looming big. He confesses, whispers in his wife's ear, and all is forgiven.

LIFE'S YESTERDAYS (Two parts—Aug. 10).—Richard Dalton, once a promising young doctor, looks back upon his life. LaStella, a dancer and dope fiend, had become infatuated with him, and he fell victim to her wiles. From her he learned the deadly morphine habit and after that his downward career was rapid. While under the influence of dope, he gave a child the wrong medicine, with fatal results. His career ruined, he had gone to an isolated cabin and after a long struggle conquered the drug habit. Dalton resolves that he must atone for the life he had taken and goes to Moloki Island to take charge of the leper colony there. He devotes his life to the suffering unfortunates, knowing he can never return to the civilized world again.

HIS BUNKIE (Aug. 12).—"Now match him if you can, this Reg'lar Army Man. Rattlin', Battlin', Colt or Gatlin', Reg'lar Army Man." The daughter of his old pal and bunkie becomes his ward. He finds they have met before, are already in love, so he proposes and she becomes his wife.

A KEYBOARD STRATEGY (Aug. 13).—Frank flirts with the pretty blonde stenographer in his hotel. She takes the conceit out of him then falls in love with him. A bellboy gets Frank in very wrong, but in an amusing manner he sets himself right, then—wedding bells.

HEAVY VILLAINS (Broadway Star Features—Three parts—Aug. 14).—F. G. Lawrence, retired business man, favors Philip Preston for a son-in-law. Mrs. Lawrence prefers Reggie, the Dainty Dude. There's trouble, right there. Mrs. L. becomes suspicious of a stout stranger prowling about the place and tells Mary, the husky cook, to point him out to Serena Slim, the slender sleuth. The mysterious fat man happens to be Mary's beau, so she sics Serena onto John Bouncer, Philip's fat uncle. Serena is some "shadow" and the police have to be called in to stop the comedy of errors which follows. After explanations all 'round, Lucy nestles her pretty head on Philip's shoulder, while her parents soothe Bouncer's ruffled feelings.

MY LOST ONE (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three Parts—Aug. 17).—Perdita, a pretty chorus girl, is sought in marriage by Juan Mora, a violinist, and by Henri Ducharme, director of the Neapolitan Opera House. Perdita accepts Juan. Juan's income is not sufficient to gratify her love of extravagance and when Ducharme returns to her life with declarations of love and flattering promises of a great career, she agrees to forsake her husband and her child, Lola. On the night of the expected flight Ducharme calls for her, but in anger, she sends him away. The temptation to be a factor in the operatic world is too strong, however, and she later decides to return to the stage. Leaving a note for Juan, stating that Ducharme had convinced her she is sacrificing a brilliant career, she acquaints the director of her decision to accept his advice and would like to see him at once.

After receiving Perdita's note, Juan seeks Ducharme, a bitter quarrel ensues and the violinist is discharged from his position in the orchestra. He writes a beautiful opera with Perdita as the central character, which he names "Mi Perdita."

Meanwhile Perdita begins rehearsals under Ducharme's direction and makes wonderful progress. Ducharme plots successfully to become possessed of Juan's opera. He then flatters Perdita by telling her he is writing an opera for her. Discovering the loss of his work, Juan becomes seriously ill and, being destitute, finds lodgings in a miserable garret with Lola, his daughter, as his only companion. After a long illness, Juan wanders into the street penniless and hungry. He is caught in the act of stealing a loaf of bread. His simple story of misfortune not only effects his pardon, but secures for him a position as waiter in the place.

In the meantime, Ducharme has produced Juan's opera under his own name and Perdita scored a tremendous success as the prima donna. One night, the orchestra in the place where Juan is employed as waiter plays the overture from "Mi Perdita." He drops his tray in amazement and staggers to the leader's box, where he sees the printed score with Ducharme's name as composer. He is informed the opera is being played at the Neapolitan Opera House. Tottering homeward for Lola, the two are soon seated in the front row of the "pit." His overture his opera and Perdita. The limit of his endurance is reached and, staggering forth, he cries out to Perdita and falls to the floor. The opera is interrupted by the confusion and Perdita, regardless of all else, rushes from the stage to take Juan and Lola in her arms. While nursing her husband back to health in his garret, she learns that he is the composer of "Mi Perdita." She is seized with a strong desire to expose and punish Ducharme, and acquaints the Board of Directors of the opera company of his duplicity. At a meeting of the directors, she succeeds in proving Juan the rightful composer of the opera and brands Ducharme as a thief. Juan is appointed to succeed Ducharme, who is dismissed in disgrace, and Perdita, under the able direction of her husband, continues her brilliant career.

BIOGRAPH.

HER HIDDEN LIFE (August 9).—Ruth Warren sprains her ankle and, after a period of convalescence, discovers that her place at the telephone switchboard has been filled. Unable to find work, she entertains the proposal of a friend that she use her beautiful voice in cabaret singing. For her mother's sake she adopts this mode of life, but keeps it a secret from Charles King, a young bachelor who helped her home at the time of the accident. One day a friend of Charles sees Ruth's picture in his room and, to his host's surprise, comments on the pretty cabaret girl. "That is my affianced wife!" King replies hotly. His friend persuades him to attend the cabaret. There he comes face to face with Ruth under circumstances calculated to disgust him. She runs away and, in despair, is about to attempt suicide when her mother intervenes. Charles, following her home, assures her that his love, far from being killed, is enhanced by her unselfish devotion to her mother.

THE LAW OF LOVE (Special—Two Parts—August 10).—Stanley Brentwood meets Mildred, daughter of Judge Murdock, and they become secretly engaged. "When I have completed my college course we will be married," Stanley declares, and Mildred goes home to wait. His mother, traveling abroad, has been seriously injured, and he hastens to her side. During this time Mildred gets no word from her lover, and at last she can keep her secret no longer. Her old nurse elicits the story and repeats it to Judge Murdock, who takes his family into seclusion. Stanley, returning, is thunderstruck on discovering that the Murdocks have gone away: Mildred's father writes: "The man who crushed out the life of my daughter is not fit to rear her child." Stricken with remorse, Stanley becomes a clergyman, and eventually is appointed to the church in the village where Mildred, after her father's death, has continued to live in seclusion. Mildred's daughter, now five years old, is hurt when another child's nurse tell her charge that she must not play with little girls whose mothers are not respectable. Desirous of complying with established forms, Mildred goes to the church and requests Stanley to marry "me and my dolly." Touched by her innocence, the minister accompanies her home, and comes face to face with his lost love. Explanations ensue, and later they are quietly married.

STRONGER THAN LOVE (August 12).—The explosion of a chafing dish starts a fire in Ann Corey's studio. Gaston La Rue, a fellow artist, living next door, puts out the flames and saves her life. He is badly burned, and the girl nurses him. Thus she discovers that he is penniless and hungry. She pretends to sell

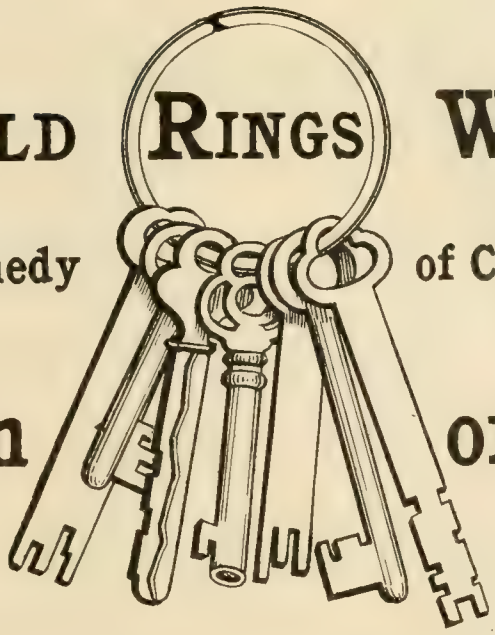
THE WORLD RINGS WITH LAUGHTER

over the comedy of Charles Hoyt

"A Bunch of Keys"



Nothing puts the spectator in such good humor as a good comedy.

It stirs up all his latent love of fun and makes him smile at the cares of life.

The trials of the day loom large and oppressive when seen at too close a view.

There is nothing like a good laugh to reestablish the equilibrium and give a correct perspective of life to the careworn.

A hearty laugh banishes gloomy forebodings and turns all petty ills to a rose-colored hue.

"A Bunch of Keys" is the funniest of all the great comedies of that master funmaker, Charles Hoyt.

Essanay's five-act photoplay surpasses the screamingly funny stage production in genuine humor and comic situations.

The all-star cast, with June Keith, John Slavin and William Burress in the leads, assures its success. Produced by Richard Foster Baker.

To be certain of a really good comedy, book this Essanay feature through any of the branch offices of the V. L. S. E. Inc.

his paintings, buying them herself, and later induces Gaston to divide their living expenses with her. He meets Grace Van Dyke, a wealthy girl, and is engaged to give her lessons. In time they are betrothed; but Gaston is so enthusiastic about Ann's goodness that Grace breaks the engagement. Not until then does he discover that he has overlooked the priceless treasure of Ann's love, while she has been heartbroken.

THE LAST DROP OF WATER (Biograph—August 13—Re-issue No. 10).—Jim and John love the same girl. She prefers John. After their marriage the young couple set out for the West, joining a large caravan that has been formed for mutual protection against marauding Indians. Later the wagon train combines forces with another caravan, of which Jim is a member. In camp, John shows his true character by becoming drunk while every other man is thinking of the women and children. The wagons start across the Great Desert and are attacked by the Indians. A stockade of the wagons is formed. The settlers make a determined stand, but soon the water gives out. Volunteers go for water across the edge of the desert to the last water hole. All are killed with the exception of Jim and John. Fainting in the desert, Jim is near death when John finds a tiny trickle of water in his canteen. After a struggle with himself he gives the water to Jim, and dies a hero. Jim, revived, reaches the water hole, fills the canteens and returns. The party are saved by the arrival of troops, who disperse the Indians in a running fight. A monument is then raised in memory of John.

THE LITTLE SLAVEY (August 14).—When the boarding house keeper took her away from the poor farm, the little orphan looked for better existence; but she soon found a slavey's life. Fate had not forgotten her. The crusty star boarder talked too much about his money; a crook living in the house resolved to rob him. But the crook's young pal refused to take a hand in that game. He had fallen in love with the little slavey and resolved to go straight. So his former pal stole the money and, out of revenge, placed it in his room. When the detectives came, he chuckled with suppressed glee. But they did not find the money in that room. To the surprise of all, the little slavey then came forward and led them to the room of the thief, where she had hidden the money after discovering the plot against her lover. He, touched by her devotion, vowed to go straight if she married him. Leaving the city, they worked together for their own home.

EDISON.

NOT MUCH FORCE (Aug. 4).—O'Toole is the only cop in his home town. When he is not shining up his badge, he is sleuthing around trying to make a real, dyed-in-the-wool arrest. But after failing to land a burglar who enters the house of a member of the town council, O'Toole is warned that unless he manages to arrest the next burglar who turns up he will have to hand over his over-polished badge to another. Young Pat McNat is in love with O'Toole's daughter, Mabel, but is ordered away from the house. Now, however, O'Toole gets an idea. He will promise Pat the hand of his daughter if Pat will dress as a burglar, wearing a mask, and allow himself to be captured by the redoubtable O'Toole just as he is engaged in "robbing" the house of Malinda Sprinks, an old maid. Pat is game, and agrees to be on hand, costumed as per instructions, at the appointed hour.

But on the way home O'Toole acquires a "bun" at the saloon, and on getting to his house goes straight to bed. That night, after his wife has retired, the telephone rings. Miss Sprinks is on the wire; a burglar is in her house! Mrs. O'Toole tries her best to wake hubby, but he is dead to the world; so she dresses herself and puts on O'Toole's coat and hat. Swinging his club, she takes Pat, in his burglar make-up straight off to the jail and locks him up. Returning home, she goes to bed, after returning hubby's hat, coat and stick. Two hours later a real burglar comes to Malinda's house, and again she calls up the police department. This time he answers the call himself and, quickly dressing, goes off to "arrest" Pat, as per arrangement. But he finds that this burglar is the real thing. When the burglar objects to being arrested, O'Toole gives him a five-dollar bill, telling him to stick to his bargain and come quietly. He takes the burglar off and puts him in the cell next to Pat. Next morning, as he is explaining how he made the arrest, his wife enters and tells her story. The committee investigates the affair and as a result, O'Toole is given a chance to do some "clean-up" work in criminal circles in the shape of a job scrubbing the floor of the jail. His wife is appointed in his place and told that, henceforth, she may do the badge polishing in that town. Pat, released, hastens to wed Mabel, with her mother's sanction.

JUNE FRIDAY (Four Parts—Aug. 6).—Samuel Blake, a cocaine fiend, treats his wife so brutally that she takes her own life, after leaving her infant, a girl, on the doorstep of the village general store. Miss Huntley, the storekeeper, finds the baby and decides to adopt it. Since the month is June and the day Friday, she decides to call the baby "June Friday." Blake, meanwhile, has been driven out of the village.

Eighteen years later, June is still with Miss Huntley, and helps her in the store. Paul Duncan, a profligate young New Yorker, meets June, and is soon making love to her, she showing that she is drawn to him. He fills her head with stories of the great city. June, resenting the unkind treatment of her foster mother, follows Duncan to New York. He secures her a position in a manicure parlor, and finally gets her promise to marry him. Fate has caused Samuel Blake, after being driven from his native village, to eventually enter Duncan's employ as a valet. He is still addicted to the drug and, knowing this, Duncan persuades him to masquerade as a minister and go through a fake marriage ceremony between himself and June. Not many weeks later, during which time Duncan treats June very badly, one of the men who acted as witnesses at the "wedding" tries to blackmail Duncan. Their conversation is overheard by Duncan's uncle, who immediately dismisses him from the office and cuts off his allowance. Shortly afterward, his uncle tells him that he will reinstate him and look after his future if he will give June up and undertake a business trip to South America. Duncan's "yellow streak" immediately shows itself, and he accepts, leaving a note in which June is told that even the furniture has been sold to a dealer. Reading the note, June realizes her position, and gives the valet her rings and other jewelry to pawn for her. In taking off a locket, it is opened, and Blake realizes the truth at once, and tells June. She is compelled to return to her old position in the manicure parlor. Here she meets Tom Van Est, a friend of Duncan's, but a man of very different character. Not knowing of her past, he falls in love with June, and, after much persuasion, induces her to become his wife.

Four years later Duncan returns from South America. Visiting Van Est, he is brought face to face with his friend's wife—the girl he has wronged. He tells her that, unless she visits him at his hotel that evening, he will tell her husband. She promises to come to Duncan's rooms, but before leaving tells her father that she is going there to plead for mercy in the name of her child. Blake determines to follow her, and gains entry to the hotel by one of the rear doors. Knowing the number of Duncan's apartment, Blake arrives just as June is kneeling over the body of Duncan. He had attempted to force his attentions upon her and she, picking up a knife to defend herself, killed him in the struggle that followed. Blake drags June away with him and takes her home. Since Blake has been thrown out of the hotel on a previous occasion when he was heard to threaten Duncan, he is suspected of being the murderer. He writes a confession and sends another sealed note to his daughter, begging her to remain silent and so protect her honor and her life. Then Blake commits suicide, after leaving the notes where they will be found by the police.

NOT WANTED (Aug. 7).—James Bowen has married twice, and is the father of two children, Bobbie being his first wife's child. The step-mother absolutely misunderstands the little boy. Everything that Bobby does is wrong; he is "always in the way."

The climax of this story is led up to by Bobbie's being locked in his rooms after he has incurred his step-mother's displeasure by dirtying his clothes and hands. The woman is really in a highly nervous state, and seeking relief from this, she starts to smoke one of her husband's cigarettes. Laying it down on an ash tray close to the window, she goes off with a neighbor, leaving Bobbie in his room and the baby girl—her own child, and her greatest treasure—asleep in her crib. The lighted cigarette catches the curtain, and the blaze, spreading, starts a fire. Bobbie discovers the fire. His first thought is of the baby. Determined to save his little sister, he, after wrapping the baby in a blanket, fights his way out through the clouds of smoke and reaches the open air. Here his step-mother, almost frantic with grief, and his father are waiting, and the baby is taken from Bobbie's poor, burned little arms. His step-mother is brought to a realization of her selfishness and unconscious cruelty.

Dear Mr. Nielsen:

This is to certify that I showed "THE SPOILERS" in my theatre two days and it is positively the greatest production ever shown in this city, and has proven the talk of the town.

I played to capacity business at 25c. Every one said it was the greatest feature they had ever seen and at least one hundred came back to see it the second time.

We are considering on running a return date on same. We also consider any house lucky which books "THE SPOILERS."

We surely wish this big feature all the success in the world.

THE MELODY OF DOOM (Aug. 2).—Henri, a violinist, nurses a fevered Hindu back to life. Henri receives a letter, reading "I enclose proofs that the she-devil, Zara, whose terrible influence over your brother led him into deepest crime, has put him out of the way. Avenge his death."

And then it is that the mystic begins to teach Henri how to play "The Melody of Doom" upon Henri's violin.

Zara, the adventuress, has begun to weave her spell about Weaver, a messenger in his uncle's bank. She coaxes him to give her the bank funds. Weaver, with a satchel of the bank's funds, visits Zara. Just as the woman has him in her power, and reaches for the satchel of money, "The Melody of Doom" is played from without.

A note is handed Zara which states: "The police will come for you. They know of Adolphi's death. Fly to 16½ Alley Court. I am in hiding there also. Will watch for your coming." Zara leaves for the address where she is confronted by Henri, who says: "I am Henri, brother of Adolphi whom you slew."

Zara, locked in an inner room, receives a note which reads: "Until you shall confess to justice, the death of Adolphi, the strains of fear will haunt your prison chamber. Henri." Henri draws the bow across the violin strings, beginning the theme.

Unable to stand the strain Zara confesses.

THE TAKING OF MUSTANG PETE (August 3).—Sheriff Jim Bradley is visited by his sister, Ruth, from the east, and all the cowboys are infatuated with the beautiful girl. A reward of $100.00 has been offered for the capture of Mustang Pete, a desperate train robber. Ruth tells her brother that she has not yet seen a real cowboy. To play a joke on his sister, the sheriff has Bill Daly disguise himself like Mustang Pete and call on Ruth. Bill encounters Mustang Pete and is overcome.

Mustang Pete visits the sheriff's house and orders food from Ruth.

Sheriff Tom Lacy of Tulare County is also on the lookout for Mustang Pete, and captures him. Bill has recovered consciousness and goes back to tell the sheriff. He meets the boys and they start out after the real Mustang Pete.

THE PRIMA DONNA'S MOTHER (Aug. 4).—Myra Barnes, trying to struggle through school, is repeatedly snubbed by her companions because of her degraded mother. She finally runs away. Ten years later Myra Barnes is known as the "Queen of Song."

Back in the old home, Myra's mother becomes more pitiable. Myra sends her sufficient funds but insists that the past be kept buried. Myra's concert tour takes her to her old home where no one dreams that she is the Myra Barnes who disappeared so long ago. Myra's heart is torn with a longing for her aged mother, yet she cannot bring herself to claim her. Myra is given an ovation at the concert. The aged mother, overcome by her daughter's song, rises and calls to Myra.

THE SCARLET LADY (Special—Three Parts Aug. 5). Doris Gray and Jim Courtney plight their troth during a ball at Mrs. Gray's seashore home. Howard Shaw, Jim's rival for the love of Doris, vows revenge. an invitation from Jim to accompany Mrs. Gray and Doris on Jim's yacht the next day.

Judge Malone invites the girl to attend a session of the night court. Ethel Hayes is pleading with the judge for leniency, in the presence of Doris and her mother, she tells Judge Malone the story of her life; of how she was obliged to pose as an artist's model and how later she was compelled to submit to worse than a living death.

Doris Gray sympathizes with the girl, takes her under her protection and gives her a chance for happiness. Mrs. Gray and Doris tell Ethel that they will introduce her as a friend from abroad, and no one shall ever know the truth.

As time rolls on, Ethel becomes the society favorite. Jim Courtney, overcome by Ethel's charms, tells her that he loves her. Jim's attitude toward Ethel is seen by both Howard Shaw and Doris. Ethel pleads with Jim to remember his allegiance to Doris and Jim steps back ashamed. Ethel, returning to the house, meets Howard. She tells him that she must leave for the city. Howard offers her the use of his yacht. Then he orders that Ethel be taken to Jim Courtney's yacht instead of his own.

Before leaving Ethel writes a note to Doris telling her that she does not wish to cause her unhappiness. Jim also writes Doris, saying that he is going away to try and fight against his love for Ethel. Aboard Jim Courtney's yacht, Ethel confronts the owner, and in an embarrassed way, says: "I thought I was aboard Howard Shaw's yacht." She is about to take her departure when Jim is overcome by smallpox.

Ethel again meets Doris accompanied by Howard Shaw, and starts to tell Doris how Howard got her aboard Jim's yacht. The health authorities order's Jim's yacht quarantined. Doris backs away from the sick room in fear, while Ethel courageously attends the invalid.

Weeks later Jim is convalescent. He receives a note from Doris saying: "I rejoice in your recovery. Our engagement was a mistake and I hope to hear of your marriage to Ethel." Jim takes Ethel's hand and says: "I have sent for a minister and I want you to marry me today."

THE BLACK LEOPARD (Jungle Zoo Animal Picture—Aug. 7).—Donald Lee, traveler and sportsman, meets Mabel Davis, a spoiled society girl. Doris Lambert, Mabel's dependent cousin, is practically a servant.

A week later in India, Doris, Donald, Mabel and Mrs. Davis visit a bazaar and Mabel shows petulant disappointment because she is refused the only black leopard skin in that part of India. Dexter prepares to leave the jungle and Mabel tells Donald that he should accompany Dexter and procure a black leopard skin for her.

After many adventures encountered in the jungle, Donald secures the coveted black leopard skin. Upon the homeward journey, he has an exciting combat with a lion and his face is disfigured. When Donald returns home and Mabel sees the scar on his face, she has full realization of her selfishness and she flings the leopard skin from her. Donald then seeks Doris who does not show repulsion.

ESSANAY.

BRONCHO'S SURRENDER (July 30). Because her husband gambles the wife leaves him and, taking their child, goes West, where she secures work as a school teacher. Broncho is a fugitive from justice and, wounded in the arm, seeks shelter in the wife's cabin. She lies to save him when the posse questions her and cuts her finger to account for drops of his blood on the table cloth. Just after Broncho leaves the cabin, grateful, the husband enters and kidnaps the child, making his escape to the stagecoach. Broncho holds up the coach and takes the child instead of robbing the passengers. He returns with the child to the cabin and there gives himself up to the authorities who have been consoling the wife. She is so grateful to the outlaw that she kisses him as he is led to jail.

STREET FAKERS (Aug. 5).—Two street fakers and their wives arrive at a small village at the same time and take rooms at the only hotel. In the evening they set up rival stands and the crowds circulate back and forth, neither faker being able to hold them for any length of time. The fakers and their wives finally get into a desperate battle in which bricks are hurled. One strikes a policeman and he calls his aids and tries to arrest the four. They escape to their hotel, however, and prepare to flee from the village. On the steps of the hotel they encounter the police and bump into them, knocking them down. The police drag off an innocent man sleeping on the porch while the fakers shake hands over their escape.

WHEN MY LADY SMILES (Three parts—Aug. 10).—Janet, daughter of a proud, penniless old Southern colonel, employed in a fashionable millinery shop, delivers a hat one evening and is escorted home by the rich customer's son, Edward, who refuses to court Velda Browning. After the colonel's death, Janet and Edward elope. Edward is forbidden to return to his home. Several years later, very ill, he is taken back by his mother, on condition that Janet relinquish her baby and Edward. Edward's strength does not return, pining for Janet. Remorseful, the mother brings the girl back to her home, and Edward's normal mental state returns when he sees Janet's wonderful smile spreading over her face as she clasps the baby to her heart.

THE FABLE OF THE TIP AND THE TREASURE (Aug. 11).—Once there was a prominent lad named Roger Danby whose grandpa, Rufus Danby, had been a roving sea captain. Among the old traps belonging to the adventurous old sea dog was a log boom -in which he had placed a dusty document. Grandson found this and figured that if he followed the dope he would find a large cask of buried treasure. Roger packed up and started for Treasure Island. Father had not been kidding. Sure enough there was the boulder, but there was a bird perched on it. Eleanor was painting scenery and daubed her heart on Roger's new khaki shirt. It seems that granddad was not only a sea captain but something of a matrimonial agent. Moral: Keep on digging and you will find something.

THE BELL-HOP (Aug. 12).—Ben was snoozing peacefully when the first patron registered and demanded to be taken to his room. Ben took him up in the elevator, but something happened to it and they swooped rapidly up and down before they could get out. Ben returned and took up the "window-smashing suffragette," rather she yanked him after her by the ear. And when he had returned to the lobby a third guest had registered—a beautiful young lady with a little dog. The other bell hop took her up, however, and left an old maid with a Newfoundland dog for him. When Slippery Slim registered Ben had the hardest job of all, for he had to carry up his trunk. He let it fall out of a window on the head of a policeman. Ben discovered water running in an empty room, and in trying to shut it off slipped and fell and nearly drowned.

WAKING UP FATHER (August 4).—Jerry hungry, hits upon a scheme to obtain a free feast. In a lunch room a policeman is deeply engrossed in consuming an inviting spread. While his attention is distracted Jerry pours a large quantity of tabasco sauce in his coffee. A few moments later, after the officer has attempted a drink, the restaurant is in an uproar, and when the excitement has died down Jerry is in the seat vacated by the officer and enjoying the remainder of the meal. Sighted by the proprietor Jerry anticipates trouble and wisely exits hastily. He winds up, after several disastrous incidents, at a grocer's shop. A prominently displayed sign offering a job to a good strong man interests Jerry and he applies. He is engaged, but after catching sight of the proprietor's pretty daughter, work no longer holds any attraction for him.

The proprietor reproves Jerry who, annoyed, chucks him in a barrel of water and hoists the barrel by means of a pulley and rope high up in the rafters of a barn. Meanwhile, the store offers a fine opportunity for a pair of robbers, who make the best of their chance by carting out everything movable in the place. The proprietor's cries from the barn attract a group of policemen who release him. He enters his shop, is dumbfounded to see his stock and fixtures gone and glancing to the door he finds the robbers, aided by a policeman, placing the last thing—a safe—into the wagon.

More excitement follows, in the course of which Jerry is discovered in an adjoining room entertaining the girl at the piano. Angered at Jerry's ill-performance of duty, the shopkeeper has him arrested—but not for long as Jerry seeks and finds an avenue of escape.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE TIDES OF TIME (Three Parts—August 4).—The greed of Edmund Stark, employer of thousands, brings sorrow to the laborers. Mary Martin, so-called "Mother" to the laborers, appeals to Stark for the people. Stark refuses. She recalls her early romance with him which left a scar upon her heart. Her husband had lost his life in the mills through Stark's inhumanity. A committee of infuriated laborers attacks Stark's home. Mary Martin pleads with Stark to accede to their demands and thus prevent the attack. She finally succeeds in calming the laborers. As she leaves she hands Stark a copy of Poe's "Conqueror Worm," bidding him read the poem, and reflect on the part he is playing in the Drama of Life. Mary leads the laborers away and Stark reads the poem and in a frenzied state of mind sinks into sleep, while the Tides of Time roll before his troubled mind.

A group of angels led by Mimes is about to witness a drama. Finding two unborn souls, Mimes launches them upon the Sea of Life, saying that they will go to earth and enact the drama of life.

The Tide of Infancy rolls in upon the Sea of Life, and the angels see the home of plenty blessed by Time with a baby boy and into the poor home comes a baby girl. The next Tide shows us Childhood. The poor girl and the rich boy are playmates, while another boy is rival for the girl's favor. The third Tide is the Tide of Youth—in which we see the triangle romance between the poor girl, the rich boy and the farmer lad. As a result of the rich boy's cunning, the girl elopes with him, and there follows a shipwreck and finally the return of the girl, who is turned from her home. Her lover, the farmer boy, saves her life and gallantly makes her his wife. The angels look on with confused emotion while Mimes points out to them the fourth incoming Tide with its struggle, in which we see the two boys starting for war, witness the harrowing scenes of the battle field, the blowing up of a battleship and wholesale slaughter of men. In sorrow and sadness the angels look on the scene of death, as Mimes points out to them a scene of humanity. The poor boy is seen saving the life of his enemy, the rich young man, carrying him from the battlefield to safety.

The fifth Tide is Ambition and shows the rich man accumulating his fortune. The poor man meets a tragic death, while his wife—the poor girl—frenzied in her grief, clambers at the door of the rich man, Stark, who finally gives her bread which she throws back through his window. The angels look on in sorrow as they see the lonely woman prostrate on the grave of her husband.

The sixth Tide is Success, and shows us Edmund Stark and Mary Martin as they were at the beginning of the drama. We learn what Success is in ideal and in fact.

The last Tide is second childhood, and shows the closing hours of life for the two actors. The death of Mary, surrounded by all that makes unselfishness beautiful. Edmund Stark, driven to a miserable end by his greed, unable to swallow a drop of water. Mimes announces to the angels that the drama they have seen covers eighty earth years, to them a passing scene, and then points to the stream on which are seen returning the principals of the drama, the boat guided by Father Time. Mary Martin, an angel in white, joins the happy group, while all are stricken with horror as Edmund Stark appears bearing his flaming burden to the edge of a precipice from which he casts himself in despair into the flames of hell.

Edmund Stark suddenly awakens finding himself with the book in his hand just as Mary had left him. He springs to the window—his works are in flames!

NESTOR.

"IT HAPPENED WHILE HE FISHED" (Nestor Comedy Aug 2). Jack and his chum are taking a trip to the woods and are enjoying the fishing. His chum tires of the sport and leaves for a stroll, while Jack nods over his fishing pole. Suddenly he comes to life, for not far off he sees two girls in their bare legs wading in the creek. They see him at the same time and there is a wild scramble for their stockings. They put them on hurriedly and make a quick getaway. When Neal returns Jack tells him he has seen a peach and intends to try and meet her.

When the boys return to town, Jack meets his "peach" on the car one day and there is mutual recognition. They get into conversation and Jack finds the girl lives on the same street with him. Jack takes her home, and on the way they pass Neal, to whom Jack gives a lordly wave of his hand. Jack is a hustler, and it is not long before he presents her with an engagement ring and their happiness seems complete.

One day Jack's chum is forced to leave, and as a favor Jack promises to meet his chum's sister, who is to arrive that evening. He goes to the station and locates the girl and assures her it is a pleasure to look after her. They leave for a restaurant to lunch.

Meanwhile, Billie has called at the office to see Jack and is informed that the went to the station to meet a lady. Her jealousy is aroused and she leaves the engagement ring with a note that she never wants to see him again. Upon returning, Jack finds the note and calls Billie up, but she still refuses to see him and, disappointed, he leaves for the mountains to fish, until his heart is healed.

Soon afterward Billie meets Neal and his sister, and they explain to her Jack's meeting with the girl. She is sorry for her words and resolves to seek Jack out and forgive and be forgiven. Neal accompanies her, and, arriving at the hotel, "Squirrel Inn," where Jack stops, they go to his room and lock all his clothes in a trunk and keep the key and set out to find him, Billie taking her camera along.

Jack spies Billie trying to get his picture and makes a quick getaway, while Neal, concealed nearby, laughs in glee. Jack rushes to his room to change clothes, but finds everything locked up and the key gone. He is in despair, but rather than be caught he determines to leave in the clothes he has on. He finds a note from Neal saying Billie wants to make up, but says "nothing doing" and rushes for the railroad station. Neal has suspected him and put the sheriff on his trail, and just as he crawls under the train to "ride the rods" he is nabbed. He is turned over to Neal, handcuffed, and the latter tells the sheriff he is Jack's keeper. They return to the hotel and Neal orders Jack to go down and get something to eat.

Billie, meanwhile, has put on a waitress's dress, and when Jack comes in starts to serve him. Jack looks up and recognizes her. Both smile and the reconciliaiton is complete, and as Neal sticks his head in the window they throw a chunk of bread at him.

DAN CUPID, FIXER (Aug. 9).—With the coming of June, Dan Cupid puts out his shingle and gets down to business. Jack receives a note from father telling him that they have picked out for his wife a very rich and handsome lady.

At home Miss Dillpickle is "dressed fit to kill," and when father tells her that Jack will arrive that evening she is happy. Jack in the train dreams of his affinity and sees a cover picture of a beautiful girl on a magazine which he visions as his fiancee. Father, mother and Miss Dillpickle are in the car to meet him, and there are fond greetings. After some persuasian he finally gets in with the chauffeur and sadly rides home, his beauty dream shattered.

In the city Mons. Massage has a beauty parlor and is very much in love with his head manicurist. He tries all of his tricks to win her, but she is "hard to catch." Jack has arrived in the city, and, seeing he is pursued by his nemesis, runs into the beauty parlor and begs the manicurist to hide him. His fiancee comes in, and, not seeing Jack, decides to take a banana massage herself, and Mons. Massage takes the job. He is so sympathetic and nice that she pours her love troubles into his ears. He recognizes beauty in distress and comforts her. Suddenly she sits upright, for the cloth has fallen from Jack's face and she sees her fiance. Jack manages to get out first, with Miss Dillpickle and Mons. Massage close behind. He gets in his car and is off like a streak. Miss Dillpickle vainly follows, and as Jack sees that he will escape he proposes to Billy and, receiving her assent, thankfully sighs and takes her in his arms, while far behind Miss Dillpickle is left to the tender mercies of Mons. Massage.

THE CUP OF CHANCE

PRODUCED BY JOSEPH LEVERING

IT is its story that makes this three reel offering "The Cup of Chance," good With Alice Brady in the leading role as a young woman whose life was handicapped from the first by her having a bad mother, the story holds well and chiefly because the thread running smoothly through its plot construction keeps flashing into incidents unexpected and startling enough to prod the attention so that the pretty leading woman and the excellent cast that supports her can please the eye with the way they draw the situations. It tells a real picture-story full of action and it gets over.

In photography sets, scenes, acting and general direction for the most part it will hold its own above the average The story is just the kind for screen picturing, though in this case it cannot be annalized As an offering it will be liked

LOST—THREE TEETH (Aug. 13).—The girl has been one of the standbys of her college football team and in one of the hard-fought scrimmages has had the misfortune to lose three of her front teeth.

The boy meets her and falls violently in love with her. Finally it comes to a show-down and she tells him that she has a dark secret.

The girl has had a set of three teeth made to take the place of those lost, and one day while the maid is cleaning up she finds them and carelessly tosses them out of the window, where they are found by a tramp. He meets a man who is shy three teeth. Meanwhile the girl has missed her teeth and as Eddie is calling, she is in despair. The boy finally learns of her trouble and sets out to search for the missing teeth. His quest is rewarded and at last he finds them and brings them back to the despondent girl. She is so overjoyed at the recovery of her teeth that she promises to marry him at once.

A CIGARETTE—THAT'S ALL (Two Reels—Aug. 10).—Barrett, a substantial, level-headed man of business, in the faith and confidence, in the love and devotion of his wife, in the trustworthiness of his partner, his employes, and more than all, of his best friend, is importuned by a mysterious stranger, a Hindoo Yogi, to purchase a pair of spectacles through the medium of which walls vanish and those behind them are seen in their true characters.

In succession the glasses are turned by Barrett upon his employes, his partner, his best friend and his wife. What is disclosed and the resultant effect upon the lives of the several characters in the story is ingeniously shown in its denouement.

BIG U.

HIS BELOVED VIOLIN (Two Reels—Aug. 12).—Von Wagner's dearest possession is his violin. His granddaughter is taken ill and Von Wagner pawns the instrument. He loses the pawn ticket.

Jardin is advertised to play at the musicale of Mrs. Hamilton. The pawnbroker sees the ad, and having found the lost ticket disposes of the violin to Jardin. In the interim the granddaughter has secured a position in the home of Mrs. Hamilton.

Von Wagner receives a check in payment for one of his compositions and starts out to redeem his violin. The pawnbroker, however, refuses to do business unless Von Wagner can show a ticket. In his extremity Von Wagner hastens to the Hamilton home, his object being to acquaint Mildred with his trouble.

Awaiting admittance, Von Wagner hears the playing of Jardin, recognizes the tone of his (Von Wagner's) violin and interrupts the musicale. Jardin recognizes Von Wagner as his old teacher, introduces him as such and insists that the old man render a selection on the cherished violin. Von Wagner, accompanied by Jardin, obliges and the picture fades with professor and ex-pupil rendering a selection together.

WHERE HAPPINESS DWELLS (Aug. 19).—Stanley Lambert, a blase young physician and clubman, has a cabin in the mountains which he calls his "Haven of Reflection."

Grace Manning is a society girl with romantic ideas. The foppish men of her set do not interest her. Her ideal is the mountaineer hero of fiction. She repairs to a mountain resort. Grace loses her way and stumbles upon Stanley's cabin. She believes Stanley is a real mountaineer and sees in him her fiction hero.

Stanley escorts Grace back to the resort, and even before they arrive at their destination love has come to both.

A barrier, however, rises up to confront her newly-found love. She has visions of her social life, and the realization comes to her that Stanley is not of her world. Grace returns to her social life, but its emptiness becomes unbearable, and after several days of reflection she decides that Stanley's love is paramount. She returns to the mountains, only to find an empty cabin.

His efforts to trace Grace futile, Stanley sadly returns to the wilderness. On the way to the cabin he encounters an attendant from the mountain resort and learns that one of the guests is seriously ill. He hurries to the resort to find that Grace, brooding over her lost love, has suffered a nervous breakdown. Stanley's appearance, however, results in an almost immediate cure.

A DIP IN THE WATER (Aug. 14). Shultz visits the wealthy widow at her cottage by the sea. He is accompanied by his two interesting kids, Little Beanie and Lillian. Shultz has a rival, one Binks. The widow, however, shows Binks plainly that she prefers Shultz.

Now Tom, a dapper youth, is in love with Shultz's daughter, Lillian. Beanie catches the pair together, and, knowing that dad objects, tattles on them. Dad, furious, leaves the widow's side and tells Tom a thing or two, to the delight of Beanie. Tom resents dad's action and vents his feelings on Beanie, who swears vengeance.

Lillian manages to elude dad and again joins her sweetheart. Tom prepares to take Lillian for a row. Beanie gets wise and bores a hole in the boat's bottom.

Meanwhile Shultz has made a date with the interesting widow. Binks overhears and determines to be there too. Shultz comes across Beanie on the bench in glee at the distress of the young pair out in the boat.

The day is hot and Beanie proposes that he and dad take a swim. They have no bathing suits, but that does not matter, as the spot is a secluded one.

They are disporting themselves when a number of bathing girls appear and find the men's clothes. They make merry with them, dancing about and scattering the apparel. The horrified Schultz and Beanie have a fearsome time escaping detection.

Then the widow appears to keep her date. Shultz in the water, is helpless. Binks appears and continues to press his suit with the widow. Shultz rages. Binks finds his pants and extracts the wallet and watch.

Then Tom and Lillian swim ashore from the sunken boat. They meet the widow and Binks. Lillian recognizes dad's clothes. Tom spots Shultz, and, wading out to him with his pants, offers them in return for Lillian's hand. Shultz simply has to agree. When he reaches the shore Binks sure gets his, and while the two happy couples are joyously embracing, Beanie manages to crawl out of the water and secure his own coveted pants.

REFUGE (Two Reels—Aug. 11).—Jack Brandon, a wealthy rancher, lives with his wife, Agnes, a city woman to whom he is greatly attached. Near Jack's ranch live Jud Martin, his wife and daughter, Cynthia.

Jack sends one of his men with foodstuffs and medicines. He also sends a letter recommending Jud to one of his friends in town which enables him to secure work.

Jack's wife longs for the gay life of the city. She receives a letter from a friend telling of the gay round of festivities and gayeties, which increases her longing.

At this critical time Akron, a cattle buyer, arrives. Agnes welcomes his presence as a means of breaking the endless monotony of her ranch life.

A few mornings later Jack and Akron start away to look over the stock. Jack stops at Jud's cabin to see how the sick woman is getting along. Cynthia, the daughter, in a purely childish spirit, expresses her gratitude to Jack by kissing him. He hears Jack tell the girl to meet him at a certain place that evening to get some medicine.

That evening Akron tells Agnes that Jack is not true to her, and to prove his assertion takes her to the place where Jack is to meet Cynthia. She sees her husband give the girl money, and at last she believes her husband is unfaithful to her.

Sure of winning her after she leaves, Akron quits his lover-like attentions to her and tells her that he will escort her to the city where she is going. She gladly accepts his offer and they leave for the station, after she had left a note to Jack, telling him of her decision and of Akron being her escort.

Cynthia's mother is suddenly stricken. Making an examination Jack finds that it is imperative for the woman to have some strychnine. There being none at the cabin, he returns to his house for it and finds the note. Crushed by the note, he drops it and revenge driving all other thoughts from his mind, he leaves in pursuit of the couple.

The couple have reached the station and while waiting for the train are approached by Jud, who begins to thank Agnes for the kindness to him and his family. As Jud tells of the many kindnesses she realizes how she has misunderstood her husband and slowly she begins to see that Akron has been the cause of all her trouble.

She has a sudden change of heart, and, denouncing Akron, starts back for the ranch. Akron is desperate at the thought of losing her and the money he expected to get out of her and bars her return to her home. Jud, however, comes to her rescue and forces Akron to board the train, telling him to keep going until he is out of the country.

Agnes has urged Jud to drive at top speed so she can get home and destroy the note before Jack sees it. She reaches home first, and finding the note where she had left it, destroys it and thinks she is safe. She is confronted by Jack and from his expression sees he knows all. She attempts to explain, but without result, but in the midst of the scene Jud enters the room. Agnes appeals to him to verify her statement and he tells of the occurrence at the depot and so proves to Jack her innocence, and she is forgiven.

HAUNTING WINDS (Aug. 14).—Wilfred Melton, a poor man who has come to the mountains in search of health, one day stumbles upon a rich quartz ledge bearing gold, but on account of his poverty is unable to get the machinery necessary to develop his find.

Near Melton lives an old hermit, who, apparently, is in most prosperous circumstances. One day he is counting his hoarded gold when Melton knocks at the door. The hermit hides his wealth under the tablecloth and admits Melton. Melton makes an impassioned appeal for some provisions and tells him that his wife and baby are almost on the verge of starvation. The old hermit thinks he is after his gun and tries to shoot Melton. In the struggle the gun is discharged and the old hermit killed. The tablecloth is pulled off in the struggle, baring the gold.

Time passes and Melton has made good with the money and is now in prosperous circumstances, but is still haunted. He writes his wife a note telling her of his mental torture, and that she will know the truth soon.

He sets out for the sheriff's office to tell of the killing and give himself up.

While he is nervously walking up and down in the sheriff's office he sees a reward sign, offering $1,000 for the capture of Nick, the Hermit, and from the picture recognizes the face of the dead hermit. He rushes from the office and hurries home to get the letter before his wife reads it.

His wife has just returned from an outing and is just about to get the letter when he rushes in and manages to secure the letter without her knowledge.

Some time later the president of the bank which the hermit had robbed is very much mystified to receive a package of $10,000, the amount stolen from the bank.

CHASING THE LIMITED (Two Reels—Aug. 14).—Clagett, chief clerk to Superintendent Shea of the Coast Line, and the latter's daughter have formed an attachment for each other. The superintendent, in order to break off the attachment, sends his clerk to a small town 500 miles down the line as agent.

Clagett assumes his duties as agent and makes the acquaintance of a woman in charge of the depot lunch counter, who is known as "Saint Catherine of the Coffee Cups." The girl is just recovering from a great sorrow in the loss of her mother and is left in charge of her brother, a wild lad of about seventeen. On her deathbed the mother has made the girl promise to do everything in her power to make a man of the boy, Micky.

The new agent realizes his attachment for the superintendent's daughter was only a passing fancy, and that Catherine is, in truth, the only girl for him.

Micky continues to frequent saloons and gambling halls. One day he sees Clagett put a large freight shipment payment in the safe. Micky comes into the office and tells the agent that his sister wants to see him. Leaving Micky in the office, he goes to see what the girl wants. He finds the errand was a ruse. Later he starts to check up his cash, when there is a knock at the door and Kenyon, the traveling auditor, comes in. Following the usual custom of auditors, he demands to check the cash at once and Clagett is found to be short $540, the exact sum of the freight shipment payment. He refuses to make any explanation, although he feels sure Micky is the cause of it, and the auditor takes charge of the office.

The dispatcher puts out an order at the station to hold the fast mail for a fruit train, which cannot be reached, and Clagett dully hears him receive the order. Catherine comes to the window and speaks to him. She realizes something is wrong, and Clagett suddenly blurts out that he is short a large sum. Catherine realizes Clagett is trying to protect her brother and starts off to find him, leaving Clagett without any explanation of the purpose of her errand. He thinks she believes him guilty and is very much cast down.

Clagett is sitting in apathy when he suddenly hears the roar of the fast mail passing the station and notices a helper engine on a track near by, deserted by the crew, who have gone to lunch.

He is going at a terrific rate when the foreman of a track gang sees him coming, and, thinking it is a runaway, derails it to save the mail. Clagett makes a flying leap when the engine is derailed and outside of bruises is all right. He is still determined to save the mail, and, grabbing a hand-car standing near the track, starts again.

The private car of the superintendent is on the rear of the mail, and he, with his daughter and others, are enjoying the view when they see a hand-car in the distance with a man signaling. The superintendent pulls the air and stops the train. Superintendent and his daughter express their gratitude and he tells them that he is virtually under arrest for theft in his office. Margaret turns from him in scorn, and he contrasts her attitude with Catherine's. The superintendent realizes the debt the road owes Clagett, but decides to put off action until he learns further from the auditor.

On the return to the station the auditor rushes out and grasps Clagett by the hand. He is overcome with surprise when he hears the auditor tell the superintendent that Clagett's accounts are in good shape, and that he had made a mistake, and that the money had been merely misplaced.

Catherine, after a stormy session with her brother, had succeeded in getting the money and turning back to the auditor with a full explanation. She is waiting in the office until the return of Clagett.

LOVE ON AN EMPTY STOMACH (Aug. 15).—Hank and Kitty had had no breakfast, but notwithstanding their caved-in sensations inside they still retained their ability to attend the wants of the ladies.

Unfortunately they picked out the same lady, who, in addition, had a husky sweetheart who had just proposed and left to get the ring. Hank concealed a sledge hammer in a bouquet of forget-me-nots and figured that his subterfuge would rid him or the gentleman, who happened back and caught him in conversation with his fiancee.

It did, but only temporarily, as the fellow had lots of vitality and came to far sooner than Hank had expected. He went after Hank, and Hank went in the opposite direction. Hank also had struck Kitty with the hammer, and Kitty now came to and started looking for Hank. With everybody looking for one another there was bound to be confusion and misunderstandings.

The escort finally found Hank, and Hank tried to find a way out. There was almost a crime right then and there, with the escort as the killer and Hank as the killed.

LAEMMLE.

IN THE GRIP OF THE LAW (Aug. 15).—Kate Roberts and her mother live on the seacoast, where Mrs. Roberts runs a boarding house. Kate reads of the outside world and becomes dissatisfied with her quiet life. Ned Johnson, her sweetheart, is a source of interest to the summer visitors, and one day Kate and he have a spat because the women notice Ned so.

Henry Andrews and his son come to the beach for a vacation and take lodgings at Mrs. Roberts' house. Kate "falls for" the good looks and clothes of the son and seizes every opportunity to accompany him about. When passing Ned she cuts him dead. This leaves Ned heartsore and angry and he resolves to watch the strangers. One day he accidentally sees a notice offering a reward for the capture of a band of smugglers.

Ned is sprawled out among the rocks when he sees a boat put away from a launch anchored out in the ocean and hurriedly come to shore. His curiosity is aroused and he sees the boat met by Andrews, who gets a suspicious looking box and hides it after the crew return to the ship. He hides until Andrews leaves and then hurries to the sheriff and tells him of his suspicions.

The next morning Andrews and his son announce that they have to leave and call the automobile. As Andrews comes out with the box under his overcoat the sheriff steps up and arrests him. There is a fight, in which the two are subdued and taken to the lockup.

Kate realizes the true worth of Ned and gladly returns to his love and their happiness is complete when later Ned is given a substantial reward for assisting in the capture of a brace of notorious smugglers.

JEALOUSY, WHAT ART THOU? (Two Parts—Aug. 1).—The story opens in Ben's office, where Dorothy calls at the close of the day to accompany him for a stroll. Ben excuses himself for a moment, and during his absence we see Dorothy go through the drawers of his desk, discovering there a photograph of a beautiful woman.

Meanwhile Ben finds, amongst various feminine trifles in Dorothy's handbag a man's card, which reads:

JOSEPH D. CARSON
Greely 1081.

This he pockets and returns to Dorothy, who, on hearing him return, has tucked the photograph in her bodice.

The two, looking much worried, start for a stroll.

That night, Dorothy, waiting for Ben, sits down to write a letter to a girl friend, Josephine Gates, and begins: "My Dear Joe:—It has been a long time since we have been together." Ben arrives and Dorothy pushes the letter aside to welcome him. While she goes out to get some fruit Ben looks about, and his eyes fall upon part of the letter that Dorothy has written Taking from the pocket of his coat the card he has stolen from Dorothy's purse, Ben jumps to the conclusion that Dorothy was writing to Joseph D. Carson. A strained silence, a heated quarrel arises.

Both decide to separate, and not go to a mask ball together.

Friday comes, and no word from Ben to Dorothy or no word from Dorothy to Ben. Here Dorothy's feminine curiosity gets the better of her, and, stealing to Ben's apartment, she breaks down all reserve, and, telling the valet of her quarrel with Ben, begs him to tell her what costume Ben intends wearing that night. For answer, the valet shows Dorothy the costume, that of a monk with hood and cowl.

Meanwhile Ben, too, has grown curious, and goes to Dorothy's home, where he bribes Dorothy's mother to show him Dorothy's costume, which is that of Carmen. Ben retires delighted and resolves he'll watch her.

When Ben returns to his apartment the valet tells him of Dorothy's visit, and he determines to fool Dorothy by exchanging costumes with a friend. As a result of this exchange of costumes many amusing complications ensue at the ball.

THE BROKEN COIN (Two Parts—July 26).—Count Frederick, at the end of the fifth episode of "The Broken Coin," is attempting to rescue Kitty Grey, the American newspaper woman who is searching for his half of "The Broken Coin," when he is surrounded on all sides by the sewer apaches. Making the best of a very bad situation, he places Kitty on her feet and smiles at the enemy.

Roleau, hearing the apaches stop in the sewer, realizes they must have caught Kitty, and, going to the secret entrance, sees Kitty and Frederick surrounded. Roleau gets two guns from his waiting automobile, and, giving one to his Arab assistant, they creep to the opening of the sewer which leads to Kitty, Frederick and their captors, the apaches.

Blake and his men take Frederick a short distance from Kitty to search him, leaving two of their confederates to guard her. Roleau shoots the two holding Kitty, and as the Arab holds the others at bay he succeeds in getting her to the street above. In the fight that ensues, Frederick tries to escape, but Blake is too quick for him.

Not having time to reach the car he came in, Roleau places Kitty on the horse she came on and, quickly mounting the Arab's, they succeed in getting away. Quickly getting into Roleau's stolen car, the two apaches follow Roleau and Kitty.

Kitty's horse is about all in, as is Roleau's and they are about to give up when they see before them a cliff some hundred feet above the water. In the car the apaches are blind to all else but their people ahead of them. They are going at such speed that it would be impossible to stop the car under sixty feet distance. Seeing this, and with the cliff only a few feet away, Roleau tells Kitty to ride as near as she can, not too fast, and then turn her horse in the opposite direction. As they are within twenty feet of the cliff Roleau turns and giving them the laugh, jumps his horse over the cliff into the water. The apaches, seeing him go from sight, try to stop their car, but fail. Kitty, on the cliff above, sees Roleau escape to the bank just as the car comes down to the water, pinning the two apaches under it.

At the dive, Frederick is still a prisoner, Kitty hurriedly rejoins Roleau, and, together, they return to Gretzhoffen.

Surprised at the delay of the two men he sent after Kitty, Blake sends several others to locate them. Arriving at the cliff, the apaches are horror-stricken to see their two pals dead under the car, with no trace of Kitty or Roleau.

Sachio, in the meantime, is being besieged by the diplomatic emissaries of Grahaffen to do something to find the plans of the fortifications of Gretzhoffen, Sachio, sends two men to Kitty's hotel to try and obtain the coin from her, goes himself with one man to Frederick's apartment.

Kitty sends the following note to King Michael: "Your Majesty. It may interest you to know that Count Frederick is being held a prisoner by a band of apaches in their dive near the sewers in the lower part of the city.

"Follow the desert road for Grahaffen, take steps leading to cellar of last house on left side of road. KITTY GRAY."

The police locate Blake's dive, and, after a hard fight, rescue Frederick. He is surprised when shown Kitty's note.

Kitty goes to Frederick's apartment to find the other part of the coin. She accidentally finds it. She sees the barrel of a gun pointing at her. She sees a man's hand slowly taking careful aim at her head.

BROADWAY UNIVERSAL FEATURE.

JUDY FORGOT (Five Parts—Aug. 9).—Judy forgot. She forgot her own name. She did it on her own honeymoon.

Judy Evans, one of the stage stars who could make Broadway audiences laugh, suddenly discovered that one man in the box was straining every effort to catch her glance.

Another strange thing about Judy was the fact that she could not keep from winking every time she smiled. Men who noticed this were wont to accuse her of flirting, but being rather sensitive about it. It just couldn't be helped—that wink of hers—for her mother had done so, and her grandmother. But, anyhow, Judy winked, and straight at Freddy, who was the particular bold young man who was seated in one of the boxes. A son of wealthy parentage and full of fun, he naturally supposed that the wink was genuine, and at once set out for the stage, where he boldly walked into Judy's room and offered his heart and hand to her. Freddy was bodily thrown out by the stage hands, but remained outside looking up at her window with tears in his eyes. Judy finally married him, and amid a shower of rice the couple left for Europe. The wink and smile soon was the cause of a quarrel and Judy escaped to Marienbad.

The train bearing Judy was wrecked and Judy received a severe bump on her head, which caused amnesia.

Among the other passengers of the wrecked train were Dicky Stole and his newly-acquired wife, who was formerly Trixy Gale, a divorcee. Dicky, a college boy of twenty, has eloped with Trixy. His parents are enraged at this runaway match. They claim that Trixy has kidnapped their son, a minor in the eyes of the law. They have offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of Trixy "for kidnapping."

John Mugg, an uncle of Dicky's, is stopping at this same hotel in Marienbad. Mr. Mugg, who is a fleshy man, is in Marienbad taking the "cure," in an effort to lose some of his superfluous flesh. Mugg has to get up at sunrise, exercise in a gymnasium, walk and run all over the surrounding country, take Turkish baths and live on dry crackers.

Dicky and Trixy, in their room at the hotel have just examined their luggage and found that Trixy, instead of receiving her own luggage, has come into possession of trunks and suitcases marked "Mrs. Frederick Evans" (Judy). Then, going for a walk, Dicky sees his uncle, John Mugg. He shows him to Judy.

The doctor tells Judy "the shock of the wreck has caused temporary loss of memory."

The doctor discovers suitcases which he thinks belong to Judy. They examine them and find that they are marked "Trixy Gale" (the former name of Dicky's wife). The doctor tells Judy her name is Trixy Gale. He takes her to the hotel. Then he meets his patient, John Mugg. He tells him he has just left an American lady who has lost her memory—a lady named "Trixy Gale." Mugg exclaims, "That's the woman who kidnapped my nephew. If she's here, that young rascal must be here, too." At this moment Mugg and the doctor come face to face with Dicky. Trixy has lingered behind to look in a shop window. The doctor, seeking Judy, informs her that she has just kidnapped Dicky, the nephew of Mr. Mugg, and Judy is horrified having married a minor. He takes her to Mugg and Dicky, whereupon she strives desperately to remember how she could ever have married such a funny looking fellow.

However, she feels that she must embrace her husband. Trixy, who has returned and who sees the performance, is enraged. Judy is introduced to Mugg. Her smile and wink make a pleasant impression upon him. He begins winking at her. He tells her that he will keep them under his eye until Dicky's father arrives upon the scene. The doctor explains to Dicky about Judy having lost her memory. Dicky then tells Trixy, "Let her think she's my wife. Tonight you and I will take a train for Paris and leave my supposed wife here with Uncle Mugg. Suddenly Freddy appears. All morning he has been looking wildly all over Marienbad in search of Judy. He sees her now and rushes to her. She does not recognize him. She is frightened and turns to Dicky for protection. She says to Freddy, "I don't know you." Freddy, pointing to Dicky, says, "Who is this man?" "My husband," says Judy.

"I'm your husband," exclaims Freddy. He tries to strike Dicky. There is a fight and Freddy is arrested and taken away. Judy, disturbed, looks after him, saying to herself: "Where have I seen his face before."

Later, Judy, worn out by all the excitement, returns to the hotel, where she decides to take a nap. As a striking coincidence, at the hotel is a man by the name of Gale, who has two children, who while playing about, become lost and begin crying. The doctor finds them, and asking their names and receiving the reply Gale, at once concludes that Judy, because of her loss of memory, has forgotten about her other children. The doctor takes the children to the hotel, finds out that Judy is sleeping and places the children in bed beside Judy so they will be the first thing she sees when she wakes up. Judy awakens and to her horror perceives the children beside her. She is still more horrified to learn that they are her own, but takes them all into her arms.

Mr. Mugg, who has developed quite an affection for Judy, gives an elaborate society circus, in the midst of which the two kids come down into the ballroom, where the frantic father, who has searched high and low for them, takes them away from Judy.

Freddy, released from jail, breaks into the society circus and demands his wife. Judy declares that she has never seen him before and urges him to run away. Pressed on all sides by her hallucination of husbands and babies, she and Mugg steal forth from the hotel and into an automobile, intending to escape. Freddy and others pursue in another machine.

In her excitement Judy pulls the arm of the chauffeur and the auto plunges into another car and the occupants are thrown out.

When Freddy and the others arrive with aid to the injured they find Judy seated on the ground rubbing her head. The shock has restored her memory and she rushes into Freddy's arms with joy.

FALSTAFF.

GUSSIE, THE GRACEFUL LIFEGUARD (Aug. 13).—The young clerk, enjoying his vacation at the seashore, receives a curt note from his employers that they were reducing expenses and his services were no longer required. He has very little money left. He confides his troubles to the bright little girl, the hotel's cashier. She likes the young fellow and straightway goes to the hotel proprietor and tells him the young man will be of value to him as lifeguard. The little cashier's brother is the present lifeguard, but though a good swimmer, he is homely.

There was one thing the proprietor did not know. His new lifeguard could not swim. The little cashier knew it, but cautioned the clerk to say nothing, for, as she expressed it, "my brother is a life saver and he can do the work. Your job is to look pretty and kid the girls." And the arrangement worked beautifully, for the clerk saved the old ladies and children who fell down in shallow water, while the real lifeguard rescued those who had wandered beyond their depth, but so cleverly was it done that all the hotel guests believed that the handsome young lifeguard was a very wonderful person, and considered his homely assistant to be useful, but not in a class at all with his handsome superior.

The constant flattery the clerk received from the hotel guests turned his head, and he treated the little cashier very indifferently. The girl had grown to care for him, and when she saw him passing much of his time in the company of a wealthy old maid, she was heartbroken. Her brother, the homely lifeguard, soon reassured her.

"It's all right, Sis," he said, "he really doesn't care for that old maid, and what he needs to bring him to his senses is a ducking. And he will get it. Believe me."

The clerk, at the old maid's request, took her rowing, and at the psychological moment, the homely lifeguard, adopting the method of a submarine, dived under the water and swam beneath the surface until he reached the boat and flung the clerk and his "fair" companion into the water.

"Why that lifeguard is an impostor," sputtered the old maid. "He can't swim a stroke. He must be discharged at once." The clerk looked lovingly into the little cashier's face. "I am sure to be fired for not being able to swim." "Don't you worry, kid," replied the girl," and her statement thoroughly satisfied the young man.

SHORTY INHERITS A HAREM (Two Reels—Aug. 11).—Shorty, travelling with Selby's Wild West Show in India, goes hunting in the jungle with Bill Forbes, a former bunkie of his, now serving in the British Army. In the wilds he gets separated from Forbes, who believes he has been killed by a tiger. Shorty succors a dying Indian prince and is made successor to his kingdom of Cawnpore. Going to take up his new duties at the palace of the Maharajah, the cowboy discovers that he has forty wives. He becomes smitten with the youngest, thus causing Fatimeh, the former favorite, to commit suicide. He then is informed that the customs of the country demand that he shall bury himself alive with his dead wife. Shorty objects. He shoots up the palace and escapes.

BEAUTY.

CUPID TAKES A TAXI (Aug. 3).—Bob, spendthrift, speeder and heart-breaker, is a source of constant worry to his father. He falls in love with Mabel, a damsel in distress, whom he takes home in his runabout. Father washes his hands of his son and the young man becomes a chauffeur. A call comes from Mabel's house for a taxi. He goes to the marriage bureau and equips himself with a license. Then he goes to Mabel's papa, he finds that he is to drive her, her parents and Clarence, the suitor of papa's and mama's choice, to the opera. Bob arranges with the girl to meet him between the acts. They run away and are married. There may be compensations in having to get out and drive a cab for a living.

JIMMY ON THE JOB (August 10).—Jimmy's earnest efforts as an auto salesman have met with no success. He chances to meet Mabel Mason and a violent flirtation ensues. Just when Jimmy is "getting somewhere" with Mabel he is fired by the man who employed him. Meanwhile in a nearby country town Farmer Swayne has had a fine crop. He sells it for a goodly sum and he and his wife come to see the city. A group of sleek and slick "con" men size up Jasper and his bank roll. Jasper visits a bath house where he dives and disports himself with mermaids until his wife takes a hand in the fun. As they emerge, three men greet Jasper and Mrs. Swayne.

"We are the Welcome Committee," they explained. The farmer and his wife are delighted. A joy ride is suggested and at a lonely spot along the road, Jasper is relieved of his bank roll. Mabel and Jimmy out for a ride, see a car ahead of them. "Catch it,' says Mabel, "and I will buy this car." Jimmy makes good and catches up just as the farmers are robbed. Jimmy does battle with the crooks. With Jasper at his side he lays the "con" men low. He fairly makes them like it. Jasper's money is recovered. It is a banner day for Jimmy, for both Mabel and Jasper buy cars, and Jimmy is reinstated as the star of the salesman crew.

Jimmy and Mabel blushingly admit another of Jimmy's conquests.

KAY BEE.

THE HEART OF JABEZ FLINT (Two Reels—Aug. 6).—Jabez Flint, miser and pillar of the church, holds the small New England town where he lives. Flint forecloses on the property of Widow Ames, rousing the indignation of the minister, David Dowling. The Dowlings take Mrs. Ames home, and the following Sunday the text is: "It is harder for a camel to pass through a needle's eye." Jabez leaves in the middle of the sermon. The next day when a delegation calls on him for a donation he tells them that they will get nothing of the sort from him, but that if they will depose Dowling and call a new man that he will build them a new church. This is done and Dowling, broken-hearted, retires. Before the new meeting house is finished Flint is stricken with small-pox. Fearing to die, he sends for the new minister to read him the scripture but the preacher is afraid to go near the diseased man. In despair, Flint summons Dowling. The old minister goes to him and helps the village doctor save Flint's life. Dowling is reinstated, his salary doubled, and the Widow Ames receives back her home.

MAJESTIC.

VICTORINE (Majestic—Two Reels—Aug. 1).—Dottie gets a job in a small show as the "sidekick" of the world's famous knife thrower. The Angel who is backing the outfit is too modest to proclaim his love for Dottie. Dottie, thoroughly carried away by the great, handsome strong man, fails to see the worth of the angel until fate takes a hand.

The knife thrower gets drunk and the angel forbids Dottie to do her act. Not so the strong man, and to show his brute power, he locks up the angel and bids the knife thrower go on with the show. All the freaks are in a flutter; they realize the danger to which the girl will be submitted, but they are determined not to lose the audience which is becoming impatient.

The drunken knife thrower has made several false throws, any one of which might have proved fatal to the girl, when the angel, released from his prison by the tight-rope walker, rushes to the rescue and saves the girl he loves by flinging himself before her. He gets the knife and is seriously injured. At the hospital a few days later, the girl, chastened by the tragedy, and the angel decide they will form a partnership that will have no knife throwing in it.

BIG JIM'S HEART (Two Reels—Aug. 8).—Sheriff Jim Taylor loves Elsie, daughter of Ranchman White. Elsie, however, has given her promise to Tom, driver of the pony express. Tom gets into a quarrel with Wild Cat, an Indian half-breed. The latter is found dead and the express driver is arrested. Elsie alone believes him innocent. On the day set for the hanging, Mojave Ed, a worthless character, falls ill of fever in the mountains. Fearing to die, he sends for the sheriff and confesses to him. Sheriff realizes that his hope of winning Elsie now is lost—that is, if he chooses to prove the express driver's innocence. As he stands, later that day, with the hang rope in his hand, Big Jim finds that he cannot bring himself to seek by such means his own happiness. He relates Mojave Ed's confession, Tom is freed, and the lovers reunited.

waif, Bettina, home with him to his tenement room. They invite in the old, blind lawyer across the hall, to share their feast. Next morning, Piccino finds that Jo, the bully, has stolen his corner where he sells papers. Wandering disconsolate, he sees an automobile strike down Bettina, who is peddling papers to help out. The injured child is carried to the tenement. In desperation, Piccino steals a loaf of bread from a baker's cart. The boy is captured by a policeman, and a few days later is taken before the Juvenile Court. By chance Bettina and the rich employer of the chauffeur who ran her down, also are present. Old Lawyer Hillbrand pleads the newsboy's case. Montgomery, the capitalist, learns for the first time of his chauffeur's criminal carelessness. He asks permission of the court to make reparation. Piccino is vindicated, and Montgomery sends him, with Bettina and Lawyer Hillbrand, to a pleasant home of their own in the country.

DOMINO.

THE PROMOTER (Two Reels—Aug. 5).—Mallard, a crooked mining stock promoter, swindles Silas Clayton, a farmer, out of $3,500. Clayton has mortgaged his property to buy Mallard's worthless stock, and later finds himself and his family dispossessed and almost penniless. The Claytons go West to take up a homestead claim. Jim Howard, an Arizona ranchman, falls in love with Ellen Clayton. She shows him a snap-shot which she happens to have of Mallard, and tells him that he is the man who ruined her father. Howard runs across the original of the kodak picture in a Tucson hotel. He decoys Mallard to an abandoned mine and holds him prisoner while he goes for Ellen and her father. They return with Howard and identify the swindler. Howard tells Mallard that unless he puts down $5,000 for Gold Mining stock he will never get out of the mine. Mallard comes across with the check on a Tucson bank. Clayton cashes it. Mallard is set free. The promoter is then presented with the worthless stock which he formerly had sold Clayton. Mallard starts back across the desert, on foot, eighty miles to Tucson.

THE $100,000 BILL (Two Reels—Aug. 12).—Guy Roberts, an Alaskan prospector, comes into Nome with two hundred ounces of coarse gold to cash at the sub-treasury. He is given a one hundred thousand dollar bill by the superintendent. The news spreads and Soapy Smith and his gang get busy. Roberts takes passage on the "Circle City" for Seattle. Soapy and his pals dope some of the sailors from the ship, change clothes with them, and go aboard. They drug Roberts, but cannot find the bill. Later he pretends to give the money to Ruth Duncan, the skipper's daughter, with with whom he has fallen in love. The crooks get the girl in their power, but again are baffled. They then determine to torture Roberts, but Ruth calls the crew to the rescue. The crooks are captured, and Roberts has the satisfaction of showing them where he has concealed the one hundred thousand dollar bill under the steamship label on his trunk.

KOMIC.

THE DEACON'S WHISKERS (Aug. 1).—Fay disobeys her father, the deacon, and runs off with Edward to go in bathing. Father, sitting on the beach with his wife, is informed of Fay's actions by Steve, the suitor of his own preference. The deacon starts to find Edward. The latter, warned of his coming, changes the signs on the outside of the bath houses. The deacon gets into the women's corridor. Seeing a door ajar, he peers in. Instantly the door is slammed and he is caught fast by the whiskers. Here his wife discovers him in a compromising position. Meanwhile, Fay and Edward have captured the minister and gone out on a raft. Steve again rushes to inform his would-be father-in-law, but the deacon and his party are too late to stop the ceremony.

FATHER LOVE (Aug. 8).—Archibald's wife, Frances, has acquired the club habit. She neglects to take him to the theater, and he must pass the lonely evenings tending their infant. Fay, the chauffeur, out of pity for the slighted husband, falls in love with him and begs him to elope with her. His duty to the baby, however, constrains him to decline. Fay makes up her mind to win Archibald at any cost. She kidnaps him in the auto. The wife at the club hears what has happened and rushes to the rescue. Fay's machine breaks down. Archibald escapes and flings himself into the sea. The wife swims out and saves him. Realizing that he has been faithful to her, even to the point of risking his life, Frances reassures her spouse that she will show him more affection in the future.

THE FATAL FINGER PRINTS (Aug. 15).—Nell and Ben are happily betrothed and all goes well until the advent of Austin Force. Austin's flashing black eyes and silky jet mustache cause Nell to throw over Ben and promise to marry her new admirer the following afternoon. Nell's Aunt Ellen goes to the jeweler's and buys a beautiful necklace for the bride-to-be. Austin spies her. As the mysterious bridegroom's vocation is taking other people's things, and, as he is ignorant of Aunt Ellen's identity, he shadows her home and resolves to pay her a midnight call. Austin enters the house and secures the necklace. Nell, who is spending the night with her aunt, surprises him, however. As it is dark, they fail to recognize one another. Austin is obliged to slap Nell's face in order to make his getaway. The following day Austin gives the necklace to Nell's father with instructions that it shall not be presented to the bride until time for the ceremony. Nell appears with the finger-prints still on her face. Austin realizes that if the aunt identifies the necklace it will go hard with him. He tries many ruses to recover the gems before her arrival, and to prevail upon Nell to wash her face. Ben's suspicions are aroused. He does a little detective work, the guilty Austin is exposed, and Nell takes refuge in Ben's arms.

THE MIGHTY HOLD (Aug. 4).—Helen Wade, after pleading in vain with Lewis Caldwell to make her his wife for the sake of their child, pins a note to the baby's dress, entrusting it to the care of some compassionate stranger, and leaving it in its crib, goes down to the river and commits suicide. Nan, a feminine Raffles, finds the baby. She tells her partner, Jim, that she has decided to adopt the child. Meanwhile, Caldwell's father dies. He seeks Helen far and wide. Five years pass and he can find no trace of her or his child. An automobile accident throws Caldwell and Nan together. They become friends, then lovers. When Caldwell proposes, Nan tells him the story of her past and how the finding of the baby had been her redemption. She shows him also the note in Helen's writing which was pinned to the child's dress. Caldwell is overwhelmed. He persuades her to continue to care for little Nathalie as his wife.

THE EXILE OF "BARK-K" RANCH (Two Reels—August 9).—Burt Towne saves Dave Burton from the fury of Tex, a drunken Mexican. Dave promises Burt if he ever gets the chance he will reward him for saving his life. Burt returns to Millie and his sweetheart, whom he would wed but for her sick mother, her excitable father and the little sister, all of whom demand her care on the "Bar-K" Ranch. Millie's mother dies. Burt renews his plea that Millie marry him. The father and sister deter the girl. Millie whispers a secret to Burt, who rushes off exultant to get the marriage license. Returning, Burt is shot in the back by Tex, the revengeful Mexican. He struggles desperately to ward off death, but Tex's bullet has found its mark. He scratches a message to Dave, the man whose life he had saved, begging him (Dave) to "come and make good with Millie, for I can't." Burt's riderless horse reaches Millie's cottage. Blood is on the saddle. Millie's father rushes in search of Burt, he finds the boy dead in the road. Then Millie confides in her father and is promptly driven from home.

Meanwhile Burt's message is carried to Dave, who at once rides off to learn what it means. Months later Millie falls exhausted on a roadside. Here Dave finds her and tenderly he bears her to the home of his own sweetheart's mother. Her condition is discovered and the self-righteous matron refuses to give her shelter or aid. Dave finds a more compassionate neighbor where Millie is treated with love and care as she hovers at the doorway of death. The busybody gossips of the neighborhood cannot stand the strain on their own morality so they wait upon Dave and reprove him for his friendship for "such a woman." Millie overhears and with her babe held close prepares hastily to leave.

Then a sheriff rides up bearing possessions of Burt, who was slain. Dave opens the package, his eyes fall on Millie's picture. He recognizes her as the girl to whom he was to make good. He discovers, too, his deep born love for the girl.

Millie steals out but Dave overtakes her. He offers his heart and his name as her refuge. Sobbing yet happy Millie goes to his arms.

COMRADES THREE (August 11).—"She ain't nobody's child. I found that brat on my door step sixteen years ago," thus speaks a drunken hag who has made Ginger work like a slave. But Ginger is uncomplaining until Bob offers unwelcome attentions. Then in boys clothing she runs away.

Meanwhile Stanley Ward is seized with adventurous desire. He decides to become a tramp for a fortnight. That night Ginger acquires a friend, a homeless lad, like herself an orphan, who had left an orphanage because of cruel treatment.

Stanley proves a wonderful forager who supplies a hungry band of tramps with a meal such as they had not enjoyed in years. He comes upon Ginger and her little friend. He invites them to join the hobo circle. Hobs and the other "won't works" discover that Ginger has long tresses, and therefore is a girl. Stanley flies to her protection. There is a fight and Stanley is sorely wounded. Hobs and the hobos flee. Two days later Stanley revives. The orphan boy tells him of Ginger's constant devotion. In gratitude Stanley takes them to his home. A future is opened before the homeless waif. A future too is opened before Ginger, for Stanley declares his love.

RELIANCE.

HER FAIRY PRINCE (July 26).—Violet is a motherless little girl left alone with servants all day, for her father is a judge in the big city. Fairies are her mental companions. When she discovers Jim, an escaped convict, in her attic playroom, she believes wicked dwarfs changed him from a prince into a striped zebra. All day Violet and her fairy prince entertain each other, she furnishing him with food and clothes from her father's wardrobe.

Accompanied by an attorney who wishes to discuss a case, the Judge returns to his home in the evening. Violet goes to bed, only to be aroused by the loud voice of the attorney, who, determined to win the Judge to his way of thinking, has resorted to a threat and then to violence.

Just at this moment the convict sees the Judge who sentenced him to prison being overpowered by the very attorney who falsely accused him.

Little Violet enters and is seized by the attorney. He places a pistol to her head and threatens to fire if her father does not agree to his demands. The convict hesitates but a second; it is liberty or the life of his little friend. He tosses the child to safety, collars the attorney, tells him that his day of reckoning has arrived. The attorney sneaks away while the Judge and Violet and the unjustly-sentenced convict have a heart-to-heart talk.

THE BRIDE OF THE SEA (Aug. 2).—Grace is a hypochondriac, and no fit companion for Ralph, her young husband, nor Marie, her daughter. She invites Maude, an old friend, to visit them. The latter determines to rouse Grace to her responsibilities as wife and mother. Maude flirts with Ralph. Grace, unbalanced by constant thinking of herself and her ills, throws herself off the cliff into the sea. No trace of her can be found, and Ralph mourns his wife as dead. Meanwhile, the unconscious woman has been rescued by Old Ben, a semi-demented fisherman, who continuously patrols the beach, looking for his wife, who was drowned in her youth. He believes that now he has found her and carries Grace to his cabin. On her recovery she finds herself powerless to escape. She is obliged to cook and help with the fishing, as Nina did long ago. She mourns daily for her little girl. Old Ben steals and brings to her the first child he finds on the beach. It proves to

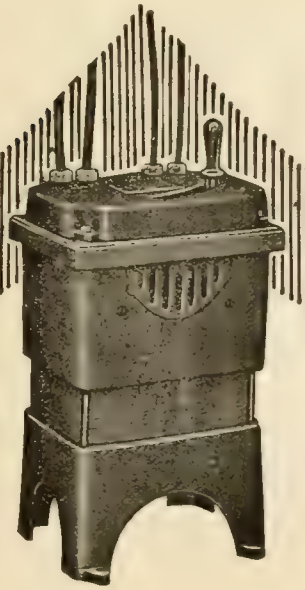
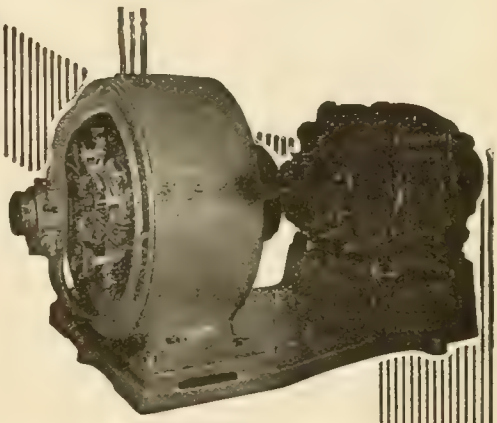
The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.



The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO ONCE WAS HE (Aug. 4).—Dan Adams goes back to the scenes of his boyhood to get his bearings in life. The spirit of the boy that once was he companions him, and demands that he account for the way in which he has spent his mature years. Adams reviews his shameless career. He is overwhelmed with repentance. Returning to the city, he seeks out the wife whom he had lost, wins her forgiveness, and persuades her to begin life over again with him

A WOMAN OF NERVE (Aug 6).—John Baker, bank president of White Plains, N. Y., gives a diamond necklace to his wife on the fifth anniversary of their marriage. At breakfast, scanning the news, she reads aloud to her husband of the presentation of the necklace and mention of her other valuable gems. Below is an account of a desperate burglar, Michael Brennan, known as "Three Fingered Mike."

Brennan eludes capture and arrives in New York City, taking refuge with a prosperous baker, an old school friend, who buys him clothes and some disguises, but tries to persuade him to leave the country and keep straight. Brennan determines he will try for the jewels. He applies to Mrs. Baker for a position as gardener. She refers him to her husband, and Brennan goes to the bank. Mr. Baker receives him and tells him he leaves for Chicago at three o'clock that day; to call again in a week.

That night Brennan enters the house and tries the safe, but hearing footsteps, takes refuge under the large center table. Mrs. Baker enters, turns on the lights and seats herself at the table with a basket of embroidery in her lap. Brennan, in trying to locate her exact position, moves the cover a trifle. The movement attracts Mrs. Baker's attention; she sees a hand appear and disappear with two fingers, missing. She waits a moment, yawns heavily and then rings for her maid Kate. She instructs Kate aloud to take a note to the jeweler at once, requesting him to bring her necklace and other jewelry to the house that night, as she wishes to put them in the safe. Kate is instructed to call the police and then get help and hurry back, waiting at the door quietly until the police arrive, or until she should call for help. She then returns to the room, seats herself at the piano and plays and sings a little, then picks up her sewing again and takes her seat a little nearer the door, but avoids glancing toward the table.

Kate carries out her instructions to the letter, and the officers arrive in time, ring, are admitted and drag Brennan from his concealment.

THE CEREMONIAL TURQUOISE (Two Reels—Aug. 7).—Reinhart, senior member of the jewelry firm of Reinhart and Du Boise, is found murdered in the store. Du Boise is suspected, as the partners' relations had been strained, and Reinhart had forced his daughter, Amy, to break her engagement to Du Boise. Amy, however, believes him innocent. She observes that a case of turquoises has been taken, and also notices a quantity of coarse, black hair, evidently torn from the head of the murderer. Amy learns that the turquoise mine had been taken over from New Mexican Indians, not without some friction. A clerk testifies that on the day of the murder a well-dressed "Spaniard" had visited the store and bought a few small turquoises. The girl enlists the co-operation of the sheriff, and they go, with a posse, to the mine. There the Indians are surprised in the midst of tribal ceremonies in which the stolen turquoise plays an important part. Lubo, their leader, in attempting to escape, is mortally wounded. Dying, he confesses to Amy that he murdered Reinhart. Amy reaches the court room just in time to present Lubo's written confession which saves her lover from the chair

THE LITTLE ORPHANS (Aug. 9).—When their mother dies, Donald and Doris, fall into the hands of Levy, a pawnbroker, who is "fence" for a gang of crooks. Levy forces Donald to sell papers for a living, and Doris he makes his slavey. The gang wants a small boy in a jewel robbery, the pawnbroker rents Donald to them. He is compelled to enter the home of Renwick Morris to open the door. Morris discovers the intruder, recognizes his newsboy, and wins from him his story. Morris phones police headquarters, and the waiting thieves are captured. Meanwhile, Doris has gone to the police, desperately determined to win help against Levy. Donald and Doris meet at the station. Levy has been arrested. Renwick Morris and his wife adopt the homeless brother and sister

THE NOON HOUR (Aug. 11).—Ada Prentice, a knitting mill girl, is forbidden by her parents to marry John Horrocks. She confides in her Aunt Sarah, the oldest employee in the mill. Aunt Sarah tells Ada that she has a perfect right to live her own life and to marry a mate of her own choosing. The old lady knows whereof she is talking, for in her youth she had given up her chance of happiness by refusing the one man whom she ever was able to love. That evening John comes around to Ada's house, and is sent about his business by her angry father and brother. John is willing to leave, but he is determined to take Ada with him. They escape to Aunt Sarah's. The old lady faces Ada's father and brother from the doorway, gun in hand. As Aunt Sarah is the crack shot of the region, she easily wins the father's consent to Ada's marriage and extracts from him a promise to attend the wedding.

THE WAY OF A MOTHER (Two Reels—Aug. 14).—Robert Harding, a country boy who has come to New York to earn his living, falls in love with Gladys Ducane, an actress. Gladys is a woman of principle. She supports herself and child by her only talent, her voice. A man about town, Henry Bartlett, covets Gladys. He writes to Robert's mother, warning her of the danger her son is running in allowing himself to be fascinated by an actress. The letter brings Mrs. Harding to New York. She goes to the young woman's apartment. There she finds Gladys caring for her very sick child. The two women are drawn to one another and Mrs. Harding suggests that they both pray for the baby's recovery. Gladys promises that if the child's life be spared to her, she will give up Robert. In a few minutes the fever leaves the little one, and it falls into a peaceful sleep. Mrs. Harding leaves. In the ante-room, however, she hears her son enter the apartment. Then ensues a conversation which assures her how honestly the actress is living up to her promise, and how heart-broken the boy is at the thought of their final separation. The mother re-enters the room. She owns that she is completely won over. "And now, my children," she says, "come back home with me and celebrate the wedding."

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

THE GIRL FROM HIS TOWN (American—Four Parts—Aug. 5).—Dan Blair had not been impervious to the charms of Sarah Towney, "the girl at the fountain." The only son of Malcolm Blair, retired cattle magnate of Red Rock, Montana, had, on one occasion, consumed six chocolate ice-cream sodas. Guido Bendelauri, operatic impresario had been stalled over night between trains at Red Rock, and had discovered a future prima donna.

Three years later, Malcolm Blair died. His old partner, Joshua Ruggles, whom he had made trustee of his estate, encouraged Dan to pay a long-promised visit to a friend of his father's in England. On Dan's arrival at Galory Court, Lord Galory took the young American's measuse approvingly.

Lord Galory and his friends accept the invitation of Prince Ponitowski to witness the debut of a new musical comedy star in London. She is Sarah Towney.

At the close of the first act, Blair sent in his card to the prima donna. In her luxurious dressing-room they had a wonderful reunion. The only disturbing element was the presence of Prince Ponitowski. It was followed by other interviews, at the theater and at her hotel. Dan always was running into the Prince.

His Lordship sent for Ruggles, but had failed to reckon with schemers higher up. Quite suddenly he found his own hands full with Dan, the Duchess of Breakwater. Dan was very obviously in a position to repair the duchess's family fortunes—and Galory knew only too well the peculiar fascination of the girl. One encounter too many with Ponitowski in Sarah's apartments, indeed, sent Dan straight into the duchess's arms. Blair was not long in regretting this step. His hopes of Sarah had revived.

Ruggles meant to deliver him at any price. The old Westerner even went so far as to lay his own heart and fortune at the prima donna's feet. When that failed, he invented a ruse designed to appeal to "Letty's" grasping disposition. It did appeal—to her really unselfish love for Dan. And after that, even Ruggles could no longer doubt Sarah's sincerity. The richest young man in Montana married the girl from his town. And they went back to Red Rock.

WHIFFLES AT THE FRONT (Punch—Two Reels—Aug. 2).—That old scamp, Whiffles, has fallen in love again. This time it is old Major Durand's daughter, and strangely enough, the Major is strong for Whiffles. There is but one obstacle in the way of this union, and that is the girl's affection. It has centered itself in Willie Saphead, a drawing-room darling, and refuses to be moulded to fit her father's fancy. With woman's charming simplicity, she arranges for Willie to enlist in the army, so's she can scoop up Willie and her father's consent at once. Willie fakes a note to his loved one, saying that he has joined the army. Whiffles' great mind works in the same channel and he also sends a note saying that his military genius is too valuable to be lost to his country. When Whiffles thinks enough time has elapsed for him to have returned from Morocco, he hires a uniform and visits his beloved Marie. They make a great fuss of him and, inspired by his description of a tremendous battle in which he was the chief battler, all go galloping about the room on imaginary mounts. Then comes Willie Saphead with his tale. Then comes a newspaper with the announcement that war has been declared and joy in the heart of Marie that her heroes will have an opportunity (yea, many opportunities) to distinguish themselves. Poor Whiffles. He finally arrives at the front and while on sentry duty has the rare fortune of bringing down a hostile aeroplane with one aviator in it. When he hears that his bravery will be the means of giving him an honored position right on the firing line, he suddenly remembers that he's been wounded in the foot, and limps about dreadfully. He is sent to a hospital, where he has a million ludicrous experiences with a pretty nurse, a Torco soldier and the over-enthusiastic Major Durand, who, hearing of his heroism and his hospital confinement, comes with his family to visit his prospective son-in-law. But Whiffles, fancy-free, has shifted his affection to his nurse, and the complications that arise as a result of this unexpected visit prove almost his undoing.

THE RIGHTED WRONG (Victory—Three Parts—August 7).—The Prince of Robaria finds great comfort in his declining years in Diantha, his adopted daughter. Captain Lindor, his nephew, incurs heavy debts and goes to the Prince for aid. The latter remonstrates and a quarrel ensues, but Diantha's intercession enables Lindor to get the required sum. The Prince, however, is angered at his nephew's impertinence and changes his will, making Diantha sole heir.

Travers, one of the coachmen on the estate, is secretly in love with Diantha and takes a photograph of her from her boudoir. He is detected by Norris, the head coachman, and the Prince orders his discharge.

While inspecting the stables, the Prince is fatally stricken with heart failure. The latter then finds the will and promises to remain silent if Lindor, who is the nearest blood relative of the deceased, will grant him a steady income. This is agreed upon, and Diantha, bereft of her rightful possessions, leaves the estate.

She is an excellent rider and seeks Travers, her admirer, who is now a famous jockey in Hamilton's circus. He secures employment for her, and when he learns that she has not been installed as mistress of her late foster father's estate, becomes suspicious. Peter, another circus man, tells him that he has learned of the stealing of the will from Valerie, fiancee of Lindor, who sought his aid to put a stop to the blackmail. Travers is overjoyed, and steals the will from Norris, who is leading a life of ease. But instead of giving it to Lindor, they use it as a means of placing Diantha where she belongs. She then weds Travers, who has loved her for so long.

THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (No. 33 Two Parts—Aug. 9).—The plans of Marcus Del Mar, a foreign agent, engaged in mining America's harbors and bridges, have been sorely interfered with by Elaine Dodge. Del Mar engages Mme. Lorens, an adventuress posing as a dressmaker, to help him. Under pretext of showing Elaine some gowns, Mme. Lorenz gets her to her rooms in the Hotel St. Germain. There Elaine is overcome by the waiting Del Mar, and spirited away in his automobile to a deserted house in the woods.

But a mysterious naturalist constantly on Del Mar's trail, tracks them and, after a stealthy reconnoitre, in which he uses his pocket periscope to good advantage, manages to free Elaine. She is chased by Del Mar and his men, however, and only succeeds in escaping by jumping into a canoe and braving a swift current. Del Mar fires at her from shore and breaks her paddle, thereby ruining her chances of escape. As she is swept down the stream toward the waterfalls and certain death, the mysterious naturalist and Jameson form a human chain and, swinging out over the stream rescue her as the canoe goes sweeping on to the rocks below. Once he sees she is safe, the mysterious naturalist utterly vanishes, leaving on the faces of Elaine and Jameson a look of wonder that will increase in the next episode. The next episode is called "The Flash."

SOAKING THE CLOTHES (Phunphilms—Aug. 14).—Three city sports, reeking of 6th ave. and 14th st., come to Hicksville, and immediately two of them have a desire to create the only atmosphere they're comfortable in. The third, Aleck, has the desire but not the youth, so he stays home and makes sure of the crowd's funds by sewing them in the lining of his suit.

Willie and George shine up to two charmers who are accustomed to stepping lively and all their available cash is used in a taxi ride to a swell cafe. Willie doesn't have much trouble in faking up a fit outside the cafe, and the boys depart, making a date for that evening.

They then go home and look for their cash, but Aleck's been there first. The only available asset is the sleeping Aleck's clothes, which they take out and hock. When Aleck awakes the boys tell him they have soaked his clothes, and he almost jumps out of his pajamas at the news.

Disguised as a woman, he takes the boys' clothes to pawn them in order to get enough money to take his own suit with the money sewed in the lining out of hock. But alas! The suit has already been sold.

THE TANGLES OF POKES AND JABBS (Wizard Comedy—July 5).—Pokes and Jabbs are neighbors; each has a wife. And there is a fifth character, Miss Tattler, who is the authoress of all the mischief of the comedy. She thinks she sees Pokes kissing Mrs. Jabbs and then she goes and spreads the scandal. Jabbs, madly jealous, tries to shoot Pokes, who escapes. Next day Pokes, who has lost some money in the Jabbs home tries to recover it but is again detected by the malicious Miss Tattler. After many exciting adventures and escapes, Pokes recovers his money, but has it taken from him by his wife, who will no longer trust him out of her sight.

LETTERS FROM BUGS TO GUS (Ring Lardner Series, No. 1 -"You Know Me, Al!"—July 12).—In the picture, leading lights of the baseball clubs and the big leagues are shown on the field—Roger Bresnahan, Garry Herrman, Honus Wagner, Thomas and others. Gus falls in love with a pretty girl on the ball field. But she prefers one of the ball players. Affairs are complicated by a "dood," who, to Bug's disgust, also makes up to the girl.

LETTERS FROM BUGS TO GUS (Ring Lardner's Letters, No. 2—July 19).—Bugs wants to meet the big league fellows at dinner. We see him hobnobbing with Garry Hermann, President Thomas of the Cubs and other baseball notables, while a banquet is in progress. Bugs drinks unwisely, and makes a ludicrous fool of himself. He presents himself on the baseball field in evening dress. His rival for the fair charmer sets his pup on Bugs.

MARRYING MONEY (Shubert, five parts—July 26). Theodore Vandeveer and James Sweeney are two young lawyers without clients. When they are at their lowest ebb, Theodore Vandeveer gets a notice that he is one of the heirs to his rich uncle's estate. He has a rich cousin, Archie, who is also named as an heir. Theodore and Sweeney pay their creditors and find that they still have $700 left. They determine, then, to go to Rockville, a fashionable summer resort. They arrive at Rockville and apply for rooms at the hotel. They find that a magnificent suite has already been engaged by Cousin Archie and his mother, who have not yet arrived. The hotel clerk, believing that Theodore is to be in Archie's party, gives Theodore and Sweeney part of the suite. This fact causes everybody in Rockville to believe that Theodore is rich and, therefore, the ambitious mothers of the pretty girls at Rockville consider him a great catch.

Among the girls at the hotel is Mildred Niles. She is the daughter of "The King of Wall Street." Mildred and Theodore are immediately drawn to each other, and Mrs. Niles looks with favor on Theodore. Meanwhile "The King of Wall Street" is engaged in some disastrous speculations in New York. Another suitor of Mildred's is a Count, whom Mildred's mother also likes because of his title.

Sweeney, when he sees how matters stand between Theodore and Mildred, urges Theodore to elope with her. Sweeney is in a particular hurry, as the cash is fast dwindling. Matters go from bad to worse in Wall Street with Mr. Niles, and finally he loses every cent. He comes to Rockville to break the news to his wife. She is prostrated. By this time, Mildred and Theodore have become engaged.

When Mrs. Niles hears of her husband's failure she insists on Mildred's eloping with Theodore before the news is made public. So it happens that Mildred and Theodore elope in Mr. Nile's car, each having a false impression of the other.

By this time Theodore has no money left. He confesses to Mildred and she confesses to him. They are in a quandary as to how they will be able to live when the rich uncle's lawyer arrives and tells Theodore that there was a secret codicil to the will saying that in the event of Theodore's marriage he should receive one million dollars. But this fact was to be a secret until after marriage, so that no woman would marry Theodore for his money.

SUNDAY (Lederer -August 2).—Sunday is a young girl left by a dying father in charge of four rough, but noble-hearted, lumbermen, known as Jack, Towzer, Davy and Lively, who bring her up as a boy. Jacky, the youngest of the quartette, is in love with Sunday, but she regards him only as a brother. The four men finally decide to send her to a convent school.

Arthur Brinthorpe, the black sheep of an old English family, travelling in America, meets Sunday, and persuades her to elope. She believes that he intends to take her to his home in England as his wife. Arthur is compelled to confess that he does not intend to marry her. Stunned by this perfidy, Sunday denounces him furiously, and when Arthur seizes her in his arms, she draws her revolver, which he takes from her. The struggle is witnessed by Jacky, who comes to Sunday's rescue, and in doing so kills Arthur. A half-witted girl, named Lizette, who is hopelessly in love with Jacky, sees it.

Jacky departs with the Sisters. New adventures, however, are in store for Sunday. Her aunt in England, Mrs. Naresby, has been searching for her, and she is finally discovered in the convent school and brought to England. She meets and falls in love with Henry Brin-thorpe, an elder brother of the "ne'er-do-well Arthur." Sunday tries to resist his love, feeling that the dead man stands between them. He demands to know why she will not marry him. She is unable to tell him. Unhappy and wretched, she leaves her aunt's house by night and takes steerage passage for America. She finally arrives at the lumber camp and surprises the "boys" by rushing into the cabin and telling them she has come home to stay. Henry and his friend, Tom Oxley, follow Sunday to America, and arrive at the cabin. Henry is determined to learn why Sunday has run away from him. Meantime, Lizette, believing that Sunday has returned to marry Jacky, accuses her of the murder of Arthur Brinthorpe, and when Jacky confesses that he committed the deed, Lizette attempts Sunday's life by throwing a knife through the door. Lively, suspecting Lizette's intentions, throws himself in front of Sunday and is wounded. Sunday tells the entire story to Henry, who realizes his brother's guilt and Sunday's innocence, and the story ends with the reconciliation of the lovers.

PARAMOUNT.

THE SEVEN SISTERS (Famous Players—Five Parts—July 26).—The play is based on the Hungarian system of marriage, where matrimonial conventions inexorably consign to helpless spinsterhood a girl whose younger sister marries before her. Under the circumstances, therefore, seven daughters may be considered a very well-disguised blessing, particularly when the middle one is such a hoyden that she places her sisters' romantic chances in further jeopardy by being expelled from the convent school. That is what the naughty Mici does in the play. She escapes from the school and attends a masked ball, where she meets Count Feri Horkoy. She is caught and dismissed and sent home. This starts all the trouble for the widowed mother of the seven sisters, who on seeing Mici return in a beautiful dress, realizes that she must be placed in the background. Thereupon the rebellious Mici enters into a conspiracy with Count Horkoy to provide husbands for her senior sisters at the earliest possible moment, promising him a kiss with each betrothal. From this moment on the complications grow thick and fast. The girls in each case are duly susceptible to the charms of vigorous and attractive masculinity, but they are apparently indifferent as to the means by which the desirable end is accomplished. As a result we find the oldest sister voluntarily engaging in a most unmaidenly deception to bring about a proposal. She gets the uncle, though she wanted the nephew. Then Mici weds the lieutenant.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 12—"To the Highest Bidder"—Two Parts—July 19).—Arthur's first thought was to employ the means he had at hand in the finding of the train robbers' stolen plunder, to aid Esther and his gypsy mother. Then he would save Stanley Hall from the hands of strangers. He resolved to entrust his affairs to Tom Blake, the Richmond detective. Arthur wired Blake ample funds and full instructions. In a few hours he received a satisfactory reply. But it was a bitter thought to the supposed heir of the Stanleys that even in going to the rescue of Esther and his mother he was using means not rightfully his. He resolved to make every effort to found his own fortune and refund with interest. Meanwhile, Esther, having assured herself that Hagar was provided for in the sanitarium, and that, no matter what move Mrs. Stanley might make, the gypsy woman's cure would go on, left Richmond in the company of Quabba. She felt sure that Arthur was prospering in far California.

Mrs. Stanley remained cool in the face of the girl's disappearance, though Blair raged and fumed. All Fairfax turned out at the auction of Stanley Hall. No one locally interested had the means to purchase the place and the Stanleys had not expected competitive bidding. When Tom Blake, who also had come down from Richmond, asked that the house and furnishings be offered as a whole, and tendered an opening bid of $2,000, Mrs. Stanley and Blair bid desperately. Their limit was soon reached. The old family estate went for $20,000 to Blake, who admitted that he was acting for an unknown client. The Stanleys, too chagrined to make themselves agreeable, did not return with Mrs. Randolph to Richmond.

Luke Lovell, who had become an illicit whiskey peddler, in passing an adobe hut in Lower California, saw the diamond from the sky dangling from the neck of an Indian baby. The necklace was only a bit of glass and tinsel to the sodden Indian father, and he gladly bartered it for whiskey to the eager gypsy. Luke and his companion pushed on toward Santa Barbara. Arthur Stanley, alias "John Powell," had fallen into the hands of oil sharks. All that remained of the outlaw plunder he had invested in the worthless Good Hope wells, and he is now penniless. "I'm from Pennsylvania," confided Jack Wilson, the foreman. "I believe if we torpedoed the big well we'd start the oil. The shysters are coming to take the property away from you because we didn't strike oil. So, let's do something desperate, boss; let's torpedo the big well!"

"John Powell" agreed. As a result of the explosion there arose a geyser of mud and a spuming fountain of roaring oil and gas. "John Powell" was a millionaire.

The evening that his associates feted and banqueted "John Powell," oil magnate, Vivian Marston dined with an elderly admirer at the same restaurant. The adventuress' eyes were fixed upon the young man. Where had she seen this lauded favorite of fortune before? The stranger held a telegram in his hand, which read: "Esther Stanley has left for parts unknown. Tom Blake." The next morning, Luke Lovell and his pal stood looking down over the paradise of Santa Barbara to the bay. Luke's eyes were fixed on a great, white yacht riding at anchor. "A guy rich enough to own a skiff like that," he growled, "can afford to buy the diamond from us." That evening the two men pulled out in a row boat. Suddenly, Luke's confederate struck him down. The boat went over. A drowning man gasped in agony. And the diamond from the sky was fast becoming the diamond beneath the sea.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Chapter 13, "The Man in the Mask"—July 26).—For a few moments Luke Lovell, crawling up from the sea, cared little whether he lived or died. But with returning breath and life came fear. It seemed plain to Luke now that no evil hand could hold the diamond. Let it lie then at the bottom of the sea.

Sunrise found him far back in the mountains Luke asked for and secured work as a blacksmith's helper.

Meanwhile, Vivian Marston was keeping watch of Arthur. "The Golden Man," the young oil king was called, was intoxicated with his own success. Vivian now knew that "John Powell" was the cousin of Blair. When the time was almost ripe, Vivian wrote to Blair, informing him of his kinsman's wealth, and suggesting that he join her in Los Angeles.

While Blair and his mother are plotting her mortal unhappiness, Esther, with Quabba, visits the gypsy tribe, and strengthened by many substantial gifts of aid, the quaint pair set out afresh on their quest of Arthur. Quabba in the possession of a large street piano and a pony and cart to haul it. But Esther insisted on returning once more to see Hagar at the sanitarium. They are seen from a passing train by Blair. He alights and hurries to make his peace with Mrs. Randolph. The next day Esther finds in her room $1,000 in bank notes and a message from Arthur. She gives half the money to the organ grinder and bids him depart at once.

Blair Stanley sees Quabba turn round the corner of the Randolph mansion, and follows. Suddenly Quabba steps into the path of a street car and is knocked senseless. Blair hurries to lift the injured man and take him to his lodgings. Blair sees in the accident a means of entrapping Esther. Handing a bootblack a hastily-scribbled line telling the girl to come at once, he dispatched him to the Randolph mansion. Later, as Esther enters Quabba's room, she is seized by a masked man. But Blair finds that he had caught a little tigress. His effort to search her for the Stanley document is fruitless. Help comes to Esther in the shape of Detective Tom Blake, whose secret aid the bootblack was. In the scuffle, Blair falls over a broken stair-rail and lies as though dead.

THE STUBBORNNESS OF GERALDINE (Five Parts).—Geraldine, the daughter of a wealthy New Yorker, is in Hungary and about to return to the United States after an absence of seven years. As a farewell, a masked ball is given in her honor at the American Embassy. Count Carlos Kinski, a distinguished young nobleman, is one of the guests and catches a momentary glimpse of her face. He falls in love with her at once and tries in vain to ascertain her identity. In second cabin he makes the acquaintance of Geraldine during the voyage.

Just when his wooing is most propitious, there comes a blow from the dark. His elder brother, while secretary to the Austro-Hungarian Embassy in London, trifled with the affections of an American girl, then cast her off and she ended her life by leaping from a high balcony. Fraulein Handt, a governess to the daughters of the Ambassador, who are guests in Geraldine's home, rake up this story and charges it to Carlos. In the end, Carlos obtains the proof from Hungary that he is not the man who caused the tragedy in London. He then secures the money for his vineyard and the stubbornness of Geraldine wins. The happy pair are last seen among the adoring peasants.

Sturtevant

Two Essentials for Success

Good Pictures and Fresh Air

Good headliners are essential to draw the crowds but steady patronage is impossible unless the air is fresh, clean, and sweet, and unless there is entire freedom from stuffiness and disagreeable odors.

At this season when attendance begins to drop off, a cool, well-ventilated theatre will retain the summer business.

Sturtevant REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. FANS

will supply fresh air or remove foul air. We have them of every size and type to meet varying conditions.

Send us the details of your house, dimensions, capacity, doors, windows, gallery, etc.

We have the largest and most efficient body of trained fan engineers in the world. They will make recommendations free of charge. Write at once.

Easy Money for Theatres

Extra Profits You Are Not Now Getting

$360.45 the First Month from Butter-Kist Corn Popper

You have the ideal crowd to buy—you should be getting the profits. Scores of motion picture theatres are now reaping a year-'round harvest of spot-cash sales from BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn in addition to regular paid admissions.

Profits $25 to $60 weekly. One theatre took in $360.45 the first month. Smallest theatres selling $4 to $5 worth of BUTTER-KIST in the evenings alone. Remember that every dollar you take in is seventy cents profit.

BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper

This famous money-maker requires only 26 in. x 32 in. of space. You have plenty of room for it in lobby, foyer or down near stage.

Runs itself and turns out 1 bag in 48 seconds—$3.75 per hour!

Pops and butters automatically—each morsel evenly. No watching, no work, no stock to carry, no muss. Just take in the money!

Superbly built of plate glass, with mahogany, oak or white enamel cabinet, metal parts of polished aluminum and nickel.

BUTTER-KIST Pop-Corn with Butter-Kist Prizes

"Everybody's" asking for famous BUTTER-KIST—the big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling and clean—evenly buttered and piping hot—untouched by hands. The finest, flavory, savory treat that ever tantalized a mortal's palate—with a coaxing fragrance that makes people hungry for BUTTER-KIST.

Every bag bears the valuable BUTTER-KIST trademark and Kiddies that thousands are saving and sending to us for handsome prizes. Brings people back to your theatre. Records show big increase in attendance.

Pay From Your Sales

A small payment down brings you the BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper with all privileges included. Then it pays for itself in short order. Let us show you.

"The Little Gold Mine" FREE

Handsome new book, "The Little Gold Mine," gives facts, figures, proof of profits and photographs. Sent FREE. Write for it at once—you lose $4 to $16 in sales every day you delay.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

You can not get the BEST results without them, so what's the use worrying along with ordinary lenses when there is absolute certainty that these lenses will make your picture as sharp and brilliant as it is possible to make it. You can not afford to have a poorer picture than your competitor and nearly every theatre in the country is using Gundlach Projection Lenses now, so if you are not you are behind the game and badly handicapped.

There is no string attached to Gundlach Projection Lenses. They are sold subject to approval and you decide with your own eyes whether they improve the picture or not. They can be obtained promptly for any operating condition.

UNITED STATES WAR DEPARTMENT SPECIFIES GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES

New York, May 15, 1915.

Gundlach-Manhattan Optical Co., Rochester, N. Y.

Gentlemen: Your letter of May twelfth, with reference to the advertising in connection with the Government's specifying Gundlach Lenses for the sixty-six machines, received.

There is no objection to advertising any of the facts in this matter, and in this connection we might state that both Gundlach Motion Picture and Gundlach Stero Lenses were specified, after exhaustive tests had been made.

The sixty-six machines were shipped to the Chaplains of the various army posts and were sent to China, the Philippine Islands, the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, and all over the United States.

Yours very truly,

THE PRECISION MACHINE CO., INC.

MAKE'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

Life Life

Smashing the Armies of the Czar!

The swift progress of the enemies of the Czar, as reported in the newspapers, is the astonishment of all mankind. Oceans of men under the Archduke Frederick of Austria-Hungary and German General von Mackensen, with the assistance of gigantic Howitzers, swept away all barriers—ruined towns and left dead strewn upon the fields "like trees against a hill!"—then crowded upon Przemysl, when the Russians fought desperately to hold back the tide of disaster—but only long enough to enact a frightful conflict did the oncoming legions hesitate. Grimly, yet with a system unparelleled, the advancing forces came—long traction conveyances, armored trains, transport coaches, auotmobiles, cavalry, artillery and infantry—a mobilization the like of which had not been seen before! And then the bursting of the storm! The clatter of machine guns and rifles, the boom of field guns and the crash of thundering Howitzers, the shouting and groans of the fighting and the dying filled the air with an unearthly din! Bursting shells and burning buildings made red the night and the "blood thirst" of the strife left behind a ghastly scene of desolation—What a tragedy!

EDWIN THANHOUSER WILL NOW HAVE THE PLEASURE OF PRESENTING

TWO FALSTAFF COMEDIES WEEKLY

THE natural law of supply and demand is relentless—IRRESISTIBLE! FALSTAFF COMEDY supplied the demand for legitimate comedy. It blazed its own trail; it made good! CONSISTENCY did it!

Now the market wants MORE FALSTAFFS! Isn't that a perfectly splendid tribute—isn't it as genuine a testimonial of heart-felt satisfaction as ANY man could ask for his work?

By George—IT IS!

Edwin Thanhouser

EDWIN THANHOUSER Presents

Released
AN exquisite photoplay of surpassing loveliness, "JEWEL" is a rare combination of a beautiful story, told by a genius and produced with a cast of unusual brilliance.
No ordinary film review can possibly convey the wonderful power of this idyllic play. The most hardened film critic unblushingly let's go to the extent that his frequent smiles are seen through tears.
Did you ever cry from sheer happiness? That is the sure and never-failing effect of dainty Ella Hall's charming portrayal of the name part "Jewel," who proves that Love is the greatest power in the world.
If you are showing the Universal Program, be sure to advertise "Jewel" widely; give every fan an opportunity to see one of the most remarkable pictures ever made. It is the type of play that will do more to popularize your house THAN ANY FEATURE YOU EVER PLAYED. A DYNAMITE explosion wrecked Mrs. Plum's home, but brought her a PUDDING in the form of a $2,000,000 oil well.

The announcement of Great Broadway Stars and Great Broadway Plays on the Regular Universal Program at a slight advance in cost, was an explosion that wrecked the hopes of many a "feature fancier" and provided a weekly PUDDING for the vast army of Universal Exhibitors.

Every move of the Universal typifies Successful Progress, and always in the interests of Exhibitors. No lesser organization could have carried to so successful consummation a plan so tremendous in its scope, so utterly out of the ordinary; so profitable to the average exhibitor.

Marie Tempest, the Internationally famous comedienne, is typical of the class of players that appear in Broadway Universal Features. Miss Tempest is now in New York City rehearsing for the star part in a coming Frohman production.

A limited number of advance press proofs of the great Lincoln Cycle Portfolio are now ready. Important exhibitors will want a set before the supply is exhausted.

These proofs tell how the exhibitor is finally coming into his own. They tell how, from now on, the promotion of pictures must be centered around the exhibitor—done in his name, directed to and reach his own clientele—boosting him first and the picture second.

You will get an entirely new point of view on the picture business—and also learn of the most unique selling campaign ever devised. Fill out the coupon below and send it in—no obligation, of course.

(CHARTER FEATURES)

The Lincoln Cycle

The Lincoln Cycle is not primarily an educational picture, nor an historical picture, nor a sermon or a lesson; it is first, last and all times, an entertainment, pure and simple, overflowing with excitement, with mystery, pathos and humor.

In its humorous moments it has any slapstick comedy beaten a million miles; in its pathetic moments, there is no comparison with anything yet done. In its moments of excitement, of intrigue and thrill, there is something new coming to your audience.

To see Abraham Lincoln as he was, living, breathing, from the days of his ancestors to his assassination, is to give the most jaded audiences a thrill greater than any they have yet known.

That Benjamin Chapin is the Lincoln of this Cycle, is something which you, as a theatrical man, must grow wild about, for Chapin, to all Americans, means Lincoln.

Chapin has been sought for ten years by big moving picture producers, but he has steadfastly refused them because his inspirations and his ideals were being developed and realized in his great Cycle, this epic of America, this great symphony of patriotism.

The Lincoln Cycle consists of a series of five to nine reel features—each episode independent and distinct, the first of which is "Old Abe," releasing September 13th.

Orders are now being received. You can place yours now if you want. Exclusive territorial privileges will be accorded now.

CUT OUT HERE

4 Act Feature of Unusual Power

"Shadows From the Past"

Scenario and Direction by Richard Ridgley

We need do no shouting about "Shadows from the Past"—we shall leave that to Exhibitors. With its truly remarkable strength of heart appeal, its perfect cast, the high artistry of its presentation and the power that comes only from perfect characterization carrying a worthy message, "Shadows from the Past" will give giant impetus to Edison prestige in Features.

This drama joins that high standard set by "The Stoning." "Shadows from the Past" is powerful because it quickens and binds the sympathies by the vivid truthfulness with which it depicts the painfully bitter life of a scarred soul constantly terrorized by an avenging nemesis who gloatingly seeks her secret. Mabel Trunnelle, as the erring sweetheart, the mother in secret, the hunted faithful wife, displays new and even greater powers, while Marc MacDermott, as the cast-off lover seeking revenge, sets a high character criterion in villainous finesse. With Bigelow Cooper, Nellie Grant, Helen Strickland, George Wright, Jessie Stevens, and Leonie Flugrath. Friday, August 20th.

Raoul Barré's Clever Cartoons

"Cartoons on Tour." One of the Animated Grouch Chasers. 1000 feet. Wednesday, August 18th.

"Safety First." 1000-foot educational drama, illustrating street railroad accidents and precautions. Direction Harry Beaumont. Saturday, August 21.

Two per Week

Before the end of September, World Film branches throughout the United States and Canada will be able to supply you with two features each week. One of them, of course, will be the regular World Film feature; the other will be the weekly release of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation. Your experience with them has taught you the quality of World pictures. Printed announcements have told you what to expect of Equitable productions. Booked separately or in combination the World's two-per-week is the most attractive offer that has ever been made the exhibitor. You simply cannot afford to overlook it. Mention the two-per-week to the World Film man in your town and absorb some of the honest-to-goodness, based-on-superior-quality enthusiasm which actuates him. He'll talk for your interest as well as his own.

During September look for these:

Facts and Comments

THE exhibitors of Canton, Ohio, are setting a fine example in the way of effective agitation against legalized censorship. They have taken pages in the local press urging their patrons and the public generally to sign the petition for a referendum on the censorship law. The advertisement, which is a model of its kind both as to form and substance, declares that the petition for a referendum is "the protest of thousands of motion picture devotees who are up in arms against the reflection on their intelligence shown by the motion picture censor board in attempting to decide which photoplays or part of photoplays they shall or shall not be permitted to see." The advertisement asks this simple but pertinent question: "Are you satisfied to abide by the judgment of three people as to which pictures you shall be permitted to see?" It is entirely probable that the required number of signatures will be obtained, but the movement needs the co-operation of every exhibitor in the state. Ohio owes it to herself to destroy the abomination of legalized censorship, for the evil example of Ohio has been followed by other states.

* * *

IN another part of this week's issue of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD we print an account of the important work which the kinematograph is doing in recording the events within the lines of at least one of the belligerent nations. To write a true and fair history of the most gigantic conflict in the annals of mankind will be an almost impossible task. The camera will be the only absolutely reliable evidence. The value of this impartial recorder to the historian of the future is beyond calculation.

* * *

THE Visual Education Association will hold a convention on the 20th of August in San Francisco to try to work out some definite plan for furthering the use of motion pictures in the schools. The National Education Society has appointed a committee of distinguished educators to co-operate with the Visual Education Association. We regret to note that no moving picture man is on this committee. There are film men who have given largely of their money and their time and their ability in the cause of the educational picture; they are the pioneers whose advice might be taken with profit. Such names as Urban, Kleine, Pathe, Gaumont will immediately suggest themselves. One of these pioneers, Mr. G. W. Kleine, has a vast fund of information on the subject. With the aid of such a man the work of the committee would be most likely to produce practical results.

* * *

A TYPICAL instance of what can be accomplished by exhibitors when they act in harmony was the modification of the order which prohibited the carrying of films on all public conveyances. A committee of the organized exhibitors of the city called upon the Fire Commissioner and secured a substantial modification of the order, which now applies only to the subway. The exhibitors of New York City have always been singularly fortunate in the energy and unselfishness of their leaders.

* * *

TEXAS is in the throes of Sunday closing agitation, with the exhibitors just about holding their own. In Dallas, according to a valued reader of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, "there has been a vigorous fight of the church people to close the picture shows on Sundays; several cases were tried and they lost each one." In Austin one of the judges held strongly with the exhibitors, declaring that when no admission was charged the motion picture show was permitted to open on Sundays, even though the proprietors of the motion picture theater accepted voluntary contributions. The judge points out that churches are supported by voluntary contributions and no one thinks of calling a request for a contribution a demand. Shows without an admission do not come within that prohibition of the statute according to the same judge.

DOES so-called national advertising pay from the exhibitor's point of view? Here is an interesting question, on which the exhibitors alone can give the best information. We have heard conflicting opinions. A symposium to which the big exhibitors of the country should be asked to contribute would make good and instructive reading.

In view of the large amounts of money that have been spent for such advertising, which is after all more or less experimental, the views of exhibitors will surely be welcomed by all the big producers.

Samuel Long

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN the unexpected and untimely death of Samuel Long, the late president of the Kalem Company, the entire film world deplores the loss of a man whose type was as rare as it was fine. Eminently successful in his chosen profession as an electrical engineer, Mr. Long became identified with the mechanical side of motion picture production in the earliest days of the industry and by sheer force of personal worth and professional ability rose to the front rank.

Mr. Long is remembered among his colleagues and by his many friends in all walks of life as a man of clean thought, inborn courtesy and a scrupulous adherence to truth under all and any circumstances. Another conspicuous trait in his character must be added: his modesty. Men who have been his intimate friends for a decade or more say that they have never heard him use the pronoun "I" except in casual conversation on ordinary topics, as all men use it. In the work of his life he led and he faithfully co-operated, but he never put himself forward.

Mr. Long came of good old Quaker stock and was reared in an atmosphere notable for its purity and honesty. His unfailing courtesy he probably inherited from a long line of Southern ancestry. Even persons who met him but once or twice were struck by his kindly and courteous manners. The manners were but the symbol and reflection of the deeper and abundant courtesy of the heart.

The home life of the man was singularly happy. His was an absolutely clean life, clean in mind and clean in body. His habits were exemplary; his conduct was an inspiration to all who knew him.

What was his attitude toward the motion picture? No man who had made motion pictures his life work ever took a more serious view of his responsibilities. Though primarily connected with the mechanical department in the production of motion pictures, Mr. Long took a very deep and constant interest in the moral aspects of the film. He was averse to the morbid, to the purely sensational and he abhorred even an approach to vulgarity. He was fond of good drama, but he thought that drama the best which conveyed a great moral lesson.

Mr. Long was a great friend of the exhibitor and gladly extended all the hospitalities of office and studio to out-of-town exhibitors who were interested in the Kalem pictures.

One of his best and oldest friends in speaking of the distinguishing characteristics of the deceased dwelt on his lofty conceptions of life and on his view of his duties. Mr. Long was not affected by money, and the making of money was to him not the first consideration. His charity was well-known, though he believed in doing good unostentatiously. Many an employee of the company who was injured can testify to the genuine and substantial charity of Mr. Long. He cared little whether there was any legal liability, but listened to the dictates of his heart and obeyed the instincts of his own sense of justice.

His sympathy was ever ready for sick employees. He always made sure that they had the proper medical attendance. He paid their salaries while sick, sending the envelopes to their homes, often far away.

The Moving Picture World extends its sincerest condolences to the surviving relatives and to the officers and employees of the Kalem Company.

Circulation Plus Confidence

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE intimate relation between The Moving Picture World and its readers has often been the subject of comment. The exhibitors not only read but they believe. In a generation which has witnessed the gradual decay of independent journalism this fact deserves a good deal of attention.

Time was when no amount of money or influence could have bought the editorial opinion of any of the great dailies in New York or elsewhere. The press agent was viewed with unrelenting suspicion. Favorable reviews were not for sale. Even in politics the news columns as a rule were kept free from extreme bias. Things have changed fearfully since the days of Greeley, Jones and Dana. Today if you have the money you can get whatever you want into most of the New York dailies.

Many a feature film has been shamelessly overpraised just because the promoters of the production were reckless with their advertising appropriation. Most of the so-called moving picture sections of the daily press are conducted frankly with a view to getting advertising regardless of consequences. If Jones advertises, his production is immediately heralded as a masterpiece, while the production of Smith, no matter how good it is, cannot get a line simply because Smith does not advertise. There is not even the pretense of serving either the exhibitor or the public—the motto is "Get the 'ad'; the end justifies the means." Two prominent dailies started moving picture sections in the childlike expectation that the producers would immediately fall over each other in sending in their advertising. The expectations were not realized, and the beautiful sections were pretty promptly discontinued.

The Moving Picture World holds to the old idea of service, which was the gospel of its founder. Hence it has the circulation plus the confidence. We maintain our independence because in that way alone can we render equal service to all the correlated branches of our vast and growing industry. There are men who have the soul of a dog, but lack its tail. Their desire to show gratitude for any little favor must express itself. They cannot wag their tails, but they can sling out superlatives in praise of anything and everything that is advertised in their cheapened papers.

The theatrical reviews in the daily papers are with but few exceptions based on and guided by the amount of advertising which is ordered in the counting room. It is a short-sighted policy even from the publisher's point of view. Whenever and wherever the editorial department has no other function than comparing notes with the counting room the usefulness of the paper to the reader begins to decline.

In what esteem will the public hold such a paper? Some few days ago a cute little dog had been lost. His owner alarmed the police and finally found the dear pet in the possession of a stranger. The latter was promptly haled into court. The Solomon on the bench had the little dog brought before him. "The dear little animal," quoth he, "will know its master. Turn it loose and he will go to its owner at once." Accordingly the little dog was allowed to make its choice. To the confusion of the Solomon and everybody else the dear creature jumped up on everybody in the court room, blithely wagging his tail and licking everybody's hand.

The readers of The Moving Picture World know that we are here to serve them. It's an old-fashioned idea, but it's the only policy that will win in the end.

A Tragedy to Those Who Feel*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

"A FLABBY invertebrate" is the term applied by Richard Burton to a play without an opinion. "The rational pleasure in it," he continues, "is in ratio to the idea it contains, the criticism of life it offers, and the skill with which it is made manifest." Not to improve on Mr. Burton, but to interpret him, rational pleasure in a play is in ratio to the recognizable truth it contains, and this is especially the case with tragedy. The deeper sympathies and finer sensibilities of woman seem to interfere with recognition of truth through the deliberative processes men employ, but there is a way to her mind through her heart. On the battlefield, whether it be military or social, man becomes indifferent to death that does not affect his immediate interests. Woman revolts against sacrificial death at all times because it is opposed to her creative instincts. She becomes profoundly affected by powerful tragedy, her mind ripe for an impression of the truth it contains, and to her it may be advantageously addressed for the sake of that truth.

Not to exclude man is this idea advanced. Dramatists like Bernard Shaw address man's analytic intellect, but they labor in vain if they attempt to disassociate feeling from man's activities in the discharge of what he deems to be his duty. That he fought for a principle in making the fair country in which we live was because of his sense of wrong and oppression. Man was impelled by his sensibilities to supplant intolerable despotism with a greater scope of individual freedom. That he devised with reason and fought his slow way to human liberty does not mean that sentiment played an insignificant part in his achievement, but to the contrary—FEELING made the nation.

We are supposedly no longer in that animal world where one part subsists by devouring the other part, where sentiment is accorded scant consideration, but are striving through an appeal to feeling to reach a sunshine of liberty and opportunity that each one of us may enjoy the privilege of utilizing native energy in harmony with inclination. Some of us are confronted by military prohibitions and restraints, some by the remorseless laws of custom handed down from primitive society, and our tragedies are plentiful. Those tragedies may seem at times too pitifully small to be of common interest, but, when they are of common interest, it is the mission of the playwright to make them great enough to reach popular approval through the affections. So many drops of water in the human stream, some of us float along in a tranquil middle course, others sweep in a torrent over rocks of adversity, others sink into stagnant pools of decadence, the course of each being very largely one of directive influence.
